The Spanish war developed the fact that the mosquito was the carrier of yellow fever, writes E. W. Nelson in the National Geographic Magazine. Another type of mosquito is known to be the carrier of malaria. The European war has brought to almost universal public knowledge the fact that body lice are carriers of the deadly typhus and many diseases are known to be carried by other insects.

Among these deadly carriers of death and destruction none equals the house rat in its tremendous drain on the prosperity of nations by its destruction of food and other property, while at the same time it is the deadliest of all to mankind as a disease carrier. Within historic times it has caused the death of untold millions of human beings through its dissemination of the bubonic plague.

Get Menthol From Japan.

Before the war about half the menthol crystals exported from Japan were sent to Germany. Since the outbreak of the war the United States has become the largest purchaser of these crystals, followed in order by Great Britain, France and British India. The price has varied from $2 to $2.50 a pound during the last five years, remaining most of the time near the higher mark. Recent improvements in the process of manufacture have kept the price within reasonable limits in spite of a considerable increase in the demand since the beginning of the war.

LYDIA BEGINS TO SUSPECT HER FATHER OF DECEIVING HER IN SOME MANNER AND SHE IS DEEPLY GRIEVED—SOME MYSTERIOUS THING SCARES HIM

Synopsis—Lydia Craven, traveling as Lucy Carteret, runs away from her English home to go to her father, Thaddeus Craven, in New York, whom she hasn't seen for five years. Three days out on board the steamer Alsatia, she runs plump into Craven, making love to Mrs. Merrilees, a young widow, engaged to marry him. Later Craven explains his mysterious conduct and supposed bachelorhood by telling Lydia he is a British secret service agent in America. She is attacked at night and a small box containing supposed valuable documents, which he has given her to keep for him, is stolen. Quoin, an amateur detective, recovers it for her, and when the party lands at New York, Lydia, carrying the box openly, has no trouble passing the customs inspection. When Mrs. Merrilees declares a $60,000 necklace and the inspector finds it an imitation worth $300, she is held and searched as a smuggler. Despite past tricks, however, Mrs. Merrilees is honest this time.

After a brief conference he turned back to Lydia and Peter. "A bad business!" he doubted in an undertone, wagging his head. "Betty's played the game straight as a die this trip; but nothing on earth will make these people believe that, after the way she's carried on in the past. Looks like an all-day session—no good your sticking round: nothing either of you can do. Quoin and I will stand by Betty; but you'd better cut along. You won't mind dropping Lydia at the Great Eastern hotel, Peter?"

"No—I won't precisely what you might call mind," Peter declared, brightening.

"I engaged rooms by wireless yesterday. It'll take a day or two, you know, to readjust my diggings to receive a daughter. Now clear out—like good children!"

Lydia bade hurried farewells. Giving Quoin her hand, she hoped he wouldn't forget to call, as he'd promised. Quoin was persuaded that such oversight would be symptomatic of insanity. His tone was light; but his direct and penetrating gaze embarrassed the girl, and she was fluttered by consciousness that her cheeks were unaccountably aglow, her fingers tremulous in his firm grasp.

Betty Merrilees offered a cool cheek to Lydia's lips. "Don't worry about me!" she protested pettishly. "Besides, in your heart of hearts you believe I'm guilty—you know you do!"

"I don't!" Lydia insisted, and in the next breath, "You didn't—honestly?"

Betty's mood melted transiently. "Honest Injun!" she declared with mirth in her voice, but downright candor in the eyes that held Lydia's. "And I don't blame anyone for climbing up on the fence, either," she added in cryptic phrase, "all except these despicable customs men!"

Peter's town car was waiting at the pier entrance, and when he had helped her into it, Lydia, looking out through the limousine door, viewed a section of the throng of passengers waiting for taxicabs, in the forefront of which stood two men.

One faced her and first attracted attention by his singularly persistent stare—a stoutish body, by no means tall, snug in a braided morning coat—the London mode, glossy topper, white spats and all, down to the silver-mounted stick of malacca—wearing a humorous eye in his square-jawed, scarlet face—one who would readily pass current as an elderly and retired gentleman of means, with a penchant for good cooking and outdoor life.

His companion, some inches taller and built upon more rakish lines, stood half turned aside so that she could see little more than the salient line of a dark, lean cheek, and a long and narrow back-head. But that was quite enough to make her sit up with a start, remembering that she had seen him once before in precisely that pose, outside the window of her stateroom. He turned for a moment toward her bringing to her view his right eye—covered by a black patch!

Happily Peter chose that moment to climb into the car, and so blocked out the disturbing vision. On the other hand, he was quick to note the evidence of her distress.

"Hello!" he cried in deep concern. "What's up? Surely you're not feeling ill!"

She shook her head vigorously, and in heedless agitation raised a gloved hand and pointed. "Peter, who is that man—the tall one, there, with the black patch over his eye?"

"Which? Oh, I see!" Here the car drew away, so that Black Patch was no longer visible. "I'm not dead sure," Peter resumed, "but he looks a heap like a chap Quoin pointed out in the smoking room one night—one of a brace of deep-sea sharks we had aboard. Chap with a queer name—Lefty—no, I've got it—Southpaw Smith. Why do you ask? You certainly can't know the fellow!"

Lydia sank back into her corner, with a head awhirl. "No," she said, "no, I don't know him. I—he—somehow reminded me of something very unpleasant."

CHAPTER XI.

From the manner of the room clerk Lydia inferred that the name of Thaddeus Craven was well esteemed by the management of the Great Eastern. Nor was this impression at all modified by the rooms to which she was shown—a suite so complete and luxurious in appointments that its appeal was strong to the sybaritic strain with which heredity had endowed the girl.

Toward six o'clock she dropped, worn out, into an armchair beside an open window in the living room. Wearily the girl's eyelids drooped. Insensibly she drowsed, drifting into a sort of halfwaking nightmare, wherein she with her father waged incessant war against powers of darkness, shapeless, featureless, inscrutably malign—

The last rays of the sinking sun flooded her face, even as it impregnated her dream, with the hue of blood. Twilight, succeeding, caught together the gaping arras of the sky. Minutes wove a web of hours—

Abruptly Lydia found herself on her feet, a low cry shuddering in her throat, aware that the room was ablaze with light, that she was no longer alone. Then, calming, she realized nothing more terrible than Craven's return.

He stood near the center of the room, staring, evidently at a loss to account for her agitation, his face slightly flushed yet lowering.

"Well?" he demanded sharply. "What the deuce is the matter with you?"

"You—you startled me," she faltered with a tremulous smile. "I must have fallen asleep, waiting for you—and then I had a horrible dream—"

Craven's look swept her from head to foot, captious and ugly. "You haven't dressed," he said—meaning that she hadn't changed for dinner. "Been asleep long?"

"Why—some hours, I presume. What time is it? It was just sunset, the last I knew."

"After nine o'clock now. Then you've had no dinner?"

Lydia shook her head. "I was waiting for you."

"You shouldn't have," he grumbled. "Thought I told you not to count on me. I've been busy of course, flying round all afternoon, getting Betty settled. Otherwise should have been home long ago."

"I have been worried about Betty—Mrs. Merrilees—"

"Oh, that business!" He smiled grimly. "It was over sooner than I expected. Unpleasant for her—to submit to being searched by a female inspector. But of course they found nothing, and had to let her go. And now she's threatening all manner of trouble."

"Then the necklace was really stolen? I'm so sorry!"

"Yes." Craven eyed her curiously for an instant. "Yes, it was stolen, right enough, and a clean-cut job, if you ask me. The thief must have been laying for somebody to buy the thing. He had the counterfeit all ready, of course."

"But that's what I don't understand."

"Simplest thing in the world. Chance is he found the copy ready made to his hand. Nine out of ten of these smart Frenchwomen, like the original owner of the collar, have their best pieces duplicated in paste for public wear. Somehow or other he must have got hold of that. The only question is, when did he make the substitution? Betty swears it was the genuine article she received, and it hasn't been out of her possession since, except while in the purser's safe, and when I brought it to her, up there in the veranda cafe, day before yesterday. Looks as if it was up to the purser—unless you care to point the well-known finger of suspicion at me—or Peter!"

"How absurd!"

"Think so? Well, I'm glad you do, my dear." His humor had softened. Drawing near, he pinched her cheek affectionately. "Not that there's any reason for you to worry. Only, if Betty still wants to play Lady Bountiful at your wedding, she'll have to disburse the price of another necklace."

"Daddy! As if I thought of that!"

"Probably you don't, being yourself. Still—you'll marry some day, and pearl collars don't grow on every bough of orange blossoms."

"I'm not thinking of being married," Lydia murmured, looking away.

"Oh, I presume not—no more than the next girl of your age! Nothing doing with Peter Traft, eh?"

"Oh, daddy! Don't be silly!"

Lydia met his gaze fairly and honestly, laughter in her eyes, and Craven accepted her disclaimer without question.

"Well, I'm sorry for Peter. He's a good boy—well off too. And he's mighty strong for you. Mustn't let yourself be misled by Peter's reputation. Just because he's got the name of a gay young butterfly is no real reason why he shouldn't be in dead earnest this time."

"I wish you wouldn't say such things."

"Well—don't forget him, when you do come to think of marrying. And," Craven dismissed the subject airily, "of course you would be happier as mistress of your own establishment than—well—playing second fiddle in mine."

Had he slapped her the girl could hardly have suffered deeper pain and humiliation. He wanted to be rid of her! That truth was out at last. However kindly Craven's primal impulse to deceive, the time had come when he could or would no longer dissemble.

Her thoughts worked swiftly. Since he found her a drag, she must cease to be such at once—instantly—tonight. Until she could find some way to become self-supporting the hospitable doors of Mrs. Beggarstaff's home offered a haven where Lydia felt sure of finding a welcome, sympathy, affection.

With a brisk tread and a cheerful countenance Craven returned to the sitting room. "Hello! What's troubling my girl? Something on your mind, eh?"

She eyed him gravely. "Do you really want me to marry Peter Traft?" she demanded.

"Why consult my desires? You'll do as you please anyway—just as I did at your age. It's a good match, and if you find you care enough for the youngster," he raised his hands in mock benediction, "bless you, my children! But—upon my word!—never can tell about you women. Only two minutes ago—"

"That was when I still believed you wanted me with you, when I thought I might be a help to you, not an obstacle in the path of your happiness. Better to marry at once—the first bidder—and repent too late, if that must be—than to know I'm in your way."

"Liddy, my dear little girl!" The tone was fond, the smile indulgent; but with sharpened vision she saw through the pretense.

"No!" she cried passionately. "No! Don't—don't waste time trying to deceive me, daddy!"

Turning she stumbled blindly into her bedroom, shut the door, and threw herself across the bed, sobbing.

After some time the door latch clicked. "Liddy!"

The girl made no answer. She couldn't; she was struggling to hush her sobs.

"Liddy!" Craven came to her side, and seated himself on the bed. "Little girl," he said, with melancholy, "you've hurt me terribly, misjudged me so cruelly. But no matter. I realize that you don't understand."

He touched her hair caressingly. She suffered this without response. Tonight her wits were keyed to a pitch of divination. Beneath the cloying tenderness in his accents she read the truth too clearly.

"I've just telephoned for dinner. It'll be up presently, and I want you to try to eat something. Get up, please, and dry your eyes, compose yourself, and be fair to me."

"Very well," Lydia said stiffly, without stirring.

With a final approving pat Craven rose. "Thank you, my dear," he said gently. He sighed, moved toward the door, but there paused. "By the way," he observed carelessly, "that thing I gave you the other night—the puzzle box—it is safe, I presume?"

"Yes," said Lydia, sitting up. "Do you want it?"

"If convenient."

Without another answer she rose and went to the bureau, found her handbag, produced the puzzle box, and silently, with averted face, gave it to her father.

His footsteps were audible crossing the sitting room. Then she heard him closing his bedchamber door.

With some effort Lydia pulled herself together, rose, bathed her face and eyes with cold water, then sought her mirror to survey and repair as best she could the ravages of tears.

Do you suspect Craven of being up to some trickery? Why should he become grouchy to his daughter? There is a big development of the story in the next installment.

Playing Safe.

Eusebius was told by his mamma not to stay to meals at his aunt's without asking her. He was invited to dinner and his aunt said she would ask his mamma by phone. He said: "Don't ask her, tell her."

IN FOOTSTEPS OF FAMOUS FATHER

George B. McClellan, former mayor of New York city, who left a professorship at Princeton to study ordnance at Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, where he has been for the last three months, has been appointed a major in the ordnance department of the army, assigned to service at the port of embarkation at New York. With him are Captain Colton of the regular army, acting as his assistant, and, it is understood, a number of Princeton students and graduates, who are taking courses similar to that which their teacher pursued, will be named to aid him.

McClellan shortly after college closed in June quietly disappeared from the campus and it was thought by his associates he was spending his vacation as usual at an exclusive resort near Gloucester. Unknown except to a few of his intimates, he donned machinist's overalls and worked steadily at Frankford arsenal. Reports coming here show he was most proficient and mastered the technical side of the manufacture of guns quickly. In the opinion of the ordnance department chiefs he is especially qualified to supervise the embarkation of ammunition for use abroad.

McClellan, it is said, was most anxious to get into this war. He comes from a fighting family and, while too old to do strenuous military duty, he insisted he should be allowed to do something for his country. President Wilson and the war officials were very sympathetic with his ambition and, to their surprise, he worked harder than most of the young men at the student camps.

Maj. George B. McClellan will go down in history along with his father, Gen. George B. McClellan of the Civil war. He is enlisted in the ordnance department as a reserve, and as such he will serve until the end of this war and obtain a leave from Princeton university to do so.

HIS MILITARY FAME SECURE

Gen. Luigi Cadorna, chief of staff of the Italian army, which, under his leadership, is making its triumphant way toward Trieste, passed through the first three years of the war almost unnoticed. But the campaign he was quietly planning during that period now is reaching fruition, and in consequence he stands out today as one of the great figures of the war.

The following excerpts from a personality sketch published in the Boston Evening Transcript reveal to some extent the secret of his growing fame and popularity. Says the writer, Amy A. Bernardy:

"Not easily elated by success, fully and calmly confident in his strength and in that of his men, devoted to Italy with the deep devotion that needs no words to be expressed; built, mind and body, on generous lines; radiating power and energy from his whole countenance; and above all simple, unassuming, optimistic, with a slight touch of humor, and a great reserve fund of goodness and strength, he deserves fully the love of his soldiers, the gratitude of Italy and the admiration of the world.

BOOMED SALE OF LIBERTY BONDS

© HARRIS & EWING

Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo, wife of the secretary of the treasury, and youngest daughter of President Wilson, boomed the Liberty Bond sale to such good advantage that it is said her personal efforts added $10,000,000 to the total. She confined her work principally to women, addressing clubs and forums and urging her sisters to show their patriotism by letting go of a little of the coin of the realm that was being saved up for a rainy day.

Her stepson, young William G. McAdoo, Jr., enlisted as a seaman. He is cruising around looking for such submarines as may come this way. He wears the same clothes, sleeps in the same sort of a hammock, and messes along at the same table and answers the same bugle call that brings the enlisted youth from the slums to the deck.

Miss Margaret Wilson, the eldest daughter of the president, has a beautiful voice, which she is using in concerts for the benefit of the Red Cross. She recently toured the country making one-night stands and conducting concerts for the benefit of different charities and the Red Cross.

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh at an alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

To See the Boys Off.

A large crowd gathered Sunday morning to see Co. E leave Hicksville. The train pulled out about 6:15 a. m. The boys seemed cheerful and happy, but some of them could not suppress the tear and the sad look when from the car window they clasped the hand of loved ones and said good bye. The boys will camp for a time at least at Montgomery, Alabama. After the train left people wended their way to their vehicles with bowed heads and falling tears. Parents have given up their sons, brother and sister have parted from brother sweethearts have given up their lover, wives their husbands and little children their father; who is there among us that has not made a sacrifice for our country. Iven and Omo Richmond, Mrs. E. E. Traxler and son Terry, Samuel Wyatt and family, Adrian Wasbler and wife, Loren Gaff and family, Mrs. Myrtle Ayers, W. D. McNabb, Barry Ayers and wife, Rev. Hively, wife and son Orville, and John Miller and wife, of this place, went to Hicksville to see the boys leave. Of the above mentioned Mrs. Myrtle Ayers had 3 sons, H. Ayers and wife, 1 son; Rev. Hively and wife, 1 son; and John Miller and wife, 2 sons, leave with Company E.

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

NOTICE TO SICK WOMEN

Positive Proof That Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves Suffering.

Bridgeton, N.J.—"I cannot speak too highly of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for inflammation and other weaknesses. I was very irregular and would have terrible pains so that I could hardly take a step. Sometimes I would be so miserable that I could not sweep a room. I doctored part of the time but felt no change. I later took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt a change for the better. I took it until I was in good healthy condition. I recommend the Pinkham remedies to all women as I have used them with such good results."—Mrs. MILFORD T. CUMMINGS, 322 Harmony St., Penn's Grove, N. J.

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence of the excellence of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the distressing ills of women such as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, backache, painful periods, nervousness and kindred ailments.

"I was helpless with kidney trouble," says Mrs. Ellen Janis, 1404 N. Third St., St. Charles, Mo., "and began to think my case was beyond the reach of medicine. The pain in my back laid me up in bed and it seemed as if my back had been crushed. I couldn't sleep and was so nervous I was almost frantic.

Mrs. Janis.

"Flashes of fire came before my eyes and the pains in my head were terrible. My sight was affected and there were large, puffy spots beneath my eyes.

"How I suffered when passing the kidney secretions! I screamed in agony and I often wished I might die and be out of misery. I had night sweats and mornings on getting up I was so weak and numb I could hardly stand up. I grew so pale and emaciated I looked like death. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me completely and I have been as well and healthy since as any woman of my age."

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 7

PSALMS OF DELIVERANCE.

LESSON TEXT—Psalms 85 and 126.
GOLDEN TEXT—They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.—Psalms 126:5.

These Psalms breathe the spirit of the true patriot. The Psalmist sees his afflicted country suffering for the sins of the people, prays for their restoration to the Divine favor, and with the eagle eye of faith anticipates the joyful day of spiritual and temporal blessings because of restoration to the Divine favor. Doubtless such patriotism would be pleasing to the Lord on the part of us all.

Psalm 85.

I. Praises for Mercies Received (vv. 1-3).

Praise is given for

(1) Deliverance from Captivity (v. 1).

He had in mind the specific mercies of a given time; perhaps it was one of the oppressions of the Philistines from which they had been delivered.

(2) Forgiveness of Sin (vv. 2, 3).

"Thou hast forgiven the iniquity—covered all their sin." God's restoration was the proof that he had pardoned. Great indeed was the sin of Jacob, but God's forgiveness was greater. He is peculiarly a God of mercy. Having forgiven the sins his anger is taken away. He stayed his hand from the judgment which would have justly fallen, to show his mercy.

II. Prayer for Restoration From Backsliding (vv. 4-7).

He knew how worthless the outward blessings of the Lord would be unless the people inwardly turned to the Lord. He, therefore, besought the Lord to give them the greater blessing, that of a change of heart. Without the change of heart forgiveness would be futile. A change of heart can only be by God's help.

(1) That God would turn the hearts of his people toward himself (v. 4).

Knowing the people's utter helplessness to turn to God, he cried out to God to save them by turning them to himself. He knew that God's anger could not turn from the people as long as they were impenitent.

(2) That God would take away the very remembrance of their sins (vv. 5-7).

(a) The ending of his anger (v. 5). The desire seems to be that he would wipe out the very marks of his displeasure by not longer allowing punishment to be meted out to them.

(b) The return to the people's joy (v. 6).

Their joy could only be realized through a revival from God. The Psalmist now becomes more bold in his requests.

(c) Shall show them mercy (v. 7).

"Make it visible," is his cry. God's judgment was most real. His desire is that his mercy would be just as real.

III. Exultant Anticipation (vv. 8-13).

Having spoken the sentiment of the repentant people, the poet expresses confidence of the Lord's response. So faithful is God that those who sincerely pray to him can go forward with the assurance of petitions granted.

(1) "He will speak peace" (v. 8).

He knew that a gentle answer would come, but its continuance would depend upon the fidelity of the people. Turning to folly would provoke again his wrath.

(2) Will bring his salvation near (v. 9).

Only as his salvation was near could glory be in the land.

(3) Devise a way by which "Mercy and truth," "Righteousness and peace," may be united (vv. 10, 11).

He did not suggest a way. He may not have known it. Faith now sees the way in Christ. In him such a union has been blessedly effected.

(4) The land shall become fruitful (v. 11).

When sin is removed, temporal prosperity shall follow. Earth's barrenness is due to sin. When the curse is removed fruitfulness shall follow.

(5) Righteousness shall be the guide of his people (v. 12).

In that golden, glad age God's righteous ways will leave a track in which his own may walk with security.

Psalm 126.

I. The Fact of Zion's Deliverance (vv. 1, 2).

(1) By whom (v. 1). The Lord.

(2) Effect of (vv. 1, 2).

(a) The people were scarcely able to believe it. So sudden and unexpected was their deliverance that it seemed to them as a dream. They expressed their feeling in joyful laughter.

(b) The heathen noted their deliverance as marvelous, and ascribed it to God (v. 2).

Song and Prayer.

II. The Song of the People (v. 3).

They ascribed their deliverance to the Lord and expressed their gratitude in singing God's praise.

III. The Prayer (v. 4).

The people cried to God to visit their restoration with fruitfulness, even as the streams from the South spread out and make a country fruitful.

IV. The Promise (vv. 5, 6).

Though the people were still obliged to suffer the consequences of their sins, they were encouraged to go on in sowing though in tears, as the reaping would bring joy

What Can We Do ?

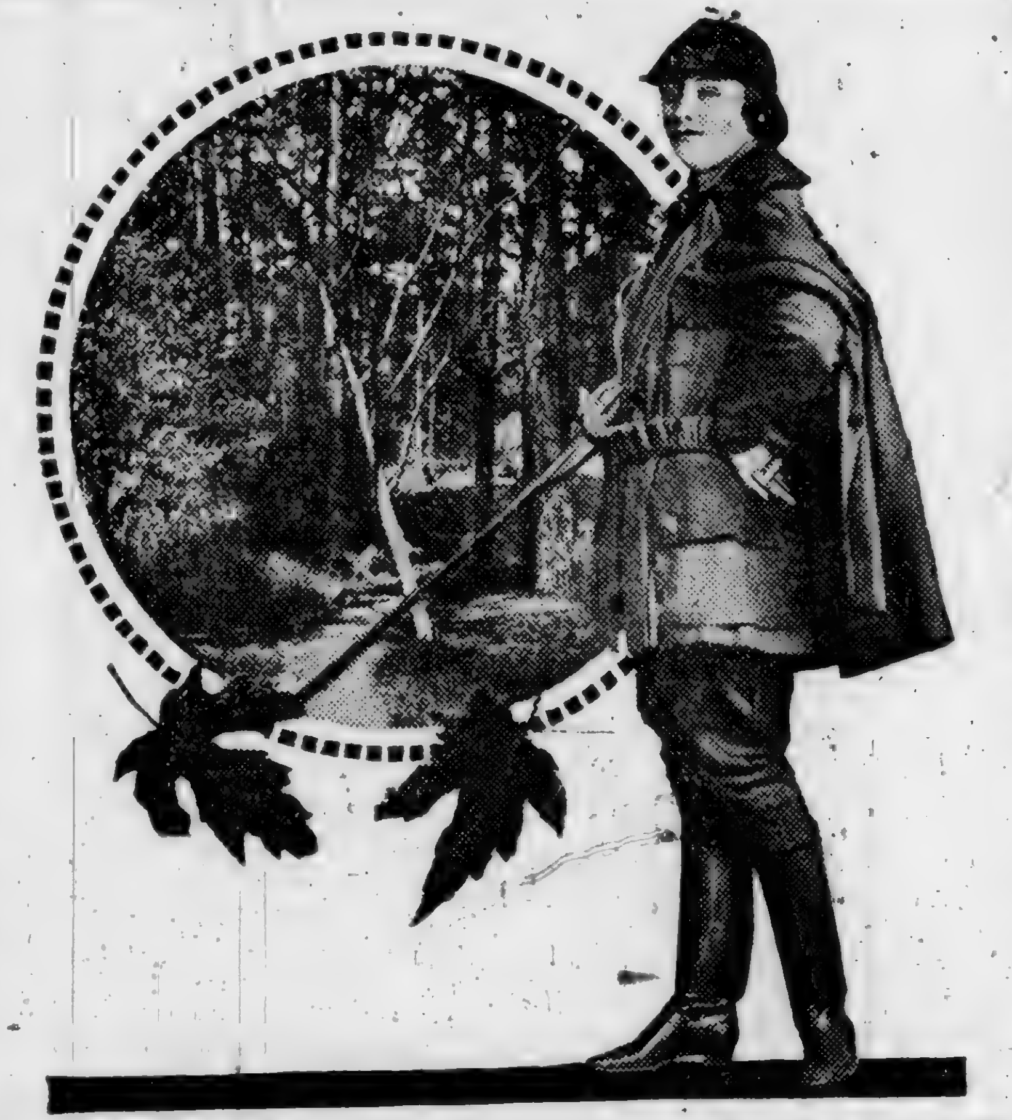
The Navy league is in need of comfort kits for the men in the navy and so far has only half the number asked for. Church societies, clubs, and individuals are invited to interest themselves and take this matter up at once. The kits are made of blue denim, bound with a strong braid, and have compartments for carrying all the things needed by our sailor boys to keep themselves and their clothing fit and "nifty." They are small but compact and carry an unbelievable number.

The kits ready to be fitted with toilet requisites, etc., can be bought ready made for $1.00, and fitted by the individual. A fitted kit costs $2.00. But the Navy league is more anxious to get sewers to make them than to provide them ready made. A denim pattern, ready to make, costs 40 cents, and the cut material costs 30 cents. Societies or individuals may buy the materials as they choose and with a pattern to guide them cut and make the kits. Any information needed may be obtained by addressing the Kit department, Woman's section, Navy league, 1402 Stevens building, Chicago, Ill.

Fittings for the kits may be bought through the Navy league. For over fifty kits they will cost $1.10 each; for under fifty $1.25 cents. A club making fifty kits can usually get contributions from druggists and merchants in the way of supplies for them. Each of the kits contains the following: A comb, toothbrush, nailbrush (which is a small scrubbing brush), talcum powder, soap in a soap box, petroleum jelly, dental cream, shoestrings, pencil with eraser, corncob pipe, tobacco, needles, black and white thread, row of pins, bone buttons, safety pins, bachelor buttons, and six postcards.

The Navy league is in need of sewers to make these kits, and those who are willing to do their bit by contributing time to do this work should inform the kit department at once.

Designed for the Sportswoman



If anything were needed to add to the allurement of life out of doors during the days of Indian summer it could be found in the outfits that have been designed for the sportswoman this fall. Costumers appear to have put their minds earnestly on this matter and it has come to the place where she can demand style, and lots of it, along with comfort and convenience, in her life-in-the-open-air togs.

We have come to trousers, whether it is to tramp or camp or hunt or fish, or even to motor, when the talk is of sports clothes. All the signposts of fashion point trousers-ward, wherever skirts are in the way. We can bid them good-by without a regret—to change them for something as smart and "nifty" as the hunting suit shown above.

Julia Bottomley

Mohair Is Favored.

Among the new dress fabrics for autumn serge and mohair stand out prominently. Mohair in particular seems to be enjoying a favor unprecedented. There is an English mixture of mohair with wool threads that is both beautiful and distinctive in texture and quality. The material has a handsome sheen and possesses excellent draping qualities. It comes also in very desirable shades. Broadcloth will be used for formal tailor-mades, but is not so popular for frocks, unless combined with satin. All frocks must suggest softness of lines now, and while broadcloth is rich and distinguished, it has a more or less heavy suggestion not compatible with indoor modes for this year.

Veils for Mourning.

Heavy crepe veils have almost been abandoned with mourning garb. The modern veil is of Brussels net—silk net, of course—and has a deep or narrow crepe border, according to the taste of the wearer or the period of mourning. The veil is supposed to be worn over the face for the first six months, and thrown back from the face during the second six months. After that a plaited veil is worn at the back and a bordered face veil supplements it. But if crepe veils have gone out of fashion, crepe as a trimming has not; quantities of crepe are used in mourning frocks of black henrietta, black chiffon, black crepe de chine and black mohair. A very beautiful mourning fabric is black mohair and worsted mixture, which has a handsome, dull luster, if one may use the two words in juxtaposition, and a very rich texture.

Colored Crepe de Chine Chemises.

Crepe de chine chemises in lemon, pink and palest cyclamen have supplanted the white, which have so long been popular. This is probably due to the fact that linens are scarce and crepe de chine as a substitute is infinitely prettier, although its wearing qualities leave something to be desired.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

CATHOLICS AND PROHIBITION.

The liquor publicity bureaus are making much of the fact that Cardinal Gibbons is opposed to prohibition. They would have the public forget the many stalwart champions of the anti-liquor cause in the Roman Catholic church. They would like to blot from its memory the words of Archbishop Ireland: "Were God to place in my hand a wand with which to dispel the evil of intemperance, I would strike the door of every saloon, every distillery, every brewery, until the accursed traffic should be wiped from the face of the earth." They would erase from the remembrance of the communicants of that church the scathing indictment of Archbishop John J. Keane: "If I could cause the earth to open and swallow up every saloon in the world, I would feel that I was conferring upon humanity a blessing. The saloon is bad for the home, the church and the country. It has no redeeming feature." They would have good Catholics forget the advice of Cardinal Manning: "The drink traffic is a public, permanent and ubiquitous agency of degradation. The drink trade is our shame, scandal and sin, and unless brought under by the will of the people, it will be our downfall. Do you know how you can help to break up this unholy alliance between government and the greatest fraud of the age? Vote against it."—The Union Signal.

GREAT GAINS TO LABOR.

Conditions in Shreveport, La., a dry city, are thus described by Mr. Thomas J. Greer, president of the Louisiana Federation of Labor:

"Since the influence of the liquor traffic has been removed from union politics we have made tremendous gains in Shreveport since the town went dry in 1908. Membership in labor unions has increased from 1,800 to 3,700, and home-owners among union men have increased 40 per cent. The carpenters' union has increased its membership from 65 to 375.

When Shreveport was wet the painters' union had 35 members, working ten hours a day for $2.75. Today the painters' union has 145 members, eight hours a day and 55 cents an hour, or a scale of $4.40 per day. Barbers have shortened their hours of labor, raised wages continuously and have a 100 per cent organization. A brewery under the wet regime employed six non-union brewery workers; today an ice factory at the same location employs 40 union ice workers."

FEW SITTING IDLY BY.

Of all the reasons that may be urged against the use of alcoholic drinks (especially during the war) the two that must appeal to physicians with irresistible force, are (1) the action of alcohol in lessening all forms of efficiency, physical, intellectual and moral, and (2) the intimate connection always found between drinking, prostitution and the spread of venereal diseases. The evidence against alcohol on these accounts is so overwhelming, so well-established and so generally known that it does not seem necessary to go into details. Only the other day an experiment was mentioned in the Journal which showed that 50 grams of brandy caused a depreciation in the marksmanship of expert shots of 30 per cent in rapid firing and 50 per cent in slow firing. What sense is there in training men to become efficient and then sit idly by and let the hard-won efficiency be taken away by alcohol?—Journal of the American Medical Society.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

I have observed that every bandit crew that goes forth to murder starts from a saloon; that every panderer has his rendezvous in a grog-shop; that every den of thieves makes its victims drunk before it robs them; that every house of prostitution has its bar or is in partnership with booze; that every gambling den either is in a saloon or sustains a close relationship with one; that the pickpocket "trust" is housed in a saloon; that the "pay-off joint" for the crook and the crooked policeman is in a saloon; that the professional bondsmen and character witnesses for thieves and holdup men are saloonkeepers or bartenders.—Judge Gemmill of Chicago.

PROHIBITION IN MEXICO.

The Mexican states of Chihuahua and Sonora both recently became dry. By a decree said to have been given directly by President Carranza as a war measure, prohibition became effective throughout Chihuahua July 8. Gen. Elias Calles of Sonora, known as the father of prohibition in that state, is enforcing a law against selling liquor in every community and mining camp in the state.

RUSSIA STILL ON WAGON.

Prof. Frank A. Ray of Ohio State university, who just returned from Russia, where he went as a mining expert, says in a newspaper interview that vodka is as completely banished as czarism, the liquor press to the contrary notwithstanding. The revolution has not changed the prohibition decree.

POWERFUL GERMAN ALLY.

Germany's most powerful ally is the drink traffic. It destroys more foodstuffs than the submarines sink.

MORE WHEAT PRIZES

Honors for Western Canada Come Year After Year.

At the recent Soil Products Exposition at Peoria, Ill., in a keen contest for the coveted first prize for wheat, Western Canada has again carried off all the honors. Not only has she won the first, but also the second and third prizes. These were won by Mr. S. Larcombe, of Birtle, Manitoba. In past years the Province of Saskatchewan had the distinguished honor of carrying off the initial prize.

Harvesting and threshing are now completed in Western Canada, and while it is early in the season to give exact figures as to the average yield per acre of wheat, oats, barley and flax it is safe to assume that the former will yield about 20 bushels per acre. The price to the farmer will be about $2.00 per bushel, giving him $40.00 an acre of a return. When it is considered that the land upon which this wheat is grown averaged less than $30 an acre, it takes very little figuring to arrive at an estimate of the profit there is to the grain grower of Western Canada. The writer knows where a farmer purchased 460 acres of land in the spring of 1916, broke it up the same year, put it in wheat in 1917. His crop was harvested a few days ago. It yielded 4,800 bushels and he sold it at $2.05 per bushel, giving him $9,840. The land cost him $4,860, breaking, seeding, seed, cutting and threshing, $1,920. His profit was $3,120 after paying for his land and his costs of improving. He has now $3,120 to commence another season with a "paid for in full" improved farm.

Never has farming offered such profitable returns for labor as at present and nowhere is the large profit equal to that of the low priced, high yielding lands of Western Canada.

There has been a big rush during the past few weeks of renters and owners of high priced lands in many parts of the United States to investigate these 100% profit reports. No better season of the year could be selected by anyone desiring to better their condition and wishing to give Western Canada the "once over." Threshing is now completed and the grain being marketed. The weather is fine and will be pleasant for a couple of months and a visit now to personally investigate the conditions will be convincing and profitable. While old home ties and family associations are one of the first considerations in the mind of the reader, who feels that the old five or ten per cent return is sufficient, it behooves the modern and progressive farmer always to be on the alert to grasp the opportunities of the hour. Land in Western Canada that is annually producing a gross return of from $40.00 to $80.00 per acre is purchasable at from $15 to $30 per acre. It can be seen at a glance that such values cannot help but increase as they have done in the older agricultural districts of the United States. The new settler will find himself surrounded by same contented and prosperous neighbors. The expense of making one visit to look into Western Canada's opportunities is small—a special reduced rate is available and you owe yourself a holiday and a trip may do you good. You owe your dependents a right to better your condition and Western Canada offers that opportunity.—Advertisement.

Unaccountable.

"He declares, that he despises, detests and abominates you."

"That is very strange," replied J. Fuller Gloom. "I do not recollect ever having lent him any money."

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply on the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

At little cost one can get a small bottle of freezone at any drug store, which will positively rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding skin. Just think! You can lift off your corns and calluses now without a bit of pain or soreness. If your druggist hasn't freezone he can easily get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

A Near Calamity.

Little Mary was being initiated into the wonders of the Pullman car. She and her mother left the city early in the evening, each occupying a big cushioned seat in the car. Mary wished to know at once where they were to sleep, and after five minutes' explanation by her mother she realized that they were to sleep in a bed, made over their two seats, which would be completed by the porter about nine o'clock.

At the next stop a man entered the car and Mary was forced to give up her individual seat to him. He had reserved the upper berth, which she did not know. The giving up of the seat was for a time enough food for thought, but she finally burst out with this question:

"Mamma, if we sleep here, and all those other people sleep where they are sitting, where is that man going to sleep?"

"That man," and the rest in the car laughed. The explanation process began all over again.

Variety of Time in Honolulu.

On Papaikou plantation the clock marks three-quarters of an hour ahead of standard time for the day. In fact, there are three ways of fixing the hour of the day on the plantation—solar time, standard time and railway time, writes A. P. Taylor, Honolulu correspondent. The Hilo Sugar company has put the time half an hour ahead. At Pahala the Hawaiian Agricultural company has advanced all the clocks 40 minutes. Nearly all the other plantations on the island have gained from 15 minutes to one hour. They may decide to adopt a uniform time.

Design of Shed Described Here Has Been Found Highly Satisfactory by Experts in Raising Blooded Chickens.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

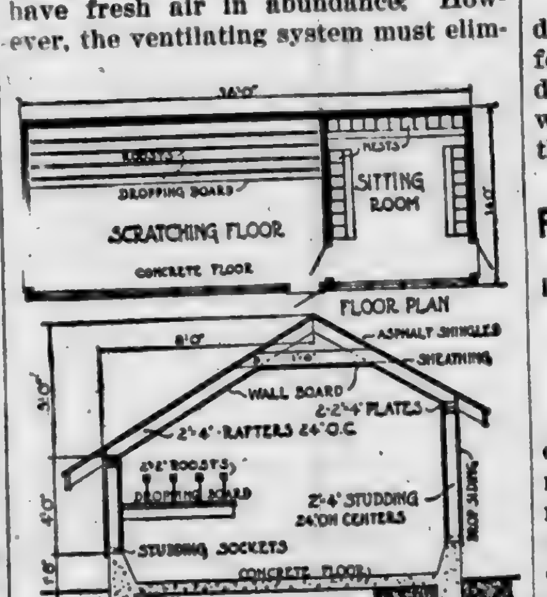
By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Success in raising poultry requires more than pure-bred or scientifically cross-bred stock. The poultry house is of equal importance. It must be right in design and it must be properly located. The poultry house effects the success in raising poultry in two ways: It has a direct effect in providing protection for the fowls and giving them every advantage which makes for good health and maximum laying capacity; it has an indirect effect in placing the fowls under the control of the farmer, who is able to give them the attention which they require if the best results are to be obtained.

Without regard for the size or shape of the poultry house, there are two rules which should be followed: One of these is that the building should face the south or southeast. The other is that the north and northwest walls of the building should be carefully insulated against the wind. It is neither necessary or desirable that windows be placed in these walls. Generally speaking, poultry houses are built too high. Domestic poultry requires very little headroom, but the excessive height is necessary in order that the attendant may work in comfort within the building.

Sunlight is just as important in a poultry house as it is in a human habitation. Sunlight means health when other conditions are favorable. At the same time, hothouse conditions must be carefully guarded against. If a poultry house has too much glass in its walls, it will be too warm in the daytime, when the sun shines hot and the radiation of heat at night will be so rapid as to make the daily range of temperature too great for best conditions.

Ventilation is just as important as sunlight. Poultry, to do well, must have fresh air in abundance. However, the ventilating system must eliminate strong drafts. Panels of thin cloth in the front wall of the building seem to serve the purpose best.



Floor Plan.

In addition to the poultry house, a good yard must be provided. There are weeks at a time, during the winter, when the poultry must be closely confined within the house. However, as soon as the weather will permit, the fowls should be given several hours each day in a dry, clean yard. The most satisfactory manner of keeping poultry in the summer time is to give them liberal range in an orchard or some other place where a variety of seeds may be planted at intervals to raise different commodities which the chickens can harvest themselves.

In the accompanying illustrations, a henhouse is shown which is snug and comfortable, offering the hens every possible inducement to lay eggs at close to five cents apiece while the snow is flying. The building is 36 by 14 feet, patterned after a poultry house adopted by the members of the New York State poultry association.

It is built on a wall of concrete and has a good concrete floor, the idea being permanency and sanitation together with protection against rats and mice. After the concrete walls have been built, the ground is leveled inside and settled with water. The floor is placed above this, the concrete being in the proportion 1:3:5. Instead of using a rich cement mortar surface coat, the top of the floor may be covered with a one-inch coat of lime mortar made with very fine sand. This material is softer than cement and is better for the poultry. There is so little weight on the henhouse floor that the ordinary solid concrete construction is not necessary. The foundation walls extend up 18 inches above grade and about 15 inches above the floor.

The studding are connected with the top of the concrete wall by using sockets which are set in the concrete. After the inside wall board and the outside drop siding have been carried up the studs a short distance, about one inch of fresh cement mortar is placed in each of the spaces between studs and worked into the corners thoroughly, to prevent cracks through which the wind can blow and to seal the walls against poultry insects. Above the sills, the walls and roof are sealed both outside and inside and a layer of building paper is placed against the studs under both the wall board and the siding and against the rafters under both the wall board and the sheathing. The object is to make a dead-air space surrounding the inclosed space so that the temperature of the interior will be held as even as possible.

To facilitate ventilation and to get the benefit of the sunlight, the roof is given a long slope at the back and a short dip in front, as is clearly shown in the perspective view. This also gives headroom for the attendant in the front part with a low roof at the back, which is appreciated in the winter time when there is not much heat from the sun. The front intake ventilators consist of window openings covered with very thin cotton. Cheesecloth is recommended as being thin enough to admit both air and light yet it is thick enough to prevent draft.

The inside of the house is divided into two rooms; the larger room is the general scratchng shed and the smaller one is the nesting room. Both rooms are supplied with removable hen furniture, so that everything inside of the walls may be lifted off and carried out-of-doors for cleaning. Lice and mites are so troublesome in poultry houses that facilities for keeping the place clean are absolutely necessary.

It is for this reason, also, that the inside of the poultry house is lined with wall board, which is cemented at the joints and the whole surface painted carefully with three coats of thin paint, thoroughly rubbed in to fill every crack and to cover every rough place that could possibly make a hiding place for vermin.

In this plan there are three outside doors for convenience in feeding the fowls and cleaning the house. The door to the west should be fitted with weather-strips and kept shut most of the time in winter.

FINDS SOURCE FOR POTASH

Invention of Dr. F. G. Cottrell Precipitates Cement Dust From Which It Is Made.

Enormous growth in the cement industry, which has been developed to meet the demand for building material, now promises to solve another important economic problem—that of our potash supply independent of Germany.

In the manufacture of cement there is expelled into the atmosphere tons of dust from the smelters which with the fumes is carried by the wind and settles in a destructive sediment on all vegetation, buildings, and objects in the neighborhood of the smelters. Now an invention made by Dr. F. G. Cottrell of the United States bureau of mines precipitates the dust from the smelters and enables the saving of the potash contained in it.

Last year one large California cement company, that had formerly been compelled to pay heavy damages for the dust distributed from its plant, secured $80,000 net profit from the potash recovered by the new process. It is now believed that cement plants at present operating in this country can secure a by-product of 100,000 tons of potash that has heretofore been worse than wasted, and that, as the cement industry enlarges, the greater part of America's potash supply can be secured from this source and at the same time reduce the cost of cement manufacture.—Farm and Fireside.

CUT OUT CROOKED STICKS

Use of Dead Wood for Fuel Is Also Applied to Scoundrels and the War.

Forestry experts in New York, a state which has given much conserving attention to its wealth in trees, urge farmers to help the country meet the high cost of fuel by making more use of the dead and dying timber in their wood lots. They are advised to burn in their stoves and grates the fallen logs still sound enough to be converted into fire wood and to cut down and utilize crooked trees obviously foredoomed to worthlessness as timber, no matter how long they may be allowed to stand.

This is good advice, and there is a human moral in the crooked stick part of it, says an exchange. The same stress of war times, which led to the appeal issued to New York farmers in sifting out crooked men. Some rascals will profit by war conditions, but in the broad view of the nation's affairs the sound and straight will come to the front. The country can't take chances with scoundrels. It must cut crooked sticks out of the life-and-death work of the war, in places of authority.

Relieving Anxiety.

"What makes you so thoughtful, Algernon, dearest?"

"I was just thinking of the disturbance to business caused by the war, darling. Now, they say there is going to be a sugar shortage in the United States."

"Well, my own, don't get worried. I would just as soon have a nice, long automobile ride as a box of chocolates, any time."

The Worst Way.

Back in the dark ages, when the management of the Erie railroad was not all that it should have been—the rolling stock needing more oil and the common stock less water—a westbound passenger train jolted into Corning one day two hours behind time and halted to patch up the engine and take on such passengers as were in no hurry and preferred waiting to walking.

Just as the train was about to jerk itself in motion an excited individual came rushing along the platform, dragging a heavy carpetbag with one hand and waving a telegram with the other.

"You must wait!" he shouted, breathlessly. "I'm in an awful hurry! I want to get to Buffalo the worst way!"

"All right," sang out the conductor of the starting train. "Hurry up and jump aboard. You won't strike anything worse than this!"—Everybody's Magazine.

A Pointed Question.

Jean's maiden aunt is a dressmaker, and she is forever exhorting the little girl, who loathes the sight of a thimble, to learn tn sew.

"Aunt Ruth," Jean remarked recently, "should every little girl learn to sew and make her own clothes?"

"Yes, indeed," replied aunty warmly. "Why do you ask?"

"Well, then, how would you make a living?"

Aunty subsided.

One "On" the Teacher.

The school term was drawing toward its close in Normal City, a Muncie suburb, when the pupils of one room were asked to write compositions on any subject they might choose, according to Lee Baird, the principal.

One little boy turned in his composition with the sheet entirely blank except for the title, "The Home Life of the Fiji Islanders."

"Roscoe, why did you choose so peculiar a subject, but choosing it, why didn't you write a composition on the home life of the Fiji islanders as you announce in the title?" asked Baird.

"Because they ain't any," was the boy's reply, while the other children who ha been let in on the joke, roared at getting one "on" the teacher.—Indianapolis News.

Just as Good.

Tommy Atkins had taken a German officer prisoner and demanded the latter's sword. The officer shook his head.

"I have no sword to give you," he said, "but won't my vitriol spray, my flame projector or my gas cylinder do as well?"

Waiting for Congress.

"Why does the president have the pardoning power and not congress?"

"We don't want a prisoner who deserves a pardon to run the risk of dying of old age."

Progress.

"Are you interested in food control?"

"I have gotten away past it. What I'm interested in now is appetite control."

Yet the fruit tree agent doesn't care to be known as a professional grafter.

HERE THERE and EVERYWHERE

The purposes of the United States in this war are known to the whole world, to every people to whom the truth has been permitted to come. We seek no material advantage of any kind. We believe that the intolerable wrongs done in this war by the furious and brutal power of the Imperial German Government ought to be repaired but not at the expense of the sovereignty of any people—rather a vindication of the sovereignty both of those that are weak and those that are strong. * * * Peace must be based upon justice and fairness and the common rights of mankind.—From President Wilson's Reply to the Pope.

New Officers Elected

Five of the six W. C. T. U., organizations were represented at the county meeting held in Auburn at the Eckhart public library on Wednesday afternoon and evening of last week.

The principal business of the convention was the election of officers for the coming year. Mrs. Addie Patterson, of St. Joe, was elected county president; Mrs L. E. Lane, of Auburn, vice president; Mrs. E. Hively, of Newville, recording secretary; Mrs. Ada Bassett, St. Joe, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Alice Lewis, Auburn, treasurer.

The following superintendents were also selected—Loyal Temperance Legion, Mrs. Chloe Hart, St. Joe; Anti-Narcotic, Mrs. Phila Wolf, Waterloo; Franchise, Mrs. Jennie Sechler, St. Joe; Christian Citizenship, Mrs. Cora Price, St. Joe; Fairs and Open Air Meetings, Mrs. Ada Lane, Auburn; Flower Mission, Mrs. Martha Eckhart, Auburn; Literature, Mrs. Eva Woods, Garrett; Medal Contest, Mrs. Sadie Washler, Butler, Rt. 4; Medical Temperance, Mrs. Olive Showalter, Waterloo; Mothers' Meetings, Mrs. Minnie Husselman, Butler; Press, Mrs. Ada Bassett, St Joe; Purity, Mrs Dora Weaner, (Newville) Hicksville, Ohio, R. F. D; Sunday School Work, Mrs. Minnie Bayman, St. Joe; Sabbath Observance, Mrs. Bessie Hall, Auburn; Scientific Temperance, Miss Gladys Kain, (Newville) St. Joe Rt. 1; Soldiers and Sailors, Mrs. Sadie Yesbera, Auburn; Jails and Prisons, Mrs. Minnie Kagey, Auburn.

The state vice president, Mrs. Elizabeth Stanley, was present and in the evening gave an address on the subject, "The Rush for the Water Wagon or the Call for Service." She told the story of the long campaign of education that made the world safe for the water wagon and the progress of the cause for the past five years. How this government can not afford to use good material, needed by our allies, to be used in the manufacture of booze and we can not afford to injure the bodies of our county's defenders in the hour of crisis by giving them alcohol in any form.

"We are opposed to a separate peace," said the speaker, "with beer and wine, for the brewery and distillery have always been partners in crime and they ought to die together and be buried in the same grave."

H. G. Harrington.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Buckingham and their guests, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Folts, of Kalida, Ohio, were at Ft. Wayne, Thursday afternoon.

Foster Gee, wife and children went to Butler, Saturday evening, to visit Mrs. Gee's sister, Mrs. G. R. Packer and family, over Sunday.

There will be sewing at the Red Cross room Saturday afternoon. All the ladies are invited to come as there is a rush order for garments next week.

St. Joe was represented in the big patriotic parade on Wednesday of the Fall Fair, at Auburn, they having two floats, one representing St. Joe, driven by F. R. Bowman, and the other the Red Cross, with Isaac Meese representing "Uncle Sam" and Miss Princess Krabill representing "Columbia." This float being driven by Alva Perry. Each car was attractively decorated with cards and Red Cross signs.

In the boys' live stock judging contest, conducted by J. W. Schwab of Purdue university, John Moore of Waterloo, received first prize; William Quance, of St. Joe, second; Ernest Diehl, of Auburn, third, and Earl Pattee, of Butler, fourth. The first prize is a Purdue scholarship, the second, one-half scholarship, the third, one-third scholarship, and the fourth, an agricultural book—all the gifts of County Agent A. Z. Arehart. The first boy will have all his expenses—transportation to and from Purdue, board and room—paid. The second will have half of this and the third, one-third. Mr. Schwab first gave the boys instructions how to do the judging and then they went ahead and judged. The youngsters were greatly pleased with their prizes.

ARRANGE FOR MEASURES TO RAISE MONEY

Joint Conferees on War Revenue Complete Their Bill and Turn In Their Report.

TAX LEVIES WILL BE HEAVY

Under Legislation Provided, Powerful Corporations Will Pay Their Proper Share for the Finances That Must Be Provided for the Successful Continuance of the War—Best Efforts of Statesmen at Washington Have Been Put Forward to the Accomplishment of the Country's Ends.

Washington.—The joint conferees on the war revenue bill completed their draft after two weeks of deliberation.

As revised by the conferees the measure has been raised from the levy fixed by the senate of $2,416,670,000 to an aggregate of approximately $2,700,000,000. Chairman Simmons of the senate finance committee estimated that the increase made by the conferees would approach $275,000,000.

Profits Tax Modified.

The excess war profits tax, as agreed to by the conferees, is a modification of the senate bill, the principal changes being in the maximum and minimum rates of exemption upon which the tax is to be determined. The senate graduated scale of exemptions ran from 6 to 10 per cent, while the house exemption rate was 8 per cent. The conferees adopted the graduated rate of from 7 to 9 per cent.

The definition of capital, which was a point upon which the conferees argued for days, was modified so as to provide that the actual value of tangible property paid into a corporation or partnership or individual business before January 1, 1914, shall be taken as of that date. The proviso as to good will and other intangible property has been somewhat liberalized.

As to "Invested Capital."

In calculating war excess profits the terms "invested capital" of corporations and partnerships was declared to include "actual cash paid in, actual cash value and other tangible property paid for stock or shares at the time of payment or January 1, 1914, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original securities; paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business, exclusive of undivided profits earned during the taxable year."

The allowance for intangible assets includes "actual cash value of patents and copyrights paid in for stock or shares at the time of payment . . . . good will trademarks, trade brands, franchises . . . if for bone-fide payments not to exceed the cash value."

It stipulates that such intangible assets exchanged for securities before March 3, 1917, not exceeding 20 per cent of the total, shall be included at a value not exceeding a fair cash value at the time of purchase.

Postal Increases.

A flat increase on reading matter of ¼ cent per pound until July 1, 1919, and ½ cent thereafter was provided. Advertising matter exceeding 5 per cent of the total space would be taxed from ¼ to 2¼ cents additional until July 1, 1919, and from ½ to 4½ cents more until July 1, 1920; and from ¾ to 6¾ cents to 1921 and from 1 cent to 9 cents thereafter.

An additional tax of ⅛ cent per pound until July 1, 1919, and ¼ cent thereafter, on religious, agricultural, fraternal and similar publications was adopted.

The 1 cent tax on letters, excepting drop letters and postal cards, was restored by the conferees. A 1 cent additional tax on postal and private mailing cards was added. The first-class mail increases are estimated to raise $90,000,000, and are effective 30 days afetr the passage of the act. The senate provision exempting from postage leetters written by soldiers and sailors abroad was retained.

Railroad Tickets Hit.

The conferees levied 8 per cent in lieu of the senate rate of 5 and the house rate of 10 per cent on passenger transportation, estimated to raise from the compromise levy abouot $60,000,000 instead of $37,500,000 under the senate plan. The 3 per cent tax on freight transportation was retained and the tax on express transportation was increased so that 1 cent would be levied on each 20 cents paid instead of each 25 cents. The house 10 per cent tax on Pullman accommdations, cut to 5 per cent by the senate, was restored and is estimated to raise $5,000,000.

In lieu of the house 5 per cent tax on sales of automobiles by manufacturers and the senate federal license tax on owners, the conferees adopted a 3 per cent tax on all motor vehicles, including trucks, payable by manufacturers, producers and importers.

Taxes of 3 per cent of manufacturers' ales of musical instruments and jewelry also were written in, with a tax of ¼ cent a foot on motion picture film.

New Inheritance Tax.

A new system of graduated inheritance taxes was written into the bill in lieu of the house plan and despite the senate's rejection of such taxes. The new rates on inheritances, with those of Americans in military service exempted, range from one-half of 1 per cent on $50,000 estates to 10 per cent on estates of $10,000,000 and more.

The bulk of the increases of between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000 made by the conferees in the senate bill was secured from the postage, public utilities and manufacturing sales section and the new inheritance taxes.

With but few exceptions, the new taxes are effective with the passage of the act.

Senate Version Stands.

The income tax section was adopted virtually as written by the senate. The new 2 per cent normal tax on incomes of more than $2,000 for married persons and $1,000 for single persons is in addition to the present law exempting incomes of less than $3,000 for single persons and $4,000 for married persons. Thus those between the new low exemption bases and the present exemptions will pay only the 2 per cent tax, but single persons having an income of $3,000 or more and married persons whose income is $4,000 or more would pay the full 4 per cent normal tax.

The senate income provision allowing an additional exemption of $200 for each dependent child to heads of families subject to the present law was retained. The exemption for children, however, does not apply to those subject to the new reduced taxes with the $2,000 and $1,000 exemptions, respectively, for married and single persons.

Surtax Is Agreed Upon.

Surtaxes were agreed upon as follows:

One per cent on income over $5,000 and less than $7,500; 2 per cent between $7,500 and $10,000; 3 per cent between $10,000 and $12,500; 4 per cent between $12,500 and $15,000; 5 per cent between $15,000 and $20,000; 7 per cent between $20,000 and $40,000; 10 per 18 per cent between $80,000 and $100,- per cent between $60,000 and $80,000; 18 per cent betwene $80,000 and $100,000; 22 per cent between $100,000 and $150,000; 25 per cent between $150,000 and $200,000; 30 per cent between $200,000 and $250,000; 34 per cent between $250,000 and $300,000; 37 per cent between $300,000 and $500,000; 40 per cent between $500,000 and $750,000; 45 per cent between $750,000 and $1,000,000, and 50 per cent on incomes exceeding $1,000,000.

Increased Tax on Whisky.

Increased senate rates on whisky and beer were virtually retained, and that on wines somewhat reduced. The tax on distilled spirits was made $2.10 per gallon when for beverage use and $1 less for industrial purposes, estimated to raise $135,000,000. The amendment prohibiting importation of distilled spirits for beverage use was retained. Floor taxes to reach withdrawn liquors were approved. Beer was taxed $1.50 per barrel additional, to raise $46,000,000, an increase of 25 cents per barrel over the house rate.

Present wine taxes were doubled.

Taxes on nonalcoholic beverages were compromised. On prepared sirups and extracts the taxes graduated from 5 to 20 cents instead of from 8 to 12 cents a gallon were adopted. Grape juice and other soft drinks are taxed 1 cent per gallon, as provided by the senate in reducing the original 2-cent rate of the house.

Senate rates on cigars and cigarettes were retained, but those on snuff were increased from 4 cents to 5 cents a pound.

Stamp Taxes Fixed.

Stamp taxes agreed upon are:

Bonds of indebtedness, 5 cents on each $100.

Indemnity and surety bonds, 50 cents.

Parcel post packages, 1 cent for each 25 cents of the cost of transportation.

Capital stock, orignal issues, 5 cents per $100.

Sales and transfers, 2 cents per $100.

Sales of produce on exchange, 2 cents for each $100 value in merchandise.

Drafts, checks payable other than on sight or demand, promissory notes, except bank notes for circulation, and renewals, 2 cents for all sums below $100 and 2 cents for each additional $100 or fraction thereof.

Conveyance papers, 50 cents between $100 and $500 and 50 cents for each additional $500.

Customs house entries, from 25 cents to $1; entry for withdrawal from bonded warehouses, 50 cents.

Passenger vessel tickets for ports other than those in the United States, Canada and Mexico, between $10 and $30, $1; between $30 and $60, $3, and above $60, $5.

Voting proxies, 10 cents.

Power of attorney, 25 cents.

Playing cards, decks of not more than 54 cards, an additional 5 cents on the present rates.

Taxes on life insurance, eliminated from the house bill in the senate, were amended and reinserted, raising about $5,000,000. Effective November 1 the new taxes on new insurance policies issued are 8 cents per $100 or fraction thereof on life insurance and 1 cent per $1 on the premium charged on marine, casualty, fire and inland insurances.

Amusement taxes agreed upon provide that all persons entering places of amusement free, except employees and officials on duty and children under twelve, would pay a tax rate of 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the admission charge. This tax also would apply to cabarets and similar performances where the cost of entertainment is included in other costs, such as service. Holders of annual box seats would pay 10 per cent of the annual rental. Nickel theaters and shows, rides and other outdoor park amusements with a maximum admission of 10 cents and benefit entertainments and agricultural fairs were exempted.

After November 1, 1917, members of all clubs, except fraternal orders, paying more than $12 annual dues would be subject to a 10 per cent tax.

Exemptions Are Allowed.

On excess profits the conferees agreed upon a minimum deduction of 7 per cent and a maximum of 10 per cent, instead of the 6 to 10 per cent fixed by the senate. Other exemptions are $3,000 for corporations and $6,000 for individuals. Corporations, partnerships and individuals having no capital stock would pay a flat rate of 8 per cent on net profits in excess of $3,000 for corporations and $6,000 for individuals and partnerships.

Miscellaneous income tax amendments inserted by the senate were generally adopted, including the so-called Jones amendment for a tax of 10 per cent on corporations' indistributed surplus, without allowance for income taxes paid. The 10 per cent tax would not apply to undistributed income actually invested or employed in business or invested in federal securities after September 1, 1917, and 5 per cent penalty for surplus retained but not employed is provided.

In making provision for administration and collection of the new and existing taxes the conferees provided that the special tax of 12½ per cent on war munitions manufactures shall be reduced to 10 per cent, but retained to January 1, 1918. It now yields about $29,000,000 annually and the senate had proposed its repeal.

TO PREPARE FOR PEACE CONGRESS

Colonel House Undertakes Unusual Task at Request of President Wilson.

DOES NOT AIM TO END WAR

Work Is to Equip Government With Data That Will Be Important When the Hostilities Come to a Close.

New York.—Col. E. M. House, who was asked by President Wilson to undertake the task of preparing data for the use of the United States when the warring nations gather about the conference table to discuss peace terms, has entered actively upon the performance of his unusual duties. His first move was to select Dr. John H. Finley, commissioner of education of the state of New York, as his chief assistant. Doctor Finley will bring to the work all the information which he gathered on a recent trip to Europe, where he made an extensive study of conditions.

Emphasis is laid upon the fact that the appointment of the president's intimate friend and counselor to this position is not indicative of any move for peace at this time but is merely preparatory to the peace conference which must come inevitably at some time in the future.

The selection of Doctor Finley is indicative of the sort of experts with whom Colonel House will confer. No man or woman with a preconceived opinion which might tempt one to color circumstances so as to prove the correctness of a personal point of view will be permitted to participate in a work where open-mindedness is a prerequisite to the arrival at conclusions that will enable the government to determine upon a correct policy.

Emphasis is put upon the unalterable determination that neither professional pacifists nor confirmed militarists can be in the slightest degree useful in preparing statistics for governmental guidance, which must be without taint of bias.

In an interview Colonel House made it plain that his appointment does not indicate any thought of immediate peace is now being entertained by the United States government. He agrees with Lord Northcliffe in his message delivered before the American Bankers' association in Atlantic City that peace seems far off and America should beware the trickery and treachery of such propaganda. The truth is that this effort on the part of the United States to analyze war conditions and evolve a plan of procedure when hostilities end is a belated one, just as our military preparations lagged for a period. But now it is "full steam ahead and damn the torpedoes" with our army and navy with not a thought of let-up in mind, so from now on there will be urgent prosecution of search for material, historical and informative, concerning the world war. This quest of data will keep pace with an energetic prosecution of the contest, but will not halt it in any way. To pause now in any phase of belligerent endeavor might make the prospect of peace even more remote than it seems at present.

No Sign of Early Peace.

The government sees nothing whatever to indicate the early approach of peace, nor will Colonel House have anything to do with ascertaining the point of view of either the Entente belligerents or the central powers, or possible terms upon the basis of which they might be willing to enter into negotiations. He will remain in the United States. It is possible that the state department will be able to afford him aid in the work he has undertaken, but he will not work with the department nor in a diplomatic capacity, formal or informal. He will have no title and will receive no salary.

The appointment of Colonel House affords another illustration of the expanding position of the United States in world affairs. Heretofore the state department has been equipped with virtually all the information that was necessary to the solution of international problems in which the United States has taken a direct interest. The war has brought new problems and projected this country into a field of international activity which it has seldom entered before.

The questions which will come before the peace conference at the end of the war will be multitudinous. The freedom of the seas, the neutralization of seaways, the political homeogeneity of peoples who claim the right of self-government and the disposition of territorial possessions involving economic. historical and political questions, will be some of the many subjects to be considered, and the information upon which conclusions may be based and policies decided must be at hand.

With exclusive European problems, it is not expected that the representatives of the United States at the peace council will be concerned. But in the disposition of general questions, relating to economic intercourse and political development, which will affect virtually all the nations of the world, the United States will have a potent voice. In accordance with the policy that has been consistently followed since the outbreak of the war of holding aloof from European combinations except in the prosecution of the war, this government probably will not attempt to aid in the settlement of traditional Euorpean quarrels, except possibly as a matter of friendly interest if opportunity arises.

House Likely to Be Delegate.

It was said unofficially that when the time comes to organize a peace conference, Colonel House, by virtue of his present assignment, would in all probability be selected as one of the delegates from the United States.

It will be a part of Colonel House's task to gather intelligence relating to commercial, economic and political situations abroad. He will keep abreast of developments in all non-military affairs.

Colonel House will have associated with him, as has been stated, several experts, probably college professors, economists and specialists in commercial and financial affairs. The work he is to perform will not be connected with similar undertakings in any of the countries with which the United States is associated in the war.

The United States government isn't getting ready to enter into peace negotiations with Germany, isn't going to meddle in strictly European questions relating to the war, and isn't negotiating just yet on the problems of peace with the Entente, as has frequently been surmised.

Must Have Data in Advance.

It is important for the United States government now and will be even more important later on to have a so-called "who's who and what's what" in the war in order that all phases involved may be properly understood by reference to data compiled in advance.

In time of war the government that fails to prepare for peace will ultimately be at a disadvantage, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger in an editorial. The representatives of Great Britain, Austria, Russia and Prussia, found this out after the fall of Napoleon when they met Prince Talleyrand at Vienna. Talleyrand, sent by France, had learned enough of the situation as it concerned all of the smaller European powers and as it concerned much of the opinion of Europe to turn the tables upon the four great powers and to stand as the champion of the public rights of Europe.

Prince Talleyrand maneuvered, and successfully, according to the rules of a secret diplomacy. He really worked in behalf of selfish and nationalistic interests. The partitioning of Europe by the congress of Vienna was the outcome of arbitrary compromise; it was prolific of future wars. The knowledge which the great diplomatic exponent of France displayed was more comprehensive than that of his foes, that is all. Excepting that he recognizes the need of precise information, President Wilson acts upon a principle different from that which guided Talleyrand. He will urge this nation into no alliance, even with the nations with whom it is associated in the common war against the Teutonic powers. He proposes simply to equip himself with knowledge pertinent to the rights of all nations in common with America as they may be concerned by the proceedings of the peace conference.

To Show War Aims.

In this spirit the president has asked Colonel House to survey the field of military, naval and political conditions in the countries of our enemies and our friends; to get at the economic, political and emotional state of things in every country, and to tell frankly to Great Britain, Russia, France, Italy and the neutral powers the things that we are doing and that we intend to do in the war. Moreover, an attempt will be made to lift the heavy curtain of censorship in Germany and Austria-Hungary, in order to spread among their peoples a comprehension of American war aims and potentialities.

Officials are anxious that no impression should be created, as a result of Colonel House's appointment, of any intention to start peace negotiations in the near future. So far as the attitude of the United States is concerned, the president's reply to the pope still remains the unaltered view of the government here.

The appointment of Colonel House is recognition by the government of the fact that the adjustment of peace terms will be a very complicated proceeding. Many points of dispute must be settled. Questions of all sorts, economic, political, and historical, will come up for discussion, and the American delegates must be forearmed with a mass of information and statistical data to meet every situation.

No data concerning present conditions in Germany or Austria will come within the scope of Colonel House's work, as this would come under "military information."

GARFIELD FIXES COAL PRICES

Fuel Administrator Announces Final Decision, Which Will Be Binding on All Dealers.

Washington.—Fuel Administrator Garfield announced regulations, effective at once, for the limitation of the retail prices of bituminous and anthracite coal throughout the country.

The fuel administration has fixed, in the conclusions arrived at, not the specific price which the retail dealer will be allowed to charge the consumer, but the gross margin which the retail dealer will be allowed to add to the average wholesale cost of his coal in making retail prices.

The retail dealer will be allowed to sell coal to the consumer at a price representing an advance of not more than 30 per cent over the retail gross margin of 1915. In no case, however, is the gross margin from now on to exceed the gross margin of July, 1917.

If, for example, a retail coal dealer bought a particular kind of coal in 1915 at an average of $2 a ton and sold it to the consumer at $3 a ton, his gross margin was $1. Dr. Garfield now allows him to add 30 per cent to this amount, making his gross margin for 1917 $1.30, provided that is not in excess of his gross margin in July last.

If the retail dealer now pays an average of $3 for the same kind of coal he will be allowed to sell it to the consumer for not more than $4.30 a ton.

Doctor Garfield selected 1915 as a normal coal production year.

BROKEN DOWN IN HEALTH

Woman Tells How $5 Worth of Pinkham's Compound Made Her Well.

Lima, Ohio.—"I was all broken down in health from a displacement. One of my lady friends came to see me and she advised me to commence taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I began taking your remedies and took $5.00 worth and in two months was a well woman after three doctors said I never would stand up straight again. I was a midwife for seven years and I recommended the Vegetable Compound to every woman to take before birth and afterwards, and they all got along so nicely that it surely is a godsend to suffering women. If women wish to write to me I will be delighted to answer them."—Mrs. JENNIE MOYER, 822 E. North St., Lima, Ohio.

Women who suffer from displacements, weakness, irregularities, nervousness, backache, or bearing-down pains, need the tonic properties of the roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Submarine Improvements.

Since April 1 German submarines have been equipped with four new devices which increase their destructiveness, and render it more difficult for chasers to discover their whereabouts. Formerly the U-boats, to remain in one spot, had to come to the surface, or anchor themselves to the bottom; but four small pumps are now used which enable them to remain stationary while submerged. This not only conserves fuel, but prevents its enemies from hearing the throb of the submarine's propellers. Telescopic periscopes give further assistance to the submarine in concealing its position. A mixture of oxygen and strained gas is now used in the engines, and the exhaust is washed free of smoke and broken into small bubbles, which do not leave a wake. Finally, new listening devices enable it to hear and judge the size of ships at a considerable distance.—Exchange.

INDIANA MARKET HIGHWAYS NAMED

Five Routes Are Fixed by the State Highway Commission.

TOTAL MILEAGE ABOUT 800

Two of the Highways Meet in Indianapolis and One Road Runs North and South—Four of the Highways Run East and West.

Indianapolis.—The state highway commission, after months of traveling over Indiana roads and many meetings in various districts, announced the first main market highways that have been officially designated. A former selection of four of the five routes was tentative, and although the general directions of the four roads announced formerly have been adhered to in the official selection, many changes have been made.

One main market highway, under the official designation, runs from north to south, three are east and west roads from the Ohio state line to the Illinois state line, and one is an east and west road in the southwestern part of the state. The three main east and west roads are in the northern, southern and central parts of the state, respectively. The main north and south road and the central east and west road cross each other in Indianapolis.

Total Mileage About 800.

The total mileage of the routes is approximately 800 miles, according to W. S. Moore, state highway engineer. The commission's announcement follows:

"The following main market highways have been officially designated by the state highway commission:

"No. 1. The highway beginning at the Indiana and Michigan state line, thence southerly through South Bend, Plymouth, Rochester, Peru, Kokomo, Westfield, Carmel, Indianapolis, Franklin, Columbus, Seymour, Scottsburg, Sellersburg, New Albany and Jeffersonville.

"No. 2. The highway passing through the northern part of the state, beginning at the Illinois and Indiana state line, thence easterly through Dyer, Valparaiso, Laporte, South Bend, Goshen and Fort Wayne, via the Lincoln highway to the Ohio and Indiana state line.

"No. 3. The highway crossing the central part of the state, commonly called the old national road trail, beginning at the corner of the Illinois and Indiana state line, thence easterly through Terre Haute, Brazil, Putnamville, Plainfield, Indianapolis, Greenfield, Knightstown, Cambridge City and Richmond to the Ohio and Indiana state line.

Beginning at Evansville.

"No. 4. The road crossing the southern part of the state beginning at Evansville, thence easterly through Boonville, Huntingburg, Jasper, West Baden, Paoli, Mitchell, Bedford, Seymour, North Vernon, Versailles, Dillsboro, Aurora and Lawrenceburg, to the Ohio and Indiana state line.

"No. 5. The road connecting Vincennes and Mitchell, via Wheatland, Washington, Loogootee and Shoals."

The total mileage of the roads represents less than one-half of the total 2,000 miles of "main market highways" which the commission may designate, under the new state highway commission law, prior to 1921.

Bureau of Statistics No More.

The Indiana bureau of statistics, which has been in existence for 38 years, has passed into oblivion. With it went also the five Indiana free employment bureaus, one each at Indianapolis, Evansville, Fort Wayne, Terre Haute and South Bend. It was all done in a jiffy at the last legislature when the appropriation bill, passed at the last moment, went through with the following 13 words inserted:

"The bureau of statistics is hereby abolished from and after October 1, 1917."

That was all there was to it at that time. Henry A. Roberts, who was elected by the people as chief of the bureau, is out in the cold as far as a state office is concerned. With the chief goes also five employees in his office and a superintendent and secretary at each of the free employment bureaus here and outstate. Sixteen persons in all are out in the cold.

However, it was promised Mr. Roberts that he would be cared for and appointed to some other office equally as good or better. The bureau office paid $3,000 a year. Also it was believed last winter that some sort of an arrangement could be made whereby the free employment bureaus might continue, perhaps under the state industrial board or by some other arrangement not yet worked out.

Vocational Education.

The program for vocational education in Indiana includes the following: Under vocational agriculture, the program points out that the instruction is to be given persons over fourteen years old and under twenty-five years old, who are preparing for or have entered on the occupation of farming. The kind and amount of equipment to be used in this sort of schools is to be determined by the subjects taught and the number of students, but a minimum of $125 for a four years' course for class of 15 is established.

Agricultural Agents Exempted.

The Third district appeal board, which considers appeals for exemption from military service, has exempted Ralph M. Gilbert, county agricultural agent for Hendricks county. The board asserted that the services of agricultural agents are so necessary to the farming interests of the state and nation that their services as agents will be more helpful to the government probably than they would be as soldiers in the field.

Gilbert appealed to the district board on the ground that he is engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Government to Refund.

The dismissal of a six-year-old suit by the Union Traction company of Indiana against the federal internal revenue department to recover $1,543.95, paid as excise tax in 1911, is expected to be followed soon by the dismissal of three similar suits. The government will refund the tax to the Union Traction company in the settlement of its suit, and similar settlement probably will be made in the other cases.

The three pending suits are by the Indianapolis Street Railway company to recover $11,800; the Indianapolis & Northwestern Traction company to recover $697.17, and the Terre Haute Traction and Light company to recover $4,586.82.

These taxes were levied under the corporation tax bill of 1909, and payments were made under protest by the corporations, which contended they were not doing business and were not subject to tax.

Since the filing of the suit, the supreme court has held that ownership is not necessarily doing business, and this ruling knocks out the Indiana cases.

Federal authorities say that the income tax amendment to the Constitution now brings the government the revenue that would have come from the old excise tax.

Road Fund Melon Sliced.

The slicing of a $976,316.91 melon to be divided among the 92 counties of Indiana took place in the office of the secretary of state. It was the July semiannual distribution of the road fund accumulated out of the proceeds of the operation of the Indiana motor vehicle law.

The counties share equally in one-third of the fund. Another third is divided among the counties in proportion to the number of miles of free gravel and macadam roads they have, compared with the whole number of such roads in the state. The other third goes to the counties in proportion to the amount they contributed in the way of registration tax.

The sums to go to each county are as follows:

Service Board Refunds Money.

The Indiana public service commission, according to an announcement from E. I. Lewis, the chairman, turned back into the state treasury at the end of the state's fiscal year, Saturday, September 29, a total of approximately $50,000 from the appropriation for the fiscal years of 1916-1917. Credit for the reverting of this sum does not lie entirely with the present reorganization commission, Mr. Lewis pointed out. He said that part of the credit is due the former commission presided over by Thomas Duncan.

ALLIES ARE ON ROAD TO VICTORY

SECRETARY OF WAR BAKER MAKES STATEMENT REGARDING SITUATION.

BRITISH FORCES DECISIVE

Defeats Inflicted Upon Germans During the Past Fortnight Is Conclusive Indications of Allied Superiority.

Washington, Oct. 8.—Decisive ascendency for the allies in the supreme test of battle strength now taking place on the bloody fields of Flanders, is claimed by Secretary Baker in a weekly review of war operations issued yesterday by the war department. While it may be premature, to assert that the British war machine has forced a decision over the Germans, Mr. Baker says the victories of the last fortnight, threatening the German submarine bases on the Belgian coast are conclusive indications of allied superiority. With favorable weather, he thinks, these victories will be repeated and extended. The review which is for the week ended Saturday, makes no reference to the American forces in France or to the great preparations for war going forward at home. "The attention of the world is focussed on the titanic struggle now going on in Flanders," begins the statement, which, after reciting that the British launched a great offensive after sustaining German attacks, continues in part:

"Slowly, but the more irresistible, the allied drive at the heart of the German lone in the west is sweeping onward. The Germans have massed their greatest war strength along this battle front. To attack them at their strongest point of resistance is sound strategy. Defeat inflicted upon them during the past fortnight are conclusive indications of allied superiority. In the light of past experiences, it may be premature to asser that the British have succeeded in forcing a decision, but it may be stated with emphasis that in no engagement hitherto has such vigor, energy and concerted speed of action been displayed.

"The full success of these operations means that the Belgian coast, with its numerous submarine bases, will become untenable to the enemy. Zeebrugge, Ostend and the system of canals leading out of Bruges are threatened.

"The supreme test of the battle strength of the contending belligerents is taking place. Allied ascendency would appear decisive.

"The two immediate contributing factors of this success are air control and shell supply.

"The former made it possible for the allies to locate enemy concentrations, the latter to break them up before they could develop into serious offensive actions, as the same time permitting their own concentration of guns to be carried out with clock work regularity, unhampered by enemy interference.

"The British are thus able to report that since July 31, last, they have not lost a single gun, while they have captured 332 field and heavy guns and taken 51,435 prisoners. During the fighting of the past two days they have added 4,446 prisoners, including 114 officers to this imposing total.

"The enemy realizes the danger he is facing. We may expect him to counter attack in force. He may even regain certain secondary objective temporarily, but the British war machine is moving forward and if time permits and the combat season remains open, with the weather continuing favorable for reconnoisance and careful aircraft observation, the allied victories of the past two weeks will in all probability be repeated and extended.

"The enemy pressure along the eastern front has been relieved by the strong allied offensive in Flanders. No engagements of more than local importance are reported in the east.

The German advance in the northeast has apparently weakened and the Russians have been able to reorganize their positions in the Riga sector."

The review sketches briefly the week's news from other fronts, with the comment that reports from the Russian front is more encouraging.

Joliet Strike Settled.

Chicago, Oct. 8.—The strike of the employes of the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern railroad, who went out two weeks ago, was settled last night at a conference in South Chicago. On a plea of patriotism and an immediate consideration of their claims the men have returned to work.

Dear Folks,

I am now up at the Y. M. C. A., and as I received a letter from you this evening, I will try and answer it at this time as I do not find so much time to do writing as I used to.

There is a large crowd of fellows here to-night. They are singing short extracts of Patriotic songs that are perhaps new to you, so I am sending you a copy, to let you see the spirit in which we soldier boys view the Army affairs. It surely sends a thrill through a fellow to be in a bunch of a couple of hundred bass and tenors and have them sing them out with a spirit that shows there is a deep set purpose in the heart of each one. There is a special song director that has charge of the singing, and he is certainly fine. Many of the songs bring back thoughts of home and loved ones and makes us realize that we are here for a cause, and that it is our duty to put forth our utmost effort to bring about the termination of that for which we are now striving, mainly the end of the war, but not until we have achieved the coveted goal of a free demonacy for the oppressed countries, to whom we are now acting in the capacity of a very big brother.

When we boys read of how the people back home are doing all they can for us through the Red Cross and other agencies, it brings tears of joy to our eyes just to realize that practically all the folks of our immediate neighborhood are in earnest sympathy with the cause in which we are enlisted.

You can't imagine what nice weather we are having here. It is true the nights are rather uncomfortably cool, but we each are supplied with three heavy blankets, and a heavy mattress, and some of us have been so lucky as to receive "Mary Anns" (or comforters) from home, and they help to keep out the chill night air. We usually shiver through the dressing exercise, and for an hour or so after breakfast, bnt by ten o'clock it is nice and warm, and by the middle of the afternoon, if we happen to be working, usually a few traces of perspiration make their appearance upon our countenances.

Things are pretty busy around Ft. Myer these days. The R. O. T. C. Camp is in full swing grinding out officers for the drafted men; the 6th. F. A., is now located here; and the 3rd. F. A., has to help both the others drill and at the same time allow them to use all our material and horses while trying to drill ourselves. It is certainly some job too. But things move along quite smoothly.

Next Saturday all three Batteries of the second Battalion of the 3rd. F. A. go on a week's hike. It is for the purpose of securing subcaliber practice and pistol shooting. It will have been the first real practice in actual shooting that has been done by us since we joined the 3rd. F. A. We will camp out in little "dog" tents that are only about 2½ feet high, scarcely room for 2 fellows to occupy comfortably with all their equipment. We place our slickers on the ground, put one blanket on that, and spread two over us. We were issued overcoats a few days ago to be used in case it should suddenly turn colder. The requisition for winter clothing has been put in, but we have as yet not received it, still being clad in our thin summer clothing.

For the past several weeks, Place, Haifley and myself have been attending the church socials given each Saturday evening at the First Presbyterian Church in Washington. Games are played, songs sung, a short program usually rendered, and refreshments served. On Sundays, the other two boys not having any duties to detain them, go back over in the morning to Sunday School and church, and are usually invited out to some kind old gentleman's house for dinner; he saying that as he has no son to give to the Army, he wants to help some way, so he takes this method of showing his sympathy for the war and the U. S., he being a German by birth but now American. I can't get away in the morning, so am consequently deprived of that pleasure, but I always join them in the evening, when we attend C. E., and church which so far have been combined in one service. Haifley lead C. E. one week ago last Sunday night, and I am to lead one week from next Sunday night. They say we are their adopted boys, and they treat us just like we were their own church members and boys. You can't begin to realize to what extent it helps to fill up the vacancy made by the necessary absence from our own religious services at home. Their minister is a fine old gentleman, and has a very winning personality.

Last evening we attended a wedding reception there for their Sunday school superintendent. He is a rather old man, bald-headed, and only has one arm, but nevertheless he is one of the most well thought of men by his congregation that I have ever seen, and by the size of the turn out last night, it was easy to see that all were very much interested in his welfare and all wished him and his bride all the joys of life.

I suppose that every one is hard at work in school now, that has to go. I thought of what was happening back in old Indiana last Monday morning, and tried to imagine just how every school room looked at 8:30. It made me feel rather lonesome, and I must confess a little bit down-hearted to think of all the years I had been connected with school affairs, and now to be completely shut out of all of them. But as we have often remarked to one another, we boys consider that we are now attending the greatest school of our lives, one in which we are getting all that is our due, and one in which a person cannot help but be bettered if he only awaits his opportunity and seizes it when it thus presents itself. We come in contact with all classes of people here, and find that though most of them are a careless, indifferent lot, still lying buried far beneath the rough exterior, is a heart filled with love for their home folks, and a desire to help out a fellow comrade in trouble, even to the last cent. And let me tell you when pay day comes around, it is always hailed with great rejoicing by all the boys, because it is very few that are not broke, and if not completely broken, they are pretty badly bent financially. But there are so many fine sights and entertainments to be seen here, and we consider this the chance of a life time to see them, so we usually use our money for this purpose.

It is getting late, so I must close for this time. I would like to hear rom anybody who will kindly take the time to drop a line.

Hoping this finds everyone as well and in as good spirits as it leaves us, I remain as ever,

Your loving son,
Willie G. Woodcox.

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh atan alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

MARRIES LIEUTENANT FEW HOURS BEFORE HE LEAVES.

A journey of the bride-to-be halfway across the continent and a hurried wedding in Chicago Thursday night were part of a war romance that preceded the departure of the One-Hundredth and fiftieth field artillery, formerly the First Indiana artillery, from Fort Benjamin Harrison at Indianapolis for Mineola, L. I.

The bridegroom was Lieutenant George Nixon, of Battery C, of Lafayette. He was married to Miss Ethel Forbes, of Los Angeles.

Lieutenant Nixon and Miss Forbes have been engaged for some time. Recently he received information that if they were married he could have his wife follow him to New York. He was unable to go to her home because the date of departure was so near, so he telegraphed to her to come east. They met in Chicago.

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

DEKALB COUNTY TAXPAYERS CARRY BIG BURDEN IN AID TO 519 DEPENDENT AND NEEDY PERSONS.

Union Township Has a Rate of Six Cents on the $100 for Poor Alone —Large Number Confined in State Penal Institutions.

A total of 519 persons of DeKalb county received aid from the county during the year 1916, according to statistics just compiled by the state board of charities and corrections.

The county paid out for the care and aid of dependents $5,811.50 and for the keeping of prisoners in the state penal farm institutions $3,664.44. Of the dependents cared for at the expense of the taxpayers of DeKalb county 255 are males and 264 are females.

quite large sums were expended by the township trustees of DeKalb county in the aid of the poor and needy. Union township leads the list with a tax levy for charitable purposes of seven cents per hundred dollars valuation. Keyser township follows with five cents; Newville with three; Franklin and Grant, two; Butler, Concord, Jackson, Smithfield, Spencer and Wilmington one; and Troy, Fairfield and Stafford have none.

Added to the amount expended by the county, the amount given by citizens of the county for charitable purposes, reaches a large sum. The Auburn Relief association alone expends considerable money each year in aiding needy families with food and clothing.

Nineteen State Institutions.

There are nineteen different state institutions under the supervision of the state board of charities and DeKalb county has representatives in nearly all of them. The following is a list of the state institutions:

Central Hospital for Insane, Indianapolis.

Northern Hospital for Insane, Logansport.

Eastern Hospital for Insane, Richmond.

Southern Hospital for Insane, Evansville.

Southeastern Hospital for Insane, North Madison.

Soldiers' Home, Lafayette.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, Knightstown.

School for Feeble Minded Youth, Fort Wayne.

Village for Epileptics, Newcastle.

State School for the Deaf, Indianapolis.

Indiana School for the Blind, Indianapolis.

Tuberculosis Hospital, Rockville.

Robert W. Long Hospital, Indianapolis.

Indiana State's Prison, Michigan City.

Indiana Reformatory, Jeffersonville.

Indiana Womans' Prison Indianapolis.

Indiana Boys' School, Plainfield.

Indiana Girls' School, Indianapolis.

Indiana State Farm, Greencastle.

Decrease Over 1915.

During the year, 75,763 persons in Indiana received help from the township overseers of the poor. The aid given them amounted to $391,111.66. Compared with 1915, there was a decrease of 21,529 in the number of persons helped and a decrease of $44,378.22 in the amount of relief.

More Women Than Men.

Of the whole number of persons aided, 37,210 were men and boys, 38,553 were women and girls—49 per cent. males and 51 per cent. females. The children under 17 years of age numbered 39,357. They were about equally divided as to sex. Those between the ages of 17 and 60 years were 29,830, or 39 per cent. In this group there were more women than men, 15,998 women and 13,832 men. Those over 60 years of age, numbering 6247, constituting a little more than 8 per cent.

While under the law the bills for poor relief are paid from the county funds, the counties are eventually reimbursed by the trustees through a tax levied upon the property of the townships. The method prescribed by statute is for the county council to appropiate the amount deemed necessary and for the county commissioners to audit and pay the bills as they are presented by the trustees accompanied with full reports concerning the persons aided.

In September of each year the county auditor must report to the commissioners the amount paid out for each township during the preceding nine months together with an estimate of what will be needed in the remaining three months and this forms the basis for levying the township tax. If the township authorities fail to make the levy it becomes the duty of the county auditor to make it. This has been the law since 1897. It is a matter of record that 435, or 43 per cent. of the township trustees found it necessary, in 1898, to make a levy of five cents or more on each one hundred dollars of taxable property, many of the levies being about twenty and even thirty cents. In 1916 a levy of five cents or more was found necessary in but 121 or 11.9 per cent. of the townships.

On the other hand, in 1898, sixty-four or 6 per cent. of the townships made no levy on account of poor relief; in 1916, this record was held by 286 or 28 per cent. of the townships.

WILL BEQUEATHS FARM AS HOME FOR STATE BIRDS.

By the terms of the will of Mrs. Margaret F. Davis, widow of the late Dr. Herbert Davis, who resided in Delaware county near the Randolph county line, a farm of 385 acres in Randolph county, is bequeathed to the state of Indiana "as a home for the birds of Indiana."

The donation to the state became known Friday when the will was filed in the Delaware circuit court for probation. The aged couple's interest in the relief of mankind also is taken into consideration for. a clause provides that should the state so desire it may establish upon the farm a state medical laboratory. The provisions of the will recite that all the trees on the farm shall be preserved except those that may be decaying, the forests to be the permanent home of the song birds of Indiana.

The will provides that if any oil is found on the farm, it shall be used on the highways in the county. The testator also bequeaths to Pekin university at Pekin, China, a trust fund from the sale of ninety-two acres in Randolph county. The trustees are to use only the interest from the fund. Two other farms and some city property are bequeathed to surviving relatives.

Abruptly the door to Craven's room flew open with an echoing bang, and she heard him call her in a voice instinct with mortal terror.

Startled, she turned and ran into the adjoining room, pulling up with a cry at sight of her father. His face, a stricken mask, mottled, ghastly; sweat stood out upon his forehead, his lips trembled, his eyes sick with fear. The hinges of his knees loosened, he swayed.

In one quivering hand he held a playing card—a knave of diamonds.

He enunciated with difficulty, "Wha—what—" With a half frantic gesture he tore at his collar. "Where did that come from?" he cried hoarsely. "How—how did it get in that d— box?"

He made a strangled sound, reeled, and fell back heavily into a chair, the card fluttering from his grasp to rest face upward at his feet.

"Daddy, what can I do? What's the matter? If only you'd speak to me!" Kneeling at her father's side in a passion of anxiety, she fondled a hand inert and frightfully cold.

His position unchanged, Craven wore every indication of complete physical collapse. A hand—his left—clutched at his coat, above the heart.

But as Lydia moved to rise and telephone for the hotel physician the man stirred. His lips quivered. She bent near to catch their whisper:

"Brandy!"

"I'll order it at once."

But his fingers, knitted with hers, restrained her with singular strength and insistence. "No—flask on my bureau—"

"Yes, dearest. Let me go and get it, won't you?"

"No—let me—all right now."

He managed to lift head and shoulders from the chair; then again collapsed, his fingers relaxing.

The bureau top in his bedchamber was littered with a confusion of articles turned out haphazard from Craven's dressing case. For a moment Lydia searched the disarray, at a loss to single out anything resembling a flask. Then a low cry of stupefaction escaped her: in a clear space to one side the puzzle box lay open.

In its shallow oblong drawer, upon a layer of cotton wool, blazed the pearl and diamond collar stolen from Mrs. Merrilees—or the imitation?

But immediately the mystery and the wonder of this was lost in her solicitude, and, another glance discovering a small leather-bound flask, she seized it and ran back to the other room.

Craven's eyes were open and, she fancied, informed with a look of almost frightened inquiry as she unstoppered the flask, dashed a generous amount of brandy into a glass, and turned toward a silver water pitcher. But his husky whisper stayed her hand.

"No—straight—"

She put the glass to his lips, inverting it slowly while he gulped and spluttered.

"More!" he demanded with his first free breath. "A little water—"

After this second draft, which he drank unaided, he seemed more himself. For the first time he ceased to clutch his side; a little color crept back into his face. He remained silent, however, his gaze bent upon the knave of diamonds at his feet, his countenance darkly perplexed.

At length Lydia ventured anew, "What is it, daddy? Can't you tell me?"

"Heart," he muttered, "an old affection. Nothing to worry about; but that card keeled me over—rather!"

"But what—what does it mean?"

"You wouldn't understand. It's something secret, a code signal to me to—I wasn't expecting it in the box—"

That thought he left unfinished, mumbling something indistinguishable. But his eyes flashed toward his daughter's face, then were quickly averted.

"In the box with the necklace, you mean?" Lydia prompted evenly.

He wouldn't reply directly. "Gave me devil of a shock!" After a moment of silence he cried out in accents of exasperation, "But how in the name of God did it ever get there?"

A knock checked Lydia's reply. With a start Craven pulled himself together and rose.

"Mustn't let the waiter see me like this. You let him in—will you?"

He managed a slow but unwavering return to his room. When he was out of sight Lydia turned to the door, admitting the waiter with his heavy tray, signed for the meal, and tipped and dismissed the man.

CHAPTER XII.

The door had barely closed when Craven returned, now at least outwardly quite himself again. He brought with him the puzzle box, still open, the necklace exposed on its bed of cotton wool.

"You saw this in there just now, of course. I wonder," he mused, with a hint of remorse, "what you must have thought?"

"I thought," she told him stoutly, "what I still think: That you owe me an explanation."

"That's so; but first I'd like to get at this matter of the card—"

"Father," Lydia interrupted, a heightened color glowing in her cheeks, "are you still feeling ill?"

He questioned her with a look of surprise. "No," he said slowly. "I'm all right now—I presume. Why?"

"Then I think I must insist on your explanation. You forget how you've treated me—how you've deceived me, made me an accessory to a mean crime, how you've hurt me, shamed me—"

Checking her with a gesture and a word eloquent of deep pain, "Please!" he sighed desolately, dropped into a chair, and drew a hand wearily across his face. "Perhaps you're right; and I feel I owe you an apology even more than an explanation. Well, the fact is, I couldn't resist Betty. She was determined to smuggle, and she won me over; and, sure they'd catch her if anything was attempted in the usual way, I hit on the scheme of using you without your knowledge. Being an alien, you were too facile a convenience to be resisted. God forgive me—I lied to my girl!"

"But why need you have kept it up? Only a little while ago you were telling me how easily a thief might have secured the counterfeit—"

"That wasn't altogether fancy, you know," he insisted—as if a substratum of truth could mend the breach between them! "Betty herself used the counterfeit to fool the inspectors."

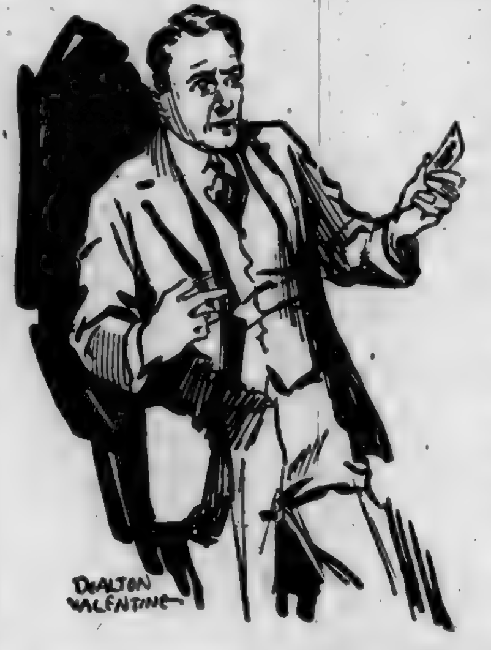
He bent forward and picked up the knave of diamonds, frowning thoughtfully.

"Is that all you have to say to me?" the girl persisted.

"What more can I say?" he expostulated, aggrieved. "I'm sorry. I deeply regret having deceived you. I apologize! What more do you want?"

Lydia gave a gesture of despair. "Nothing, I suppose—unless you will answer me one question honestly. Are you or are you not in the English secret service?"

Craven's face darkened. "My dear girl," he said slowly, "are you sure you've any right to talk to me in this tone? Admitting my actions may seem unusual in your eyes. I'm your father, and not answerable to you. Neither do I concede your right to—ah—tear a passion to tatters—"



In One Quivering Hand He Held a Playing Card—a Knave of Diamonds.

Too deeply moved for speech or tears, Lydia watched him with eyes of profound despondency.

"Well, what about this card? I've satisfied you, haven't I? How much longer do you mean to keep me waiting?" And now he must lash himself into an insensate rage!

"No longer," Lydia told him quietly. "I'm quite ready to tell you what little I know. And then perhaps you'll tell me whether Downing street employs Mr. Southpaw Smith, card sharper, and why—"

"Good heaven!" The exclamation was one of uncontrollable dismay. Unconsciously, perhaps, he clutched the edge of the table for support, and again his left hand stole toward his heart. "What's that you say? Smith! What do you know about him? What has he to do with this?"

"If you'll listen to me—"

Subsiding into a chair, Craven listened apathetically and without interruption to his daughter's succinct story of the attack and robbery, Quoin's intervention and recovery of the puzzle box.

She watched him as closely. Was he merely acting again? What was really working in the mind behind those inscrutable eyes?

"That's all I know," she concluded. "How the card got into the box I can't say—unless this man Smith put it there when he replaced the necklace at Mr. Quoin's direction. I presume a card sharper would have sleight of hand enough to do that undetected."

"It couldn't be worse," said Craven huskily, fingering the knave of diamonds.

He rose, moved unsteadily to the center table, and helped himself to the remainder of the brandy.

"You should have told me first thing," he mumbled.

"If you hadn't misled me, I shouldn't have hesitated an instant, father; but I was silly enough—it seems—to hope that by saying nothing I might ward off danger from you."

"Yes," he agreed simply, "it would have been better if I'd told you the truth. But then, of course, you wouldn't have consented to bring the stuff in. And how was I to know they were watching me so closely? How did they guess I'd—"

"'They'?"

He gave her a sullen glance. "Smith and Colonel Gordon. Gordon's the other crook's name—if Quoin forgot to tell you. Curse it! Why didn't you tell me this first?"

"Why? What difference—"

"No difference," he grumbled. "Too late: now mischief's done!" He withdrew into morose contemplation of the knave of diamonds.

"What have such men to do with the secret service?" Lydia demanded abruptly.

"With the—ah—secret service?" He looked up blankly. "Why—nothing whatever! What makes you ask?"

"Then what were they after when they attacked me? Not the 'evidence' you talked about?"

"My dear child! What do you suppose? What but the loot—that necklace? They've been hot on Betty's trail from the moment it became known she had bought the thing from Cottier's."

"You confuse me so!" Lydia protested in bewilderment. "If they weren't connected with the secret service, if—if you had nothing whatever to do with them, why are you so afraid of them?"

"I? But—my dear child," Craven said indulgently, "you're quite mistaken. I'm no more afraid of them than of—well—say Mr. Collector Loeb."

Seated across the table from him, resting her elbows upon it, Lydia regarded her father with an expression in which were blended amazement, stupefaction, misery and uncertainty.

If Craven read her look, he refused to acknowledge it. With an air of thorough satisfaction he rose and, taking up the puzzle box, shut it with a snap, its treasure undisturbed.

Her eyes followed the puzzle box, which Craven was slipping into the side pocket of his coat, with an expression he was quick to interpret.

"This goes to Betty Merrilees as fast as a taxicab can take it," he announced promptly. "In fact, I stopped in only to get it on my way uptown."

"I'm glad of that," said Lydia, listlessly tracing an empty pattern on the table.

"If I'm late, don't fret about me, please. I'm quite all right now. Chances are I sha'n't have another turn like tonight's in several—"

A knock sounded on the door. He broke off with a start, and for half a minute stood moveless and silent, his mouth ajar, his eyes transfixed; then, recollecting himself, he said almost nonchalantly:

"Mind answering that? If it's anybody for me, say I'm out."

As Lydia rose he swung sharply back into his bedchamber. When she turned back from the door she saw him poised alertly just within the threshold, his right hand buried in his coat pocket.

"A note for you—wants an answer. The bellboy's waiting."

With a nervous gesture Craven advanced and took the envelope, his breath quickening and brows clouding as he conned the superscription—his name in ink and the room number in blue pencil. But for several seconds he seemed to hesitate. Then abruptly he ripped it open.

And this time he seemed to have been prepared; for he manifested no untoward emotion when he drew from the envelope a single playing card, the knave of clubs.

Drawing a deep breath, which might have been a sigh of relief, Craven deliberately tossed the card face upward on the table. "You'll notice a pin puncture in the stem of the club, beneath the small J," he observed coolly. "That means one of my agents, on urgent business."

"I'll stay in my room with the door shut," Lydia volunteered.

"No—wasn't thinking of that: merely wondering if you could. You see, I'm likely to be detained by this chap—can't tell how long." He consulted his watch, frowning. "After ten now; I can't well call on Betty much later. How would you like to take a taxi to the Margrave, and give her this confounded collar?"

He could have made no suggestion more shrewdly calculated. In a breath Lydia's countenance lightened and her eyes grew animated.

"Oh, if I may!"

"Why not? You'll be perfectly safe. It's no great distance, nobody knows you have the collar, and Betty'll be glad to see you. You might stop with her till I call for you—if you don't mind being made an excuse of."

"Yes," she agreed, breathless. "I'll be glad."

"Then jump into your hat and coat and— Half a minute! I wonder would you mind running another errand for me?"

"Of course not."

"It's only a few blocks out of your way, and won't delay you longer than to deliver a note and get an answer. I'll write the note now—two lines will do."

"I'll hurry," Lydia promised, dashing off into her bedchamber.

When she returned, ready for the street, Craven was folding down the flap of an envelope blank save for the figures in ink, "98." "I'm suppressing the address," he said, smiling mysteriously, "because this is official business. That, however, is the number of the house; the street you'll have to carry in your memory, East Seventy-sixth, also the name, Mrs. Ellsworthy, one of our most valued agents. Hand this to her personally, and ask for an answer. I'll join you at Betty's about eleven-thirty; earlier if possible. Now the Margrave—but every chauffeur in the town knows where that is."

Holland's Great Dikes.

One of the great dikes of Holland is 40 miles long, starting far up in the country, near the Yssel river, and continuing across the Hook of Holland to the sea. It was built in sections, and for seven centuries has held back the waters from the low-lying fields. It is 40 feet broad at the base, 85 feet broad at the top, and its height varies from 25 to 85 feet.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 14.

RETURNING FROM CAPTIVITY.

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 1.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad. —Psalms 126:3.

Israel went into captivity because of her sins. The time of her disciplinary process was about to end, as its purpose was now accomplished: namely, the cure of Israel's idolatry. Ever since the Babylonian captivity the Hebrew people have been worshipers of the one God. Monotheism has stood forth as a vital characteristic. The main reason for the Jews' maintenance of racial identity in spite of their national dislocation and the breaking up of their social ties, is the unity of their faith, around the one God.

I. The Proclamation of Cyrus (vv. 1-4).

(1) The Time of (v. 1). The first year of Cyrus; that is the first year after his conquest of Babylon.

(2) How It Was Brought About (v. 1). The Lord stirred up his spirit. The Lord often uses very unlikely agents in the accomplishment of his purposes. There is nothing too hard for him. He can readily use a heathen king to accomplish his purpose. He can find a way of approach to any heart. Likely Daniel was the agent used to bring the matter to the king's attention. Daniel was still the influential prime minister of Babylon. From his study of the prophecies of Jeremiah (Jer. 25:12; Isa. 45:1; compare Daniel 9:2), he knew that the time was near for the return of the people to their own land, so he likely brought the matter to the attention of the king and persuaded him to thus favor his people.

(3) Its Contents (vv. 2-4).

(a) A confession of the true God (vv. 2, 3).

He acknowledges him to be the God of heaven, the Most High, the Supreme God, a God of goodness. He declared, "He has given me all the kingdoms of the earth," and that God had with authority laid upon him the charge of building him a house at Jerusalem.

(b) A Generous Permission to Israel (v. 3). All who desired to go up to Jerusalem and build the Lord's house were permitted to go. He even commanded the blessing of the Lord to be upon them.

(c) A Positive Co-Operation (v. 4). None were obliged to go up, but a positive obligation was laid upon those who did not go up to render assistance to those who did. They were to aid in the building of the house of God by giving money, beasts and goods. It was more than a free-will offering, an obligation in addition thereto. The obligation was even wider than the people of Israel. The heathen were asked to render aid.

II. Response to the Proclamation of Cyrus (vv. 5, 6).

(1) By Israel (v. 5). Strange to say the decree of Cyrus was not met with great enthusiasm. Only a small number, chiefly from Judah and Benjamin, returned (v. 5). For most of them it meant giving up business interests, for they had settled down to the regular callings of life. Besides the sacrifice of business interests it involved great risks as to the future. The entire company, including servants, was about fifty thousand (2:64). Of this company we note the following divisions; first, chiefs of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, that is magistrates; second, priests and Levites, leaders in religion; third, skillful artificers, head workmen.

(2) By Their Neighbors (v. 6). This response was apparently more hearty than that of the Jews themselves. Their neighbors gave freely of gold, silver, beasts and goods. God had not only graciously disposed the heart of Cyrus toward his people, but they found peculiar favor from their neighbors, so that their wants were abundantly supplied.

III. Restoration of the Sacred Vessels (vv. 7-11). These vessels had been carried away to Babylon many years before. Little did Nebuchadnezzar realize that he would put into safe keeping the vessels which would be needed at this time. They were carefully numbered and turned over to the proper officers. Except for their desecration in Belshazzar's feast, they were none the worst for having been carried away. These were brought up to Jerusalem from Babylon.

HERMIT SCULPTOR IS FOUND

Spends Time Modeling Little Masterpieces Which He Promptly Destroys Upon Completion.

There has been discovered at Cape Scott, one of the most solitary points in Vancouver island, by the chief engineer of the public works department of British Columbia, a sculptor who spends his time in modeling little masterpieces from lumps of clay and then destroying them, relates an exchange. He is A. F. Whittier, and he calls himself a "prospector." Living entirely alone, he has for the past two years been carrying out lonely investigations of mineral claims in his neighborhood. His sculptor's tools are of the simplest kind, and it is his habit to work with the same piece of clay, which weighs scarcely five pounds, but with that he has modeled scores of objects.

The government engineer found him just as he had completed a bust of the martyred British nurse, Edith Cavell. Mr. Whittier was about to destroy the work in order that he might use the clay for a miniature statue of his son, who was recently killed. He was, however, persuaded to part with the bust, which is to be auctioned in aid of the Red Cross funds.

A friend dropped in to say hello the other day—he had been in the Blue Ridge region for a few weeks. He brought this story:

A young native, a widower of a year, called at the shack of the father of a numerous family, and after beating about the bush for a while, asked the parent for his daughter's hand.

"So ye want to get hitched with Sal?" said the old man. "I dunno about it. Yer fust wife didn't last ye long. What are yer prospecks?"

"Fine!" asserted the suitor. "All the wimmen what sent their washin' to my first wife has promised to do the same by her successor, whoever she mout be. Oh, we'll git erlong all right!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

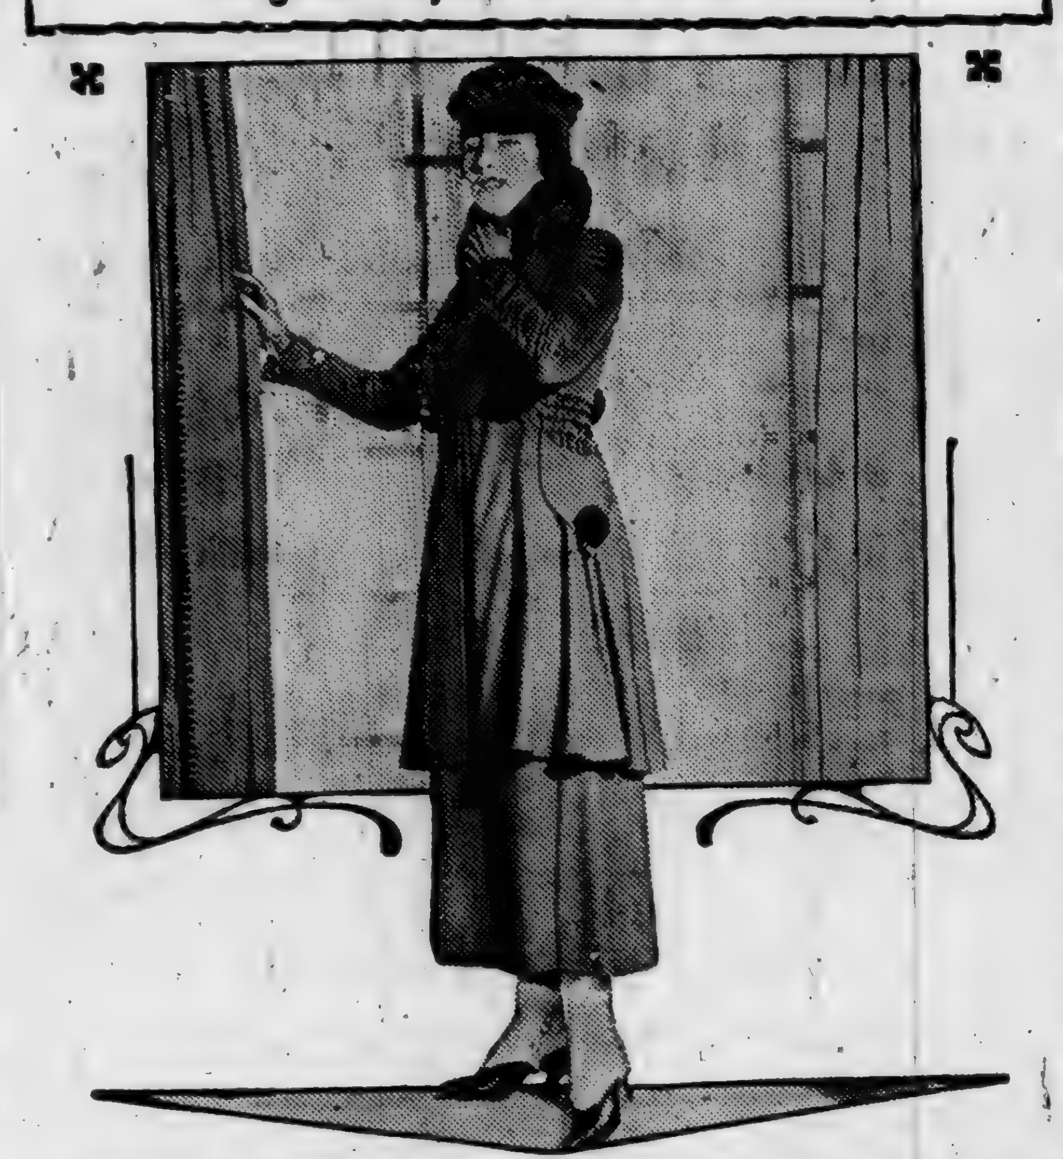
Original Styles in Tailored Suits

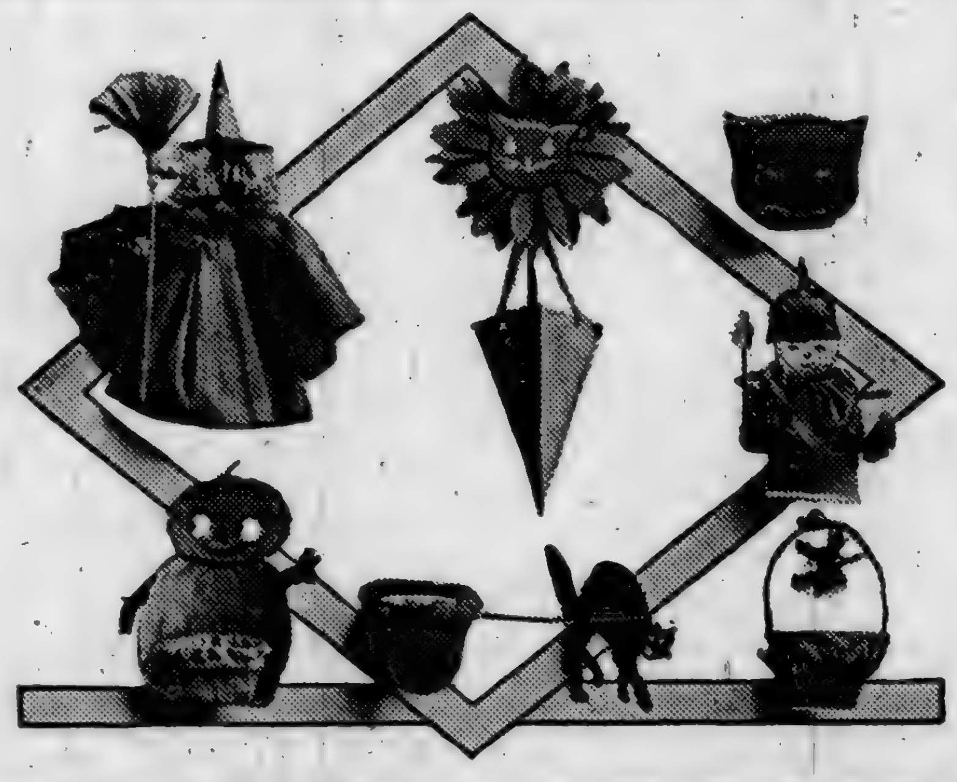


"Brilliant" is the word that best fits the new styles in tailored suits, however sedate the colors may be, in which these suits are developed. Besides the glove shades—beige, brown, tan, castor, taupe—there are rich tones of wine, Russian green, beet root, and amethyst, all at their best in the soft surfaces of fashionable weaves in wool. It seems that costumers cannot think of them without at the same time thinking of furs; for fur is everywhere on tailored suits and put on in the most original ways.

Everything conspires to make this season's formal suit an unqualified success, because the character of the new fabrics, their colors and fashionable trimmings are so well suited to one another. Designers appear to revel in them and have given us creations this fall that more than justify the loyalty of American women to the tailored suit.

Just one of many beautiful new models is pictured here, but it will convince the fortunate woman of today that the best art of the costumes is at her service. It is of Russian green broadcloth trimmed with French seal convertible collar and buttons and would be equally rich in amethyst, beet-root, taupe or wine. It is an achievement to be proud of and a possession to rejoice in, now that it is fashionable to be busy and nearly all our days are spent in street clothes. The skirt is quite plain and that term might also be used to describe the coat in which the tailor has relied upon originality of design and beautiful adjustment to the figure for the distinction he has given the finished garment.

Along Comes Hallowe'en



Are you going to give a Hallowe'en party? There is a lot of fun for everybody in celebrating this feast of nonsense; it is an indulgence that takes little time and money. The troop of spooks, witches, black cats, pumpkins and lanterns that make Hallowe'en a madly joyous festival for the youngsters has arrived on schedule time and all ready to set off the hour and table.

Some of this year's table decorations are shown in the picture above. They are made of crepe paper, plain cardboard and tissue paper, with a little help from pen and ink or water color paints. Fine wire and paste and a very narrow ribbon is needed for some of them and needle and thread for others.

The witch shown is supported by wire with a round piece of flat, white cardboard at one end for the face. About this wire others are twisted to form the arms and legs. The face is drawn with pen and ink and the hair made of white tissue paper cut into a fine fringe. At this stage of her career the uncanny lady may be fastened to a flat desk of cardboard by bending the wires which are to support her at the ends and sewing them to the board. She is clothed in a dress and cape of black crepe paper and has a hat made of plain black paper. The broom is made of wire, wound with narrow strips of yellow paper and a fringe of black paper. Ghosts are made in about the same way of white crepe paper.

A small yellow cardboard box to hold candy or nuts is suspended from a sunflower of yellow tissue paper (with a cat's face pasted over the center) by narrow yellow ribbons. A disk of white cardboard forms the foundation of this piece, with the ends of the ribbon, the flower petals and cat's face pasted to it.

All the small paper dishes for salted almonds or confections are made of yellow crepe paper parted over ready-made foundations. A dish of this kind may be transformed into a basket by adding a handle of wire wound with paper. A little covered candy box is shown with a small helmeted figure seated on the lid, holding a spear in his hand. He is merely a "lolly pop"—a stick with a dish of candy on one end—furnished with arms and legs of wire and dressed in yellow crepe paper. The candy is covered with wax paper whereon his good natured face is made with pen and ink.

For the Hallowe'en party there are paper table cloths and napkins that dress the table appropriately. The best of all center pieces is the old-fashioned jack-o-lantern made of a real pumpkin hollowed out and having eyes, nose and mouth cut through the rind.

Hatpins of Fur.

Hatpins have not been much in evidence for several years, but furriers are showing a hatpin that will serve as the only necessary ornament to the winter hat, says the Dry Goods Economist. This pin has a small head in the center surrounded with a circle of fur three or four inches in diameter. This may be had in various furs or combinations, to match the trimming of the suit.

Also in fur are the huge Pierrot buttons which will be used later in the winter to ornament the coats and suits. These buttons are two or three inches in diameter and may be had in different furs. Fur drops are also being shown for winter wear on coats and suits.

Wide Striped Stockings.

Perhaps the newest thing in stockings is the very wide stripe—from 1 inch to 1½ inches. These stripes run vertically and are made in many colors combined with white. Another new stocking shows a stripe formed by what we should ordinarily term a "run"—that is to say, the stripe looks simply as if the up and down threads of the stocking had been pulled up and left only the threads crosswise.

Goat Fur Is Liked.

A new fur is Mongolia, a long-haired and curly goat fur used by a few Paris designers on fall costumes. Unplucked beaver, with hair 2 inches long, lying flat on the fur, is also used, and has the effect of a dark and unusual fur trimming.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

"WHY KILL THE GOOSE?"

A cartoon issued by the publicity department of the liquor traffickers is entitled, "Why Kill the Goose?" says Prof. John A. Nichols in the Union Signal. It represents a fat goose, labelled, "Internal Revenue." Its three eggs are very conspicuous, but an ax marked, "Prohibition," is in dangerous proximity to its neck. Well, there are many reasons why the goose should be killed. In the first place, the cost of feeding it is too great. What would you think of a farmer that kept a flock of geese at a cost ten times greater than the amount realized from the eggs produced? If, when his attention had been called to the matter, he tried to defend his position by telling you how much he obtained from the sale of the eggs, and spoke of it as a profitable transaction, you would at once consider him a fit subject for some kind of mental treatment. For many years Uncle Sam has been that kind of farmer. But skillful mental treatment, in the form of scientific and economic facts, having been administered to him for some time, he is beginning to show signs of sanity, and we hope ere long this expensive and dangerous goose will no longer find pasture on Uncle Sam's farm.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITING.

From The State, daily newspaper of Columbia, in dry South Carolina, comes this testimony: "For weeks the city has been thronged, especially at night, with workingmen, many of them white and hundreds of them negroes, but there is little or no evidence of disorder and practically none of drunkenness in the streets.

"With the country engaged in war and with the nerves of the people at high tension, with money abundant, with soldiers better paid than ever before, with wages high and with an immense transient population, the Columbia of 1917 presents such a contrast to the Columbia of the Spanish-American war that those who remember that time could hardly believe it to be possible if they did not see it before their eyes.

"What the future of the whisky traffic shall be it is not worth while to discuss, but it is the simple truth that prohibition is prohibiting and the old argument to the contrary, so long relied on by the whisky dealers, is, for the present at least, discredited. Whoever says that prohibition will not prohibit is heard with derision."

POT CALLS KETTLE BLACK.

The Brewer and Malter: The reason why a beer saloon is a success is because a man can drink a large quantity of beer without getting drunk. He can stick around and talk or play cards for the greater part of an evening and go home sober. He cannot do that and drink whisky. That is why a whisky saloon is not a success.

Midas Criterion (champion of distillers:

Any man who has had any experience in drinking knows it is possible to get exactly as drunk on beer as on whisky. If we were to decide between the merits of the beer drunk and the whisky drunk, we would say candidly that the mushiest and sloppiest kind of a drunk in the world is the beer drunk.

PIANO SALES INCREASE.

According to traveling representatives of Eastern piano manufacturing converns who have recently been in San Francisco, says the Musical Times, piano sales in the western states that have joined the dry ranks show marked increase. They report that business in Colorado, Arizona, Washington and Oregon was never better and that retailers, many of whom opposed prohibition, are now heartily in favor of the change. More pianos are being sold, it is asserted, initial payments are larger, collections are much better and fewer instruments are returned.

IN THE CITY OF SEATTLE.

The prohibitory law of the state of Washington went into effect January 1, 1916. Of buildings occupied the last day of 1915 by 211 saloons, ten are now occupied by drug stores, haberdasheries, women's specialty shops and the like; 56 by cigar, candy and soft drink places; 14 by groceries and meat markets; six by confectionery stores; 19 by cafes, bakeries and the like; 20 vacant for repairs, or because building is too poor for business.

A GOOD RULE.

The law for the soldier and the law for me
Are not the same, but they ought to be.
To him it says: "No whisky or beer,"
Who'll say the same while war is here?

GRAPES FOR HOGS.

The California College of Agriculture has found that it is more profitable to feed grapes, dried, to hogs and cattle than to manufacture them into wine. This is very disturbing to the wine trust.

DIFFERENT NOW.

In the Spanish war supply trains were sidetracked to let the product of Milwaukee pass through to army camps. We have moved a long way on the road to national sobriety since then.

Help to Save Nation's Food Supply

In this time of high cost of living, everybody should use all possible means to prevent waste and to help save food. No one means can be more effective than a vigorous campaign to exterminate rats which destroy over two hundred million dollars worth of foodstuffs annually. Keep garbage in rat-proof cans, stop up their holes, and above all exterminate them with Stearns' Paste, which can be bought for a few cents at any store. A two ounce box will usually rid a house or barn of every rat. It destroys mice, cockroaches and waterbugs as well. Adv.

The Spirit That's Needed.

G. Bernard Shaw, the Irish playwright, said recently in London that nobody but an idiot could imgaine that the pacifists and socialists would be allowed to have any say in the peace negotiations which will end the world war.

"If Shaw is right," said a labor leader, "it's a bad thing for the world, and so I hope he's wrong.

"I hope the peace negotiations will create among the nations the spirit embodied in a saying which an old grandmother used to quote in my childhood, namely—

" 'If you want a neighbor, be one.' "

Some Satisfaction.

At a ball given by Lord Derby in Canada, writes Douglas Sladen, I watched his A. D. C. taking an important politician, whom he should have known perfectly well, to introduce him to his (the politician's) own wife, a young and pretty woman, who considered herself one of the lions of Canadian society.

The situation struck me as a promising one, so I listened to hear what he would say:

"Mrs. Pm," hesaid, "may I introduce Mr. Um-um to you?"

She looked up at him with an amused smile, and he continued quite blissfully:

"He's a stupid old duffer, but I'll get him away from you as soon as I can."

An Exaggeration.

"Crossing the ocean nowadays is a serious proposition," said J. P. Morgan, who crosses the ocean continually, "but it isn't, after all, as terrible a thing as certain exaggerations would make you believe.

" 'Anything to declare?' a customs officer said to a man who had just crossed the ocean.

" 'Yes,' said the man. 'I declare that I'm one mass of black and blue bruises from jolting and bumping for six days over a regular corduroy road of German mines and submarines.' "

A Letter From Washington

The Food Administrator Writes Us:

"The use of baking powder breads made of corn and other coarse flours instead of patent wheat flour is recommended by the Conservation Division of the Food Administration. The wheat needed for export is thus conserved, and at the same time healthful food for our own people is provided. The circulation of recipes providing for these uses would be of assistance in carrying out our plans."

The following recipes for Corn Bread and Rye Rolls save wheat flour and make attractive and wholesome food for every day when made with

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

CORN BREAD

1¾ cups corn meal
¼ cup flour
4 level teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1½ cups milk
2 tablespoons shortening

Mix thoroughly dry ingredients; add milk and melted shortening; beat well; pour into well greased pan and bake in hot oven about 25 minutes.

RYE ROLLS

2 cups rye flour
½ teaspoon salt
3 level teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
¾ cup milk
½ tablespoon shortening

Sift dry ingredients together, add milk and melted shortening. Knead on floured board; shape into rolls. Put into greased pans and allow to stand in warm place 20 to 25 minutes. Bake in moderate oven 25 to 30 minutes.

Our red, white and blue booklet "Best War Time Recipes" containing additional similar recipes sent free on request. Address Royal Baking Powder Company, Dept. W, 135 William Street, New York.

An Emphatic Assurance.

A Boy With a Future.

Ellis Perrot Blister, the fly-fishing expert, said at a banquet:

"The prime virtue of a good angler is patience. No man or boy ever developed into a successful fisherman who hadn't at least twice the patience of Job.

"There's a boy in Shawnee who is going to make a champion one of these days. I haw him fishing the other afternoon on the bank of a creek, and I said to him:

" 'What are you fishing for, son?'

" 'Snigs,' said he.

" 'What are snigs?' said I.

" 'I dunno,' said the boy. 'I ain't never caught none yet.' "

The W. C. T. U. ladies took in $19 sewing lunch clearing about $12.

We were misinformed about Calvin Fell returning home a week ago.

The Christian Aid Society are meeting today with Mrs. Andrew Rupp.

The U. B. Ladies Aid Society met with Mrs. Al Gengnagle last evening.

Earl Wyatt of west of Concord, visited the Newville Sunday School Sunday giving short talks for the good of the work.

While cranking Lige Enhoff's machine, Orson Reasoner had the misfortune to break a bone in the wrist of his right arm.

Miss Kinsey, who has been clerking in the Benner store, was on the sick list last week. Dorothy Warner took her place.

Iven Richmond represented the K. of P. lodge and Mrs. Harry Ayers the Pythian sisters, from this place at grand lodge at Indianapolis last week.

Little Ruth Weaner is quite poorly. The little girl was at the hospital last spring and seemed to improve some but has taken worse again. Her complaint is diabetis.

John Miller is the first man in this community to finish cutting his corn. He has stocks fifteen feet high, with ears measuring from twelve to fourteen inches, large grain and small cob. Who can beat it?

Archie Cummins started to take a load to the fair Thursday, but his car broke down, he turned his load over to some one else, spent two days repairing, did not get home until Friday night, but took his faminy to Fort Wayne Saturday to do shopping and visit relatives. All's well that ends well.

At some day not far distant Indianians will be sending letters and boxes to their kin "somewhere in France." It is important that before that day the public, and particularly soldiers' relatives, should be familiar with the rigid rules laid down for the sending of mail to fighting forces.

The following instructions have been given soldiers at Fort Benjamin Harrison to be transmitted to relatives:

All mail originating in the United States or any of its possessions for transmission to soldiers and others connected with United States expeditionary forces in Europe is subject to United States domestic classification, conditions and rates of postage.

Parcels of fourth-class or domestic parcel post must not exceed twenty pounds in weight and the eighth zone rate of 12 cents a pound is chargeable. Parcels may not be registered, insured or sent C. O. D. Every parcel must bear the sender's name and address, which should be placed in the upper left corner of the address side. United States postage stamps only are valid for the prepayment of postage on matter above described.

Mail intended for members of the expeditionary forces in Europe should bear the name of the addressee, official designation of unit or organization to which he belongs and the words, "American Expeditionary Forces." Under no circumstances should the location or station of a military organization be included in the address.

Unwrapped and unaddressed copies of magazines intended for soldiers and sailors of the expeditionary forces when mailed by others than the publishers, are subject to the postage rate of 1 cent a copy.

Money orders may be issued at domestic rates and on domestic forms, payable at the United States mail agency in France. Payment will be made promptly at headquarters of the agency or at the branch assigned to the military unit to which the payee belongs. Postmasters should refuse to accept for registration letters containing money or other valuables. Important papers which can be duplicated may be accepted for registration, but patrons will be informed that indemnity will not be paid for loss of registered mail. The public should be warned that it is not safe to inclose currency in letters under any circumstances.

REQUIRE FIRE DRILL IN SCHOOLS EVERY MONTH.

A "Fire Drill and Health Drill Manual" has been prepared by the Indiana state fire marshal and state board of health for teachers in the public and private schools of Indiana.

The legislature of 1913 passed a law making it the duty of the fire marshal, his deputies and assistants, to require teachers of public and private schools and educational institutions to have one fire drill each month and the manual is designed primarily to assist teachers in properly complying with their duties under this law.

In addition to the fire drill rules, the booklet contains suggestions for the health drill, first aid, and proper food for school children.

"To save lives from disease," says the fire marshal, "is equally as important as saving lives from fire, and for this reason the fire marshal's office has asked the state board of health to add some suggestions for the health drill. It is intended that the fire drill be made the nucleus for health drills that would be beneficial in the growth and development of the body."

The New Postal Rates

Detailed instructions to postmasters on the increased letter mail rates, which become effective Nov. 2 under the terms of the war tax bill, have been issued by Postmaster General Burleson. They do not apply to rates to most foreign countries, which are fixed by international treaties, but they do apply to all domestic mail and under that classification is included mail to Canada, Cuba, Panama, the United States postal ageney at Shanghai and all persons in the military service of the United States in Europe.

The instructions say:

"Postmasters shall, on and after November 2, see that postage is paid at the rate of 3 cents an ounce or fraction thereof on letters and other first class matter except drop letters. All drop letters, that is, letters mailed for delivery from the office at which posted, including those for delivery by city, rural or other carrier of such office, are required to have postage paid on them at the rate of 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof.

"Postal cards are required to be prepaid 2 cents and therefore the 1 cent postal cards must have a 1 cent postage stamp affixed to them in addition to 1 cent impressed on such cards. Postcards (private mailing cards) bearing written messages must have 2 cents postage prepaid on them.

WEEK'S CAMPAIGN FOR CONSERVATION

Indiana to Devote October 21 to 28 Inclusive to the Work.

TO AROUSE WOMEN OF STATE

Representative in Every One of the Thirteen Congressional Districts Have Been Named a Special Campaign Committee.

Indiana's program for Conservation week, October 21-28 inclusive, has been announced by Indiana Hoover Representative Harry E. Barnard. The campaign for a million signatures of Indiana volunteer women in the Hoover Food organization has begun.

Conservation week will be the most extensive and intensive effort yet made, in a patriotic way, in Indiana, Doctor Barnard says. A special effort will be made to educate every Indiana housewife to the full significance of the Hoover organization and then as great an effort will be made to have her enroll and become a part of the great food army upon which the American army, the soldiers of our allies, the civilian population of the nations fighting Germany, and most important of all, our own national efficiency depends, during the progress of the great war.

A special campaign committee, representing each of the thirteen congressional districts in Indiana has been appointed by Doctor Barnard to conduct the signature campaign. They are as follows:

Mrs. F. F. Erlbacher, Evansville; Mrs. Charles Bierhaus, Vincennes; Mrs. Craigie Gunn Mitchell, Bedford; Mrs. Elizabeth Ervin, Franklin; Mrs. Hortense Tapp Moore, Rockville; Mrs. William E. Ochiltree, Connersville; Mrs. Julia C. Henderson, Indianapolis; Mrs. William Crosley, Pendleton; Mrs. Sam Matthews, Tipton; Mrs. Florence R. Greve, West Lafayette; Mrs. Eva B. Rohbock, Wabash; Mrs. Olaf N. Guldin, Ft. Wayne; Mrs. Isabella P. Bowman, Elkhart.

In many communities of the state a representative committee of young women have volunteered to conduct "pledge card stations" in the principal stores. Here also literature will be distributed and the questions of the curious answered.

Women of County Councils to Act.

Women members of the county councils will co-operate during the week and the organizations will contribute so much toward the enrollment secured in the first campaign will continue to lend every assistance possible.

The Indiana state council of defense is lending every ounce of its strength in support of the movement, which is under the joint direction of the council and Food Commissioner Barnard. The following agencies will be used for the distribution of the pledge cards and the emblems that will be given to each woman signing:

State field workers under women members of county councils: Schools, churches, woman's clubs, postmasters, librarians, storekeepers, volunteers.

Conservation Outfits Free.

Every woman who joins the food organization will receive a "Conservation outfit," as follows:

a. A three-colored membership card to hang in front window.
"One Million of these in Indiana" is the slogan.
b. A book entitled "Ten Lessons in Conservation," containing valuable suggestions and practical recipes for food conservations—a text book on food saving.
c. A Kitchen "War Creed"—a terse outline of Hoover recommendations for war time.

"Conservation week and this great campaign for a million women members of the food organization in Indiana, will put conservation before the people of this state in a new light," said Doctor Barnard. "The people of this state must be made to realize that it is just as much a grim war-time necessity to study and practice the conservation of certain foodstuffs as it is to send soldiers to France, or raise money for the Red Cross or the Liberty Loan."

Women Sell Liberty Bonds.

Woman bond salesmen will be expected to sell as many Liberty bonds in Indiana as the men salesmen. The campaign was opened with the firing of bombs. The moment the bombs were fired State Chairman Will H. Wade and his assistants went to work.

Disloyal Acts Denounced.

The Indiana state council of defense has gone on record as denouncing all acts and utterances of a disloyal nature, and pointed out particularly Senator La Follette as one to whom has been accredited malicious, false and treasonablelike utterances.

Various Committees Appointed.

All kinds of patriotic movements will also be aided by the association, but special attention is to be paid to the former post office men. A welfare committee, a home news committee, a correspondence committee and a publicity committee were appointed. The home news committee will see that each of the soldiers gets a weekly letter full of home news. Capt. James White, a Civil war veteran, also spoke and told of what such an organization would have meant to the young men who went to the Civil war . . . . .

Conservation Week in Indiana.

1. October 21, "Conservation Sunday," in all the churches of Indiana.
2. Meatless Tuesday, October 23, and meatless Friday, October 26.
3. Wheatless dinners all week. Corn bread will be on fashionable diets from October 21 to 28.
4. Conservation day rally, Wednesday, October 24th. With conservation meetings in every town in Indiana under the auspices of County Councils of Defense and Commercial clubs.
5. Merchants Conservation day, Thursday, October 25th.
6. Conservation day in all schools, Friday, October 26th.
7. Whirlwind finish of campaign for signatures of 1,000,000 Indiana women in the Hoover food enrollment, who will be given cards by the United States food administration indicating their patriotism, for display in front windows: Saturday, October 27th.
8. Day of prayer and praise for those who have gone out to fight democracy's battle, who are to be sustained and maintained by a solid army of stay-at-home volunteers; Sunday October 28th.

Rushing Book Campaign.

"The campaign for books for soldiers will be kept up just as long as people show a disposition to aid so great a cause," said Charles E. Rush, Indianapolis director of the Library War council, which is endeavoring to make a showing of $20,000 for the city.

Set Loafers to Work.

Poolroom and saloon loafers should be mobilized by the government and put to work, instead of permitting women and girls to be employed in dangerous and undesirable places. This is the idea expressed in a letter sent by the industrial board of Indiana to the Indiana state council of defense. The letter was written by John J. Walsh, state factory inspector, who makes a continuous study of labor conditions.

Walsh calls attention of the state council of defense to the fact that in this wartime more women and girls are employed in industries than ever before, and that many of them work in places where they should not be found. In many places the moral conditions and surroundings are not good, and in others there is a great danger of personal injury.

"After careful investigation by the inspection department, we are convinced that there is no such scarcity of male labor in this state at this time that would warrant any employer placing women or young girls in employment that is dangerous and liable to subject them to a severe accident, or work the character of which tends to a lowering of the moral standard," Walsh said in his letter.

Walsh suggests the appointment of a committee in each industrial center, composed of one representative of labor, one representative of employers and one other citizen recognized for his or her interest in the welfare of women and girls. This committee, he said, should look after this matter.

Indiana Teachers Write Essays.

The state department of public instruction has announced rules governing a contest for prizes amounting to $300, to be given for essays by Indiana teachers on "Why the United States Is at War." The contest is to be conducted under auspices of the national board for historical service, representing the American Historical association. Details may be obtained from the state department.

The prizes are in two series; one for high school teachers and the other for elementary school teachers, and the first prize in each case is $75. Five prizes are arranged in each series, the lowest prize in each being $10. The fund from which the prizes will be paid is furnished by patriotic citizens of the state.

Essays must not exceed 3,000 words. Elaborate research is not necessary to success in the competition. The essays must be received in Washington not later than January 1.

A special committee composed of leading educators in Indiana, in making the award in each group, will give preference to essays in which the subject is so treated as to be intelligible and interesting to pupils in the class of schools in which the writer is teaching.

The general committee which has charge of the contest in Indiana and to which inquiries may be addressed, is composed of Samuel B. Harding, Indiana university, Bloomington, chairman; Oscar H. Williams, state high school inspector, Indianapolis, secretary; T. F. Moran, Sweet, De Pauw university, Greencastle; C. B. Coleman, Butler college, Indianapolis; L. H. Gipson, Wabash college, Crawfords- and F. S. Bogardus, Indiana State Normal, Terre Haute.

A Food Exchange.

An interesting experiment is to be tried out in Indianapolis in connection with the food situation. It is a plan to bring the producer and the consumer in touch with each other. Mrs. Carl G. Fisher is promoting the plan, which is to establish a food exchange under the auspices of the food conservation committee of this city. She has made a public appeal to all women who have a surplus of foodstuffs on hand to bring the surplus to the exchange where it can be sold to consumers.

Great Program Is Outlined for Food-Pledge Week Campaign, October 21 to 28—Those Who Fight Must Be Fed.

Washington.—Ten million food conservation pledges! Twenty-two million homes visited! A national campaign projected so large in its scope that the work to be accomplished is as great as though a census of the country were to be taken in a week!

Such is the program outlined for the food pledge week campaign, October 21 to 28.

What is it all about?

Why so much fuss?

What are the motives back of such a tremendous drive?

In every state thousands of people are asking these questions while thousands of others are preparing themselves to furnish a complete answer to the query.

The reasons why the food pledge campaign has been projected upon such broad lines are simple enough; plain enough.

So simple and so plain that they have been stated in the compass of a card—a card that it is proposed to hang in every home of the land—a card that is the "war creed of the kitchen," because, so closely are the people in this country linked to the world war, that one of the phases of the struggle must be fought out in the American kitchen.

If soldiers are to fight they must be fed. For the past three years one by one, our allies across the sea have been taking the men from the farm and from the factory and sending them to the firing line. Each man sent to the firing line meant one less who could be relied upon to help produce the food that "will win the war."

There are stores of wheat in Australia. There is food in South America, but ships are scarce. Time is a vital factor. The voyage to Australia and to South America takes too long. If the needs of those who fight for us across the sea are to be met, the food that sustains those fighters must come from this country.

If the laborer is worthy of his hire, surely the fighter is worthy of his food. That is a principle universally accepted by the American public. However, it is not every product that can be sent across the sea. Corn will not serve the need; our allies have never used it as a food; they have no mills to grind it; turn it into meal in this country and it would spoil before it could reach an European port. There are just four classes of products, the experts say, that we must send to our allies if our duty to them is to be discharged; they need meat, wheat, sugar and dairy products. We can conserve our wheat by increasing our consumption of other grains. We can conserve our meat by making a greater demand upon the resources of the fish market.

If the United States were an autocratic country there would be no popular appeal for the conservation of food. There would be an autocratic food control. The mailed fist would rule in the kitchen. Imperial food decrees would be enforced at the point of the bayonet. But ours is not an autocratic country. Food control is in the hands of the people themselves, and it is to the people that the food administration has appealed in the food pledge card campaign.

Herbert Hoover has termed this appeal an "unprecedented adventure in democracy"—an adventure that will determine whether or not a democratic form of government is, after all, fitted to engage in a death grapple with an autocracy.

The food pledge work campaign resolves itself into an effort to secure as a result of voluntary agreement pledges insuring the general support for a well defined program of food conservation. The food pledge week campaign represents an effort to induce as many of the American homes as possible to unite in a common policy. Our wheat reserves can be conserved if everybody helps.

The American people are asked to join together in a common conservation policy. As evidence that they are supporting this policy they are asked to hang a card denoting membership in the United States food administration in their window. In order that the conservation policy may be understood, the reasons for it made plain, and the manner of observing it rendered certain, Instruction cards—"The War Creed of the Kitchen"—are to be hung in the home.

And that is what the national food pledge week campaign is all about.

Skirting the Edges.

"Spare my blushes."

So spake the society belle.

"Have no fear, madam," responded the girl who was giving her a facial massage. "I assure you I won't rub any of your complexion off."

A Possible Function.

"I see the government maintains a bureau of standards."

"What is that for?"

"I dunno, but it sounds all right. It ought to be a good idea to see that our standards are kept high."

"Anyway," Lydia returned, "I've the address in my pocketbook. Mrs. Beggarstaff is stopping there too, you know, and I'm to lunch with her Monday!"

"To be sure!" Craven opened his arms and stepped toward her. "My dear, dear girl, you don't know what a help you are to me!"

Lydia didn't move or speak; but her direct and searching gaze proved disconcerting. With arms almost about her, Craven hesitated, his look at once abashed and aggrieved. "My dear Liddy!" he expostulated.

The girl sighed and shook her head. "I'm sorry, father. No, please don't say anything more. I'm glad to be of service; and perhaps, in the course of time, I shall understand you better. But tonight—" She made a helpless gesture, in unfeigned sadness. "There are too many misunderstandings between us, and I don't seem able to think clearly enough to reconcile them tonight. Tomorrow, I hope—"

She was at the door before Craven found a reply. "At your pleasure, my lady!" he laughed, not pleasantly. "I confess it's a new thought to me, that a man in my position may have no secrets from his child."

"Please don't say any more tonight," Lydia begged, with her hand on the knob.

"Oh, very well!" he returned with a shrug and grimace of strained patience. "But—half a minute!"

Opening the door for her, he followed out into the hall, where a stolid bellboy was waiting for his answer to the knave of clubs. To him Craven presented a piece of silver.

"See my daughter down to the ladies' entrance," he said, "the Forty-sixth street elevator, you understand—and after that send up the gentleman who brought that note, by the Broadway elevator."

"Yes, sir," the youth mumbled adoringly to his tip.

Craven stood watching the figures of Lydia and the bellboy diminish down the perspective of the long corridor, until they turned a corner

CHAPTER XIII.

The taxicab chose the northwest corner of Fifty-sixth street as the most inconvenient spot attainable to blow out a rear shoe. But Lydia had drawn luckily in New York's gigantic lottery of chauffeurs. This man knew his business. Before the girl had recovered from the shock of the tire explosion and the subsequent shaking up he had brought his machine to a standstill, jumped down, and was communing with himself in terms of confidential profanity concerning the ruined tire.

Then, opening the door, he announced that this was the last stop. "Sorry," he said, "but I got no spare tire, and if I had I'd need half an hour to make the change. Now I'll have to wait for the repair car."

A prey to vague mistrust, Lydia got out. Southward the avenue lay black and lonely save for the lurching lights of an ungainly bus groping over the wet asphalt; to the north the plaza was like a well in the air, shot through and through with glimmering light.

"I don't know what to do," Lydia ventured in her distress. "I'm a stranger in New York—" With a pang she realized how fatal such an admission might prove.

But her chauffeur was a prosaic soul, who had never chartered his car to a gang, and recked little of the terrors of New York for the overseas immigrant.

"The clock says a dollar twenty," he responded, with a disgusted jerk restoring the "flag" to perpendicular.

"Oh!" said Lydia brightly, after a blank moment; and found her purse. "Please tell me the way to the nearest cab rank."

"Cab rank" was a term not in the chauffeur's vocabulary; but he grappled manfully with its occult significance. "You mean stand," he explained, not unkindly. "If you don't mind walking a couple o' blocks, I'll take you to the Margrave. That's about the nearest, and anyway I got to telephone for the repair car."

"Thank you," said Lydia timidly—gratitude leaping in her heart to that kind destiny which had ordered this accident in just this spot. The Margrave!

Lydia marched resolutely into the hotel. She would be delayed not five minutes longer than if she was to engage another cab immediately. Let Craven object if he cared to, when informed! She had every reasonable excuse for desiring to rid herself of her responsibility as quickly as possible and wash her hands of the whole matter: she never wanted to see the collar again.

It was evidently defective hearing alone that caused the desk clerk to require a repetition of the name.

"Mrs. Merrilees."

The clerk retired to consult the room rack, and presently returned with the official smile, impersonally apologetic. "I thought possibly Mrs. Merrilees had arrived during the day—"

"Yes," Lydia affirmed, "she did—this afternoon, I believe."

The smile became even more remotely regretful. "I'm sorry, but Mrs. Merrilees is not among our guests."

Some instants later Lydia became conscious that she was staring, to the pained embarrassment of the young man. Hastily averting her gaze, she remarked the clock, and mechanically noted the hour: it was a quarter to eleven.

"Are you sure?" she faltered.

"Oh, quite."

But Craven had promised to meet her there, had given her the necklace to deliver to Betty at the Margrave. Impossible that he could be mistaken as to his fiancee's hotel, he who had been flying round all afternoon, "getting Betty settled"—his very words!

Insensibly Lydia's eyes darkened and became informed with an expression that had suited better the eyes of one by right of years more inured to mental anguish.

"But surely this is the Margrave!"

"Yes it is. Mrs. Merrilees may be at the Plaza, or the Savoy, or the Netherlands, even the St. Regis—not quite so near. If you care to sit down a moment, I'll inquire by telephone."

"You're very kind," said Lydia; "but I fancy I won't have to trouble you. Mrs. Beggarstaff will know. I hope I'm not mistaken in believing that she is stopping here?"

The smile of the young man passed the bounds of strict decorum, as from a desk clerk to one of the public. He was enchanted to be able to answer reassuringly.

* * * * * * *

"It was good of you to come over so late, dear—to please an old woman." With this the Dowager Dragon took Betty Merrilees into her arms and kissed her on both cheeks.

"Truth to tell, for the fun of it," said Mrs. Merrilees. "I was glad of an excuse to stay up. I'm possessed of a devil tonight. If I wasn't at heart a respectable widow woman, I'd cut loose and misbehave scandalous. For two cents I'd head a mob to burn the customhouse and lynch that man Loeb."

Divested of her wraps, she sailed tempestuously into the drawing room of the Beggarstaff suite—where Peter Traft uprose from comfort in a wing chair and bowed politely.

"No wonder they call him 'Loeb the poor Indian'!" he commented. "Though I believe the poor man would die happy if he could get just one long, lingering slant at you as you look tonight. Rippin'!"

"I feel like rippin' something or somebody, Peter," Betty declared with a brief, metallic laugh. Then she deigned to notice the other man present. "Oh, you, is it, Mr. Quoin? Hardly expected to find you here."

"Deep regrets!" the detective replied cheerfully—and for that was shown a cold if adorable shoulder.

"Oh, come now, Betty!" Peter protested. "Don't cut up rough with Quoin. Angels could do no more than he has done today."

"He still has a sneaking suspicion that I really did smuggle that necklace. Do you believe it too?"

"Don't ask me: I might tell you."

"And you?" Mrs. Merrilees demanded hotly of the Dowager Dragon.

"I don't think you above anything I'd stoop to—if you want the truth, my dear. I myself wasted several hours today trying to make the customs look foolish, and—how shall I say it, Peter?"

"Didn't get away with it."

"Much as I disapprove of slang—thank you, Peter."

"So all three of you are against me!" Mrs. Merrilees lounged more deeply in her chair, swept their faces with insolent eyes, and laughed unpleasantly. "Well, I've been spoiling for a row all day, and now I'm going to have one or know the reason why."

"Make your mind easy about that," Peter advised gravely. "As a tidy young disturber of the peace, Betty, you show class."

"Shut up, Peter!" Again her glance challenged the three. "What's up?" she demanded in sudden suspicion. "You didn't call me over here now just to tell me you believe me capable of smuggling that collar—you know you didn't!"

"No, my dear," Mrs. Beggarstaff replied; "but we did want to talk with you about it."

"Well?"

"It's this way, Mrs. Merrilees," Quoin volunteered: "We're all your friends, and all my interest in this matter is purely unprofessional as far as you are personally involved."

Mrs. Merrilees nodded brusquely, but focused an interested regard on the face of the detective. "Proceed," she said sweetly.

"We'd like to have your personal word of honor that you didn't turn this trick."

Betty laughed, staccato. "But if I say I did?"

Quoin shrugged. "That would end my interest."

"And if it turns out I didn't—eh?"

"Then I may be able to tell you something to your advantage."

Betty sat up sharply. "You mean you know where my necklace is?"

"Did you smuggle it?" Quoin counter-questioned.

A note of unimpeachable candor informed the woman's voice. "I give you my word of honor I did not. I know nothing about it. Beyond the fact that I myself placed a genuine necklace in that case, and saw a paste necklace come out of it—"

"There!" Mrs. Beggarstaff exclaimed with a look of triumph at Traft.

The face of this last suddenly assumed a most unbecoming brick-red hue. "That's all very well," he grumbled, "and I'm not doubting Betty a little bit; but," he stammered and gulped, "but I tell you now I can't believe it of Tad, and as for Lydia—" He made an exasperated gesture. "Quoin's crazy—that's all!"

"What's this?" Betty put in quickly. "Tad and Lydia?" She waited an instant, her color waning. "What have they to do with my necklace?"

"I'll tell you," said Quoin gently. "Craven gave his daughter your necklace, hidden in a Chinese puzzle box, to bring through the customs, counting on her exemption, as an alien, from rigid inspection."

Mrs. Merrilees rose from her chair, staring fixedly at Quoin. "You know this to be a fact?"

"I saw it in Miss Craven's possession. The rest is inference from contributory circumstances."

The detective endured her stare without flinching; though the color of his dark face deepened and his breath came a trace more quickly. Convinced at length of his sincerity, she turned away, moved to a window, and stood there with her back to the room, gazing thoughtfully out into the misty chiaroscuro of the plaza.

"That's why we wanted your word you were on the level before we told you," Peter explained.

"I see," said the woman in a gentler voice. "Please tell me about it."

"Very well." Quoin responded with the story, from his view and point, of Lydia's adventure in the fog. "It was your necklace in the box, the real thing, beyond mistake," he concluded.

"But," Betty argued, bewildered, "I don't see—"

"Wait. I think I can make everything clear. When Southpaw shut the box and gave it up, on my demand, I watched him pretty closely, and saw him slip a playing card in with the necklace. After I got outside I opened the box up on my own account, partly to satisfy myself about the necklace, partly to have a look at that card. It was a knave of diamonds."

Betty swung back from the window. "But what can that mean?"

"It's a question I think Craven can answer—if he will. Anyhow, we're safe in assuming the card was intended for him, and certainly it must have had some significance. That, if you'll permit, establishes a secret bond of understanding between two known blacklegs and—Thaddeus Craven."

"But why didn't you tell me this at the time?"

"Because, very naturally, I wasn't at all sure you wanted to be told."

"If you'll please explain—"

"Quoin means," Peter interrupted, "you've been such a consistent performer, he hesitated to do anything calculated to cramp your style, if this thing was what it looked like—a frame-up between you and Tad to beat the customs."

"But what right had you to jump at any such conclusion?" Betty insisted.

"Because I knew you knew real gems from false—and the necklace you had shown us that very morning was counterfeit."

"It isn't possible!" Betty protested hotly. "I saw it myself."

"So did I; and was interested enough—well, you'll recall I asked to see them in a strong light? You were so satisfied you never looked twice. But I was positive then that they were false, and even more positive later, when I saw the real collar in the puzzle box."

"Still I don't understand."

"If you remember, Craven took his time about fetching that box from the purser. It was a good ten minutes before he got back. He had time and to spare to open your despatch box and substitute the counterfeit for the genuine—duplicate key you knew nothing about, of course."

"Look here—" Peter began excitedly, then checked and turned sullen.

"Well?" Mrs. Beggarstaff demanded, while Betty and Quoin obliged the young man by looking their curiosity.

"Oh, I don't like to say it," he muttered unwillingly. "You've made out too strong a case against him as it is—and I've always had a sneaking fondness for old Tad."

Curious Forms of Tea.

There are some score or more different forms of compressed teas available, from button-sized tablets in vest pocket containers to bars of delectable fragrance, and from granitelike slabs of two to five kilograms (still in use as money in the interior of China) to the more lightly compressed disks and oblongs in split rattan baskets. The method of preparation of these last is curious; the leaves, in a state of wilt, are compacted by the bare feet of Chinese girls. These teas are esteemed by the Orientals for their earthy flavors.—L. Lodian, in the Scientific American.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 21

THE TEMPLE REBUILT AND DEDICATED.

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 3:8-13; 6:14-18.

GOLDEN TEXT—Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise.—Psalms 100:4.

The remnant which returned had now become settled in their new homes As it would be a considerable time before the temple could be rebuilt, arrangement was made for the religious life as early as possible, as religion was the very heart of the nation's life. They first set up the altar of the God of Israel (3:1-3) and offered burnt offerings thereon. They next revived the annual festivals (3:4-7) which had a powerful, unifying influence upon them.

I. The Appointment of Officers to Set Forward the Work of the Lord's House (v. 8, 9). Overseers were needed to direct this great work. Rubbish needed to be cleared away so the building operations could begin; timber needed to be cut in the Lebanon forests and floated down to Joppa; stones needed to be cut from the quarries; intelligent and consecrated men were needed to direct this work, as it was needful that it be done with the utmost expedition. The Lord's house demands the most systematic adjustment of its labors. Mere zeal will not make up for lack of intelligence.

II. The Foundation of the Temple Laid (3:10-13). This was done amid great rejoicing. The consciousness that the Lord's house was taking shape, even though the mere foundations could be seen, provoked great enthusiasm on the part of the people. Musicians were appointed to furnish music while the work was being done. Under the influence of music men will do better work, armies will march and fight better when bands are playing. While there was great joy, there was also, mingled sorrow. This was on the part of the elders who had seen the former temple. The meanness of the present temple in comparison with Solomon's temple caused their praise to be drowned with their sorrow. These people belonged to that class who think that nothing now is so good as in the former days. So completely were these voices commingled that the people could not discern the one from the other.

III. The Building of the Temple Delayed by Opposition, (Chapters 4 and 5). For a time matters went smoothly with them, but as soon as the work had taken such shape as to show that there was some prospect of success, the half-heathen Samaritans began to oppose them. No vital work of God will be allowed to go on without opposition. Satan resents and bitterly opposes all inroads upon his kingdom. These Samaritans sought to frustrate this work of God by:

(1) An Alliance With the Jews (4:2, 3). They wanted to bring the work in harmony with their own religious practices, as God's pure worship would be a constant rebuke to them. This is ever the way of the world, to seek to effect a compromise with God's children; but God's call is separation. "Come out from among them" (2 Cor. 6:14-18). Nothing so weakens God's cause as worldly alliance and compromise. There is but one answer to be given to such an offer of compromise. "Ye have nothing to do with us in building a house unto our God." We are in the world, but not of the world.

(2) Weakening the Hands of the People (4:4). Doubtless this included the withdrawal of supplies, the spreading of dissension among the workmen, and the employment of counselors against them.

(3) Letters of Accusation to the Persian King (4:6, 7). So severe was this opposition that the building was delayed for a term of years. These counselors succeeded in creating doubt as to whether Cyrus had ever issued a decree for their return. This wicked opposition resulted in the undoing of the opposers, for search was made and a copy was found. Darius confirmed this by his own decree, and directed that aid be given from the royal taxes so that the house of God might be built.

IV. The Temple Completed and Dedicated (6:14-18). The Prophets Haggai and Zachariah now appear, and by warnings, exortations and entreaties stir up the people so that the work goes forward to a successful completion. Without their aid probably the work would never have been completed. Human nature at times needs to be cheered and urged forward. These prophets did not themselves work in the building of the walls, yet their work was of even greater importance.

It is generally found that this is so with the religious leaders today. The words of cheer and encouragement of the Christian minister are needed daily for those who labor in the building of the Lord's house. Were it not for them many would give up the struggle. When the building was finished it was dedicated to God with great joy. This was possible because they had builded and finished their task according to the commandment of the God of Israel. The service of dedication was much after the order of that of Solomon's temple, only on a less magnificent scale.

"TESTS OF THE REAL THING"

Only Ways by Which the True Christian Can Be Told is by His Good Works.

A man had bought a diamond from a stranger, and afterwards was assailed by fears that it was not genuine. He knew none of the tests which would determine the matter, so he took it to a jeweler, who soon assured him that the stone was a perfectly good one. How did he know? He was familiar with the characteristics of real diamonds.

In order in life to be able to tell the real things, one has to apply the proper test. It would never do to say that a certain liquid was vinegar merely by looking at it. That would be the wrong test. It would be a mistake to test the quality of a stone by feeling it, or the perfume of a flower by tasting it.

How can you tell the real Christian? By the proper test. There are several. One is "Let him deny himself and take up his cross daily." The Christian is known by his cross. Some shut their eyes and refuse to see it; others walk round it, pleading they are unable to take it up; others drag their cross, and a cross which is dragged is the heaviest of all.

You can always tell a real Christian by the manner and spirit with which he takes up his cross, and carries it daily. He really carries it; he carries it daily, and not merely on Sundays or when there are people around to see him with it; and he denies himself, in order better to carry it, just as the soldiers take very little in their knapsacks, so that they may march better.—East and West.

Poverty.

Poverty is only contemptible when it is felt to be so. Doubtless the best way to make our poverty respectable is to seem never to feel it as an evil.—Bovee.

Power of Littles.

Trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle.—Michael Angelo.

TO NAME FUEL ADMINISTRATOR FOR INDIANA.

H. A. Garfield, Federal Coal Director, Seemed Greatly Surprised when the Coal Situation in Indiana was Outlined to Him.

Immediate relief for the Indiana coal situation was promised Tuesday by H. A. Garfield, federal coal administrator, at Washington, on his return from a short vacation in Ohio. Among other things, Mr. Garfield promised:

1. To appoint a state coal administrator for Indiana within forty-eight hours.
2. Take care of any specific coal shortage in any community of the state on request of a state official.

Mr. Garfield seemed greatly surprised when the coal situation in Indiana was outlined to him fully. He declared he had not understood the situation was so bad here and was inclined to minimize reports of a shortage, his information being that Indiana was no worse off than a number of other state were.

Mr. Garfield says that so far he had received no specific request from Indiana for coal. He said that whenever a bona fide shortage was shown by a public official, coal would be supplied. As soon as the fuel administrator is named, he will be expected to forward such requests to Washington.

It was pointed out that the fuel administration has a large amount of "free coal" at its disposal to be used in supplying coal where shortages threaten. A part of this coal can be diverted to Indiana, it was pointed out, if Indiana officials will only tell the fuel administrator where the coal is needed. In cases where whole communities are threatened with shortages, arrangements will be made to supply the dealers who supply these communities, it was said.

No reason was given by Mr. Garfield as to why some action was not taken before to appoint the Indiana administrator except that he had not known before that the coal situation here was so bad.

Strikes continue to occur.

Advice is a good thing to keep.

Every little dream has its wake-up time.

Many a business dream fades away.

The Russians are attacking around Riga like they mean business.

Holland has four times as much gold as she had before the war.

Government regulation of prices is getting an inning during the war.

China will send 300,000 soldiers to France if—the U. S. pays the piper.

While the British and French go forward slowly and by degrees the people at home are chiefly dangerous on account of a popular feeling that the enemy is not being hit hard enough. And on the other hand, the German counter-attacks get little besides casualties, the submarine toll is lessening and the Reichstag seethes with efforts to arrange peace.

An Invention to Win the War?

While we don't vouch for the accuracy of the report we pass along to you the information that a single stroke of American genius is about to win the war.

It appears that an American mechanic, after 26 years of research, has offered to the government a system of "free energy generators," which will revolutionise warfare overnight, and end the conflict as suddenly, with America victorious.

The inventor says it will drive a battleship any distance, without a stop for fuel, propel an aeroplane around the world, give an aeroplane strength to carry thousands of pounds of munitions, enable an aeroplane to wear armor heavy enough to turn anti-aircraft shells, send torpedoes at greater speed, and practically double the speed of steam engines.

That his theory is revolutionary is admitted, but shrugs and smiles have faded after secret demonstration backed up his statements. The house committee on patents has authorized him to demonstrate his theory to the secretary of the interior, and a committee of five scientists.

The inventor admits that he does not claim perpetual motion, but that his invention, as tested, will do away with boilers, furnaces, motors, coal, steam and oil.

What the invention is we have no idea, but we pass the facts to our readers for their judgment. One thing is certain. Congress is willing to try it out, and appears to think there is something in it. Let us all hope that there is.

TWO NEW DRAIN PETITIONS PLACED ON FILE.

A drainge petition has been filed in the commissioner's court by William L. Hallabaugh. The drain begins in Concord township and runs in a southeasterly direction to the St. Joe river, through Spencer township. A tile drain has been laid in a portion of this course and wherever the tile is sufficient it shall be used in the new drain. Sixty-two parcels of land are touched by this drain.

In addition to the above petition, Chas. A. Smith has filed another drain petition under the name of George W. Dannells, situated in Wilmington, Grant and Union townships. The drain is to run down the Miles Hallett drain and to end in the Philip Rigg drain. In all there will be 137 parcels of land affected by the establishment of such a drain.

CHARGE INSURANCE COMPANIES COMBINE TO FIX RATES.

Eighty-seven fire insurance companies doing business in Indiana are alleged in a petition filed in the Marion county supreme court to have violated a permanent restraining order, issued by Judge Weir some years ago to enjoin them from combining to fix rates and stifle competition. The petition asks for a contempt of court citation.

This is another step in the fight against the alleged insurance combination in the state. The attorney general sets out in the complaint about thirty specific instances of alleged violation of the injunction all showing the reputed intent of the combination to regulate insurance.

THOUGHTS FOR FIRE PREVENTION

If buildings in the United States were as fireproof as in Europe, the annual cost of fire losses and protection would be only $90,000,000.

Over five thousand are killed and 50,000 are injured annually as a result of fire.

Defective flues are responsible for 13 per cent. of all the fires.

All fires are the same size at their start. Every second counts, so be prepared.

An ounce of fire prevention is worth a pound of fire extinguisher.

The way to get lower insurance rates is to have fewer fires.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don t Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

Suit of 5 Days Is Settled.

Settlement of Case in DeKalb Circuit Court Stops Trial which would Probably have Lasted for a Week—Claims Still Pending for $10,300.

The case of the Indiana Central University against the James Hamilton estate of Concord township, was settled in the DeKalb Circuit court Friday afternoon after the trial had proceeded nearly four days.

The Indiana Central University held two notes against the Hamilton estate, one for $5,000 in the present case and one for $1,000 on which suit was brought. Both suits were settled Friday afternoon, the plaintiff receiving $3,000 or fifty percent of the principal of the two notes. This clears up all matters between the Indiana Central University and the Hamilton estate.

The Bonebrake Theological seminary of Dayton, Ohio, has filed two claims against the estate, one for a note of $10,000 and one on a balance due of $200 on a $500 note. The church extension society also has a claim filed for $100. This leaves yet pending against the estate for trial or judgment $10,300 with interest amounting to about $500.

The aggregate claims of the Central university settled and those pending amount to about $18,000. All of the notes are held by branches of the United Brethren Church in Christ and were obtained upon the visit of agents to the Hamilton home. The settling of the university case will greatly reduce the costs in the case as it is.

Two continuances had been granted, one to the defendants at their cost and one to the plaintiffs at their cost in so far as the witness fees and service at those times were concerned.

The legal talent procured by the plaintiffs was Hoffman & Shearer of Auburn and McNagny & McNagny of Columbia City while the defensive was represented by J. M. Life as attorney for the administrator, John Hamilton of Butler, Best and Rotter of Angola and Leonard, Rose & Zollars of Fort Wayne; for the heirs, namely Wm. Hamilton of St Joe and Miss Mary Hardy of Defiance. Mrs. Mary Bittinger of Indianapolis was represented by Skillman & Smalley of Indianapolis and Rolland Bearss was represented by E. W. Atkinson of Auburn.

There seemed to be considerable doubt in the minds of the defense as to the genuineness of the signature of James M. Hamilton, on the note in the suit for $5,000 and consequently a number of expert bankers were called in to make an examination of this particular note and compare signatures. Willis Rhoads and Calvin Knecht of Auburn, Newton G. Ball of Fremont, Ind., and Claude H. Douglas of Angola, were the men called.

While Rolland Bearss did not figure in the case at an heir, yet he held a deed executed to him for 40 acres of land; for the consideration of the care of James M. Hamilton during his life time. The findings of the court was that the land was not subject to any of the claims of the plaintiffs.

The settlement made involved more than $6,000 in notes, as the total amount of paper was near $30,000 on which the name of James M. Hamilton appeared and the terms were offered by the plaintiffs in the case and the estate accepted.

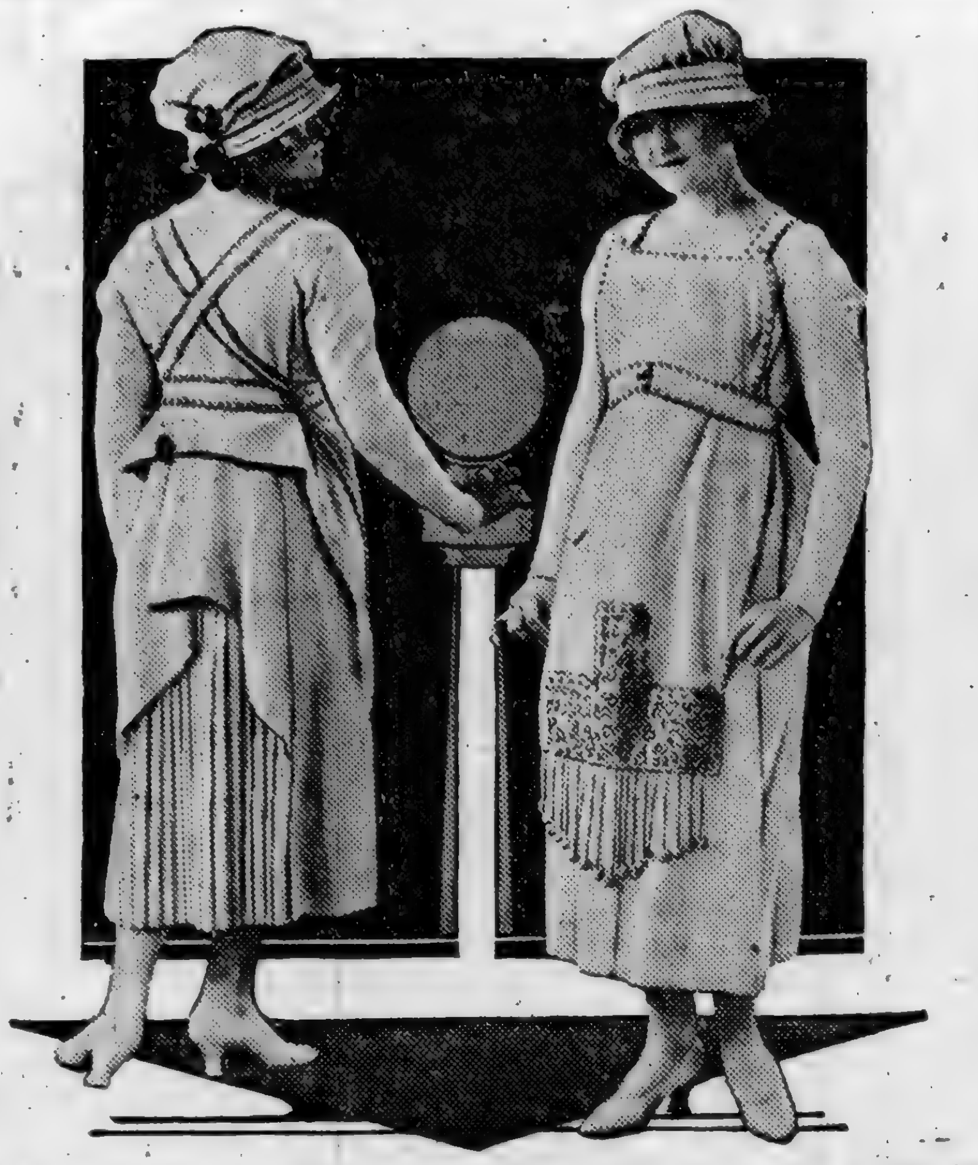
For the Debutante's Dress Parade



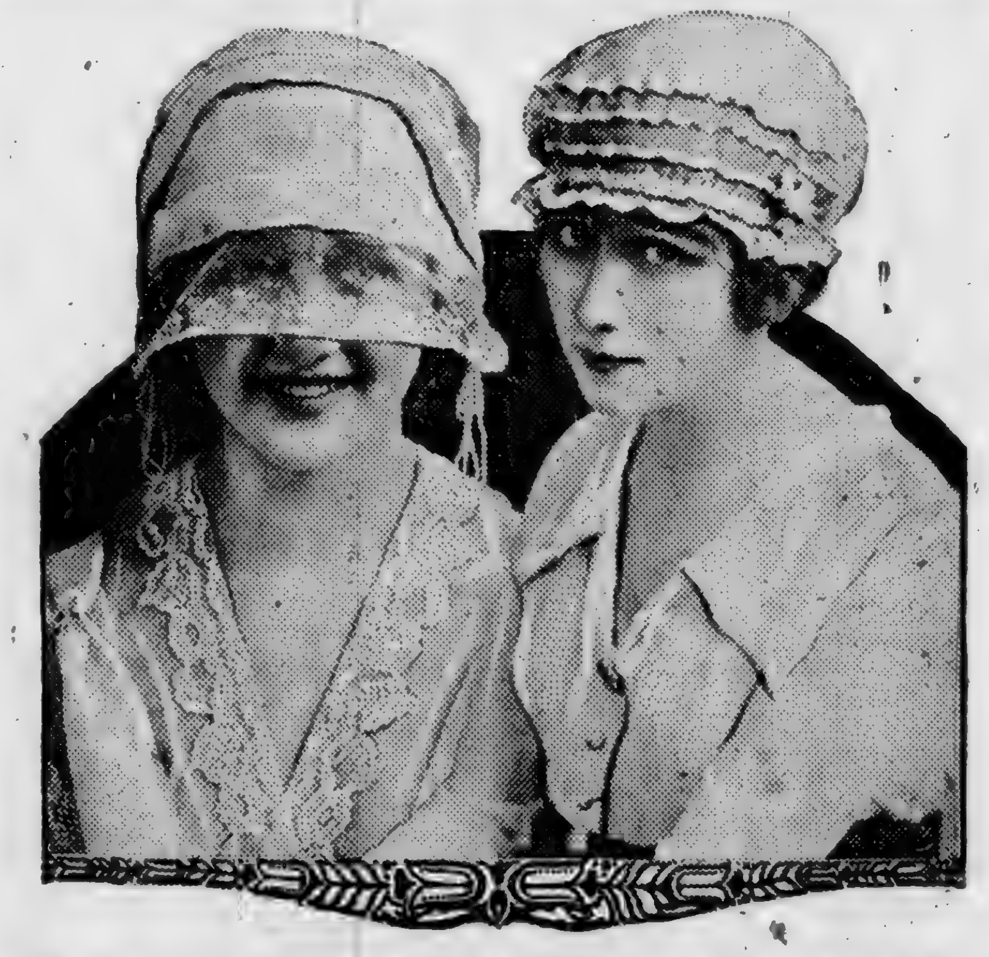
Who but a great designer, whose name is a synonym for originality and good style, would think of combining broadcloth and linen? Here they are, beautifully blended in a naive gown for the debutante's dress parade. It is of white broadcloth and white linen and exactly suited to its youthful wearer. Two views of it are presented because both the back and front must be seen to be fully appreciated and because it is a gem in designing for the young girl.

The skirt, plain bodice and sleeves are of broadcloth and the skirt is not plain or easily described. It hangs straight at the front with a wide, set-in panel of plaits across the back appearing under a short drapery, longer at the sides than at the center. Above this a much shorter drapery across the back is an extension of the front portion of the skirt which manages also to provide a little graceful falling-into-folds at each side. The bodice is semi-fitting and the sleeves long and close fitting except at the top where there is a little fullness and a short tuck at the front and back allows the broadcloth to fall in a loose fold. This little touch reflects the mode for sleeves full at the top, introduced for grown-ups, but in a very unpretentious way. And the short drapery across the back follows the bustle idea—at a respectful distance suited to youth.

If the creator of this frock had stopped with broadcloth and omitted to add the linen apron and girdle, she would still have accomplished an unusual gown. But the resources of genius are revealed in the happy after thought of the apron. It has a "bib" at the front and is finished with needle work stitches in yarn. There is an applique of cut-out embroidery in blue across the bottom and a fringe of small, fuzzy balls of yarn. Straps over the shoulders are crossed in the back and fastened to the girdle at the sides.

Just where this frock fastens is a secret not betrayed by the picture but the chances are it buttons at the front. The little hat is of white broadcloth, faced with blue velvet. It has a soft crown fastened to the brim at one side under yarn foliage and two soft balls made of yarn suspended from the leaves. It is no wonder that this costume was one of the triumphs of a recent fashion show.

Introducing a New Boudoir Cap



The girl who is pretty enough, or has the poise to carry off extremes of style, may go to any length she likes in her inconsequential little fineries, to be worn within her own four walls. Certainly the new boudoir caps, just now beginning to blossom in the shops, in anticipation of autumn weddings and the holidays, will delight the maid who is looking for unusual things. Designers seem to have searched the wide, wide world for inspirations—and they have brought many captives home to Rome.

There is the coolie hat from China, translated into lustrous ribbon and lace, the Dutch cap, the head band that is a bequest of old Greece, the visor cap, suggesting a jockey's headwear and the oriental cap with lace that covers the eyes, which must have come from India or Arabia or otherwhere homes of veiled ladies. It is shown in the picture, made of pink crepe georgette laid in folds and forming a sort of hood. It is bordered with lace, with a fine wire set in a hem along its lower edge and a strand of pearl beads outlining both edges of the lace.

The cap is merely a straight piece of the crepe laid in folds, tacked to place, that adjust it to the head. At each side, strands of pearl beads in loops of graduated length provide the proper decoration for this new arrival in the gay company of boudoir caps.

While these new ideas in caps are attracting enraptured attention, caps like that at the right of the picture go on selling. This is of crepe de chine and cream colored net, edged with lace and embellished with frills of baby ribbon set on the net. At each there are small, simply made ribbon flowers. These caps are made in all the gay, light colors and are as popular as ever.

Proper Way to Air Hair.

To air the hair take out all the pins and shake the hair loose. Stand before an open window, shaking the hair until it has been thoroughly aired. Then arrange it for the night. Never let it remain massed on the head. This will soon take all the life and fine texture from it. Instead, part it in the middle of the forehead down to the neck and make two loose braids of it, each beginning just behind the ears. This will divide the hair so thoroughly that the scalp at the middle, usually covered, will be free and may be well aired.

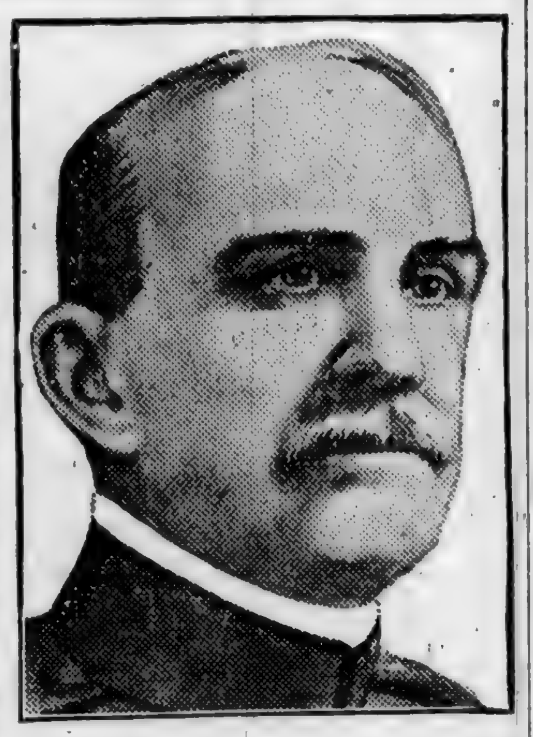
Orange Blossom Wedding Rings.

Styles in wedding rings? Sure. Maybe you are too young to remember when a bridegroom's devotion was judged by the width of the ring he put on his bride's left hand third finger. Then came the round band. Now comes the decorated wedding ring.

The new rings are of gold or platinum, engraved in orange blossoms. Others are incrusted in diamonds in half or whole hoop style, but it might discourage some marrying youth were the price quoted.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

GREATEST OF TOWN BUILDERS



Rome was not built in a day; but your Uncle Sam has on his payroll a uniformed patriot, a sort of supercontractor, who in five months has built 16 little Romes in the United States of America, a feat that takes its place in the annals of American history as one of the most remarkable achievements of the world's greatest republic, an engineering enterprise of modern times, rivaling in every way the work of General Goethals in building the Panama canal.

This man who has built towns over night is Col. Isaac W. Littell, quartermaster corps, war department, in charge of the construction of the cantonment camps for the training of the selective army now going into camp. To get a comprehensive idea of the wonderful work under the direction of Colonel Littell, acting as the representative of the secretary of war, one has but to make a few comparisons with cities of corresponding size in the states where the cantonments have been located many of the camps are as large as the nearby cities.

The cantonment at Wrightstown, N. J., houses a population almost equal to the entire resident population of Atlantic City. The 40,000 men under roof at Columbia, S. C., are more than two-thirds the population of Charleston, S. C. Two cantonments the size of Camp Meade at Annapolis Junction, Md., would make a second city of Wilmington, Del., home of the powder kings of America. The new camp at Fort Riley, Kan., mobilizes at that point a new city as big as Topeka in point of population. Texas' camp at Fort Sam Houston is greater than the city of El Paso.

CARRIES BURDEN OF WAR FINANCE

International Film Service

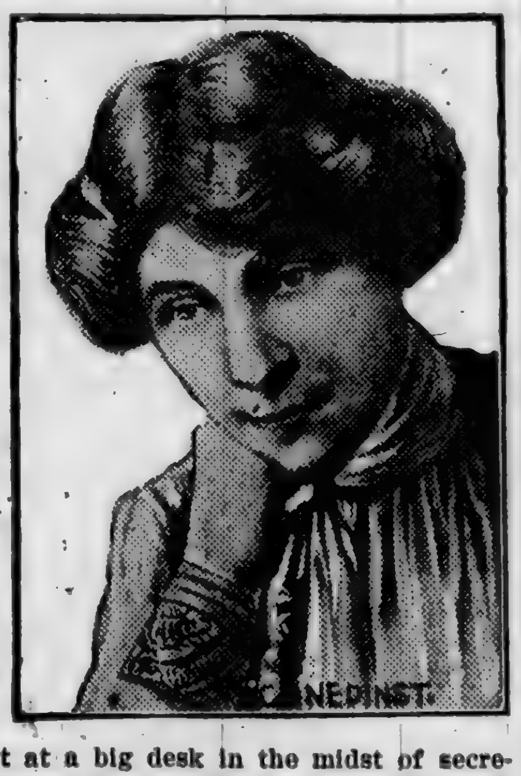
Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City bank of New York, has entered upon his duties as chairman of the special committee appointed by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo to engineer the sale of $2,000,000,000 of war savings certificates, provided for in the $11,538,000,000 bond and certificate bill.

Mr. Vanderlip was at one time a reporter and later financial editor of the Chicago Tribune.

His headquarters will be in the treasury department, and he expects to spend about four days a week in Washington while engaged in the work of floating the war savings certificates. The remainder of his time he will spend in New York looking after his duties as president of the National City bank.

As chairman of the war savings certificates committee he will receive a salary from the government of $1 a year. Mr. Vanderlip emphasized that he was not giving up his place with the bank or his other interests, but only was giving up his active work with them for the time being to devote his time to the government.

CARES FOR SOLDIERS' COMFORT



"Begin shipping at once one and one-half million each knitted mufflers, sweaters, socks and wristlets. These are desperately needed before cold weather."

This is part of a cable message which was rushed to Red Cross headquarters in Washington the other month. It was sent by Maj. Grayson M. P. Murphy, head of the Red Cross commission in France, which is finding out exactly the needs of the men in the trenches.

An interviewer sped across the open grounds of the state, war and navy building to the new white haven of mercy on Seventeenth street to find out how this order was to be met. Realizing that only the recently created woman's bureau could handle such a demand, its circumscribed quarters in the much overcrowded building were sought.

The new director of the woman's bureau, Miss Florence M. Marshall, sat at a big desk in the midst of secretaries. A knitted sweater meant Christmas for someone in a foreign land, a partly made khaki comfort kit bespoke a thought of home care for some soldier lad.

By a happy combination of circumstances, just before the cable for the "woolies" came from France, the Red Cross had purchased 1,000,000 pounds of knitting wool, to be knitted by American women into garments to protect American soldiers and sailors from cold this winter. This yarn is being distributed to Red Cross warehouses and sold at lowest possible price to the chapters throughout the United States. The proceeds from the sales are turned back into the treasury of the Red Cross and made available for further purchases.

MAY BRING PEACE TO WORLD

The least compromised of Germany's few really clever diplomats, Dr. Richard von Kuhlmann, has been recalled from Constantinople and placed at the head of the imperial foreign office. Many observers, both within and without the German empire, think that this young and brilliant diplomat has been appointed with a view to conducting peace negotiations, and they point to his residence in Constantinople, The Hague, and London as likely to render him conversant with the finer points of the difficulties to be encountered, and they recall his former popularity in the British capital as a proof of his acceptability as a mediator by the allies. Turning to purely German opinion, we find that Dr. von Kuhlmann is suspected by the pan-Germans as being too sympathetic to England, but by the great majority of the German press he is regarded with admiration and hope. Whatever star may preside over his activities, says the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, his policy will assuredly exhibit a strong hand. Fate has given him a diplomatist's greatest conceivable task, according to this journal, "which is to lead the first great military power, thus far alone victorious on the battlefields, toward a just and lasting peace by reconciliation."

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

QUESTIONS FOR AMERICANS.

Here are a few of a long list of pertinent questions propounded by Senator Kenyon of Iowa during the debate in the United States senate on the prohibition amendment:

"Why do we prohibit the boys in the army and navy from having booze and permit those who remain at home to have it?

"If liquor is a bad thing for the boys in the trenches, why is it a good thing for those at home?

"When they are willing to die for us, should we not be willing to go dry for them?

"When the food controller asks everyone in the country to conserve the food supply, why must the food supply going into beer be excepted?

"If more foodstuff goes into beer than into whisky, why do we prevent foodstuff going into whisky and permit it going into beer?

"Sixty per cent of the nation, territorially, is dry. Are not the feelings of the people living in that territory entitled to any consideration?

"If the beer drinkers are going to rebel unless they get their beer, will the temperance people rebel unless they get prohibition?

"Why do not the temperance people claim that they will rebel also? The temperance people will be for the nation no matter if beer and whisky be forced on them. Their patriotism does not depend on having their own way.

"If some one were to take as much foodstuff as goes into booze and dump it into the sea, what would the people of the nation say?

"If someone should advance the argument that this was necessary in order to appease certain people who believed in dumping foodstuffs into the sea, and that if they did not do it it would arouse riots, would we accede to their request?"

PLENTY OF JOBS.

Peoria, Ill., was for half a century the whisky-manufacturing center of the United States. Its five great distilleries, the largest in the world, furnished 35 per cent of the whisky of the country. They used up 54,500 bushels of corn daily and employed 1,275 men. When these plants, on September 8, under the federal food control law, ceased operations—so far as the making of beverage liquor is concerned—did these 1,275 men face a jobless future? Not at all. Other manufacturers eagerly snapped them up. A leading business man of Peoria said to a Chicago reporter: "There is a place for every one of them in the tractor factories and other industries. We can use every ounce of coal the distilleries have been requiring and are glad to get it. Peoria will never know that the distilleries have been closed."

FIRST AID TO THE ENEMY.

The Baltimore Sun, an anti-prohibition journal, recently called attention to serious conditions in ship-building, due to drink. Work in many of the big shipyards is retarded, it says, because employees are "hanging about saloons and soaking rum into their systems, and, as a result, either staying away from work for days at a time or turning up unfit to handle their part in the vast team-work of modern industry. They weaken the efficiency of the whole industrial machine."

Thus in America, as in England, the drink traffic is furnishing first aid to Germany. At the behests of the liquor interests our government is playing into the hands of the enemy.

CONSISTENT INCONSISTENCY.

Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, an opponent of prohibition, voted for the submission to the states of the prohibition amendment to the federal constitution. La Follette's Magazine explains the senator's apparent inconsistency thus:

"Senator La Follette said that while he was opposed to prohibition he recognized the right of the people to settle all questions by the referendum, and for that reason he voted for the resolution."

The action proclaims the Wisconsin senator loyal to the principles of true American democracy and we, the people, commend it to every senator and representative in congress.

NOW ALL'S CHANGED.

There was a time when it was a natural part of a soldier's existence to drink and carouse. That day is past with the soldier sworn to defend his country's flag and representing the power and dignity of the nation. Strong muscles, clear brains, high ideals in the soldier, increase the fighting efficiency of the army, and these qualities in the citizen insure the permanency of our institutions.—Maj. Gen. John L. Pershing.

GOOD LOGIC.

Dr. W. A. Evans in the Chicago Tribune tells of his interviews with soldiers and sailors on the subject of prohibition for army and navy. He finds that they "will stand for it" but object to being singled out. If they are to be under prohibition they want the other fellow to be under it. They say, "If prohibition promotes efficiency and health in an army, 'as you fellows say it does,' it also promotes them in the men who clerk, sell goods, work in factories, raise crops, argue in court and practice medicine."

"I have been reflecting," said an old-timer, "upon the case of the average man, as his neighbors see him.

"If he is poor, he is a bad manager. If he is prosperous, everyone wants to do him a favor.

"If he's in politics, it's for pork. If he is not in politics, one can't place him, and he's no good for his country.

"If he gives not to charity, then he's a stingy dog. If he does give, it's for show.

"If he is active in religion, he is a hypocrite. If he evinces no interest in matters spiritual, he's a hardened sinner.

"I he shows affection, he's a soft sentimentalist. If he seems to care for no one, he's cold-blooded.

"If he dies young, there was a great future ahead of him. If he attains old age, he has missed his calling."

Can't Live on $25,000 a Year.

The somewhat irritating story of the woman who cannot support herself on a large income bobs up again. Mrs. Olga Kohler Florman of New York has been drawing $25,000 annually from the estate of her father, but she asks an increase because she has gone in debt. She alleged that her husband earned only $60 a week and that she had to contribute to the support of an infant son. The court allowed her a bonus of $120,000.

A Medicine for Women

For Forty Years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has Relieved the Sufferings of Women.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who continues to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

Mrs. Kieso Cured After Seven Month's Illness.

Aurora, Ill.—"For seven long months I suffered from a female trouble, with severe pains in my back and sides until I became so weak I could hardly walk from chair to chair, and got so nervous I would jump at the slightest noise. I was entirely unfit to do my house work, I was giving up hope of ever being well, when my sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took six bottles and today I am a healthy woman able to do my own housework. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and find out for herself how good it is"—Mrs. Karl A. Kieso, 596 North Ave., Aurora, Ill.

Could Hardly Get Off Her Bed.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—"I want you to know the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was in such bad health from female troubles that I could hardly get off my bed. I had been doctoring for a long time and my mother said, 'I want you to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.' So I did, and it has certainly made me a well woman. I am able to do my house work and am so happy as I never expected to go around the way I do again, and I want others to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Mrs. Josie Copner, 1668 Harrison Ave., Fairmount, Cincinnati, Ohio.

COLONIAL TYPES GROW IN FAVOR

Architects Turn to the Early Dwelling Styles of America for Their Inspiration.

DUTCH DESIGN VERY GOOD

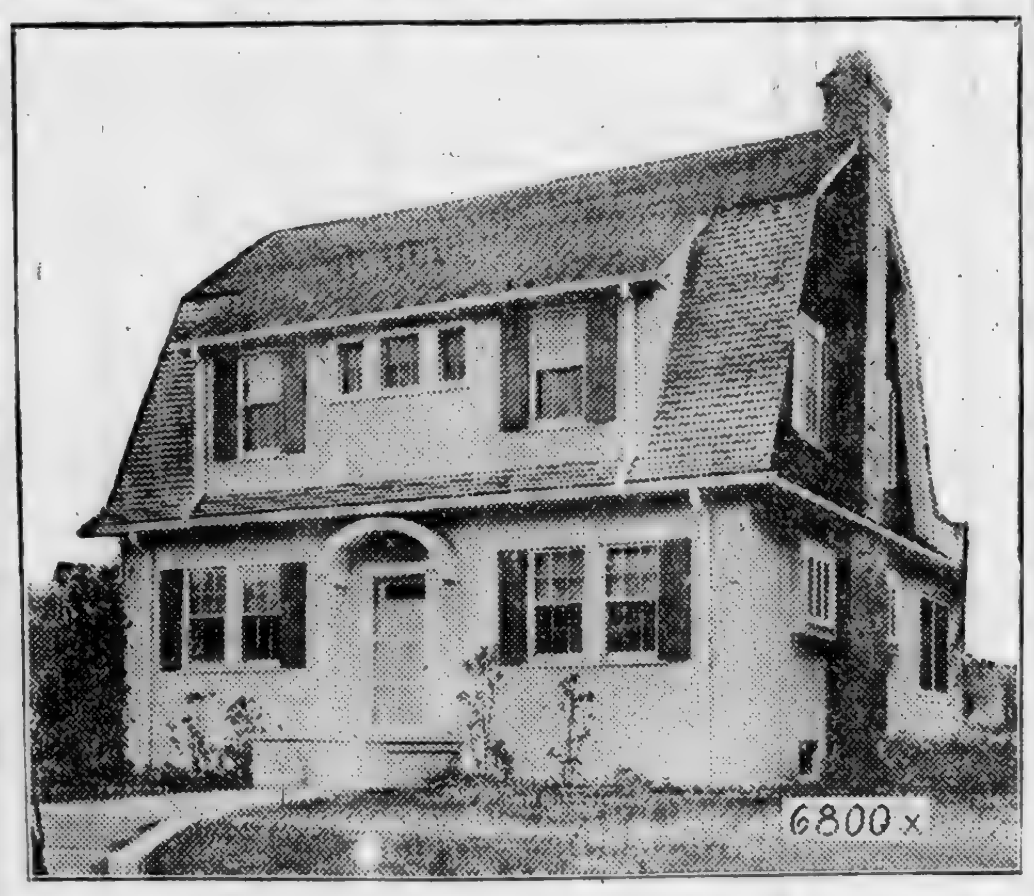
Model Described in This Article May Be Constructed Tastefully in Any Section of Country, According to Mr. Radford.

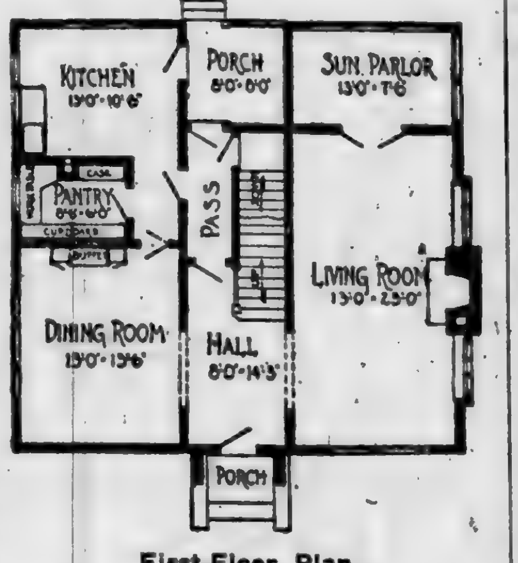
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

During the past ten years and at the present time there is a tendency among home builders to select a type of architecture which descends directly from the early houses of this country. The colonial architecture, in all of its phases, has been carefully studied by architects specializing in residence design and beautiful dwellings may be found everywhere which possess the characteristics of this style. All of the modern building materials have been used successfully in the adaptation of the early style to present needs and desires.

Among others there is the type shown in the accompanying photographic perspective view. This house with its gambrel roof and central entrance, divided sash windows and shutters is typically Dutch colonial. The walls of the first floor and dormers are finished with stucco and the remaining exterior surface is covered with shingles. The outside-built chimney is laid of brick. The design is simple, which is really a characteristic of the style rather than of this particular house. The dominating features of the house, as far as appearance is concerned, are the roof and the windows. The roof surface is large in the Dutch colonial style and a considerable portion of it has such a steep slope that it is used to take the place of walls for the second story on two sides of the building. The windows are fitted with shutters which are almost invariably painted some shade of green. It is interesting to compare the modern with the early house and one point of interest is called in mind in connection with the shutters. In the early days it was necessary to go to considerable trouble in order to close a shutter which had been thrown wide open. If the shutters were closed during a storm, one was certain to get wet and the wind would dash rain in upon the floor. The owner of the modern house which is fitted with shutters is relieved of this inconvenience and discomfort. If he wishes to open or close the shutters he need only go to the window, turn a small crank and the shutter is easily adjusted to any position, with the window either closed or open.

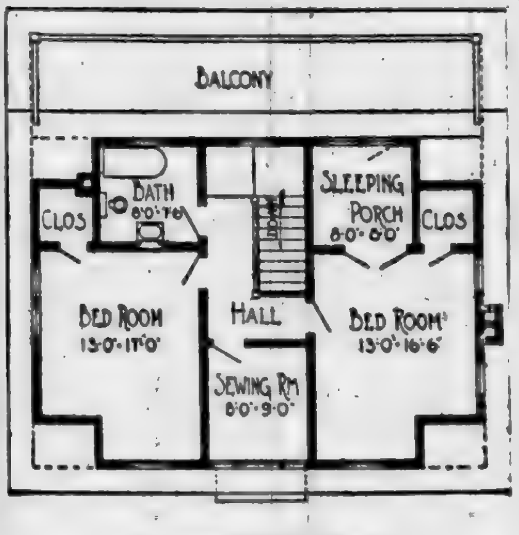




First-Floor Plan.

It is usual to follow a very simple color scheme in the decoration of such a house. The walls are usually pure white, the chimney is dark face brick and the roof is natural shingle color, dark red or dark green. In the design illustrated, this scheme is followed with the exception of the upper shingled walls, which are stained dark brown. The walls of this house are not pure white, but there is just enough color in their surface to produce a slight contrast between them and the pure white of the trim. It will be noticed that the house is symmetrical about the center line of the facade. This means that a balanced effect is built right into the house, regardless of the manner of decorating it. Because of this "mechanical balance," the most simple decoration such as the standard scheme just mentioned is most successful, the reason being that if the decoration is in any way strikingly attractive, a "stiff" appearance is produced. The beauty of the Dutch colonial style rests in the appearance which conveys the idea of trim, clean, neat lines and surfaces.

The colonial style of architecture has a very decided advantage from the standpoint of interior arrangement. This advantage comes out of the fact that the plan outline of a colonial house is always plainly rectangular, or very nearly so. Working with such a plan outline, the designer finds little difficulty in laying out rooms which are well-proportioned, well-lighted and convenient.



Second-Floor Plan.

The central entrance is at the forward end of a hall which extends back through the house to the small rear porch, in the plan. Just inside the entrance there is a large cased opening on either side of the hall. One of these leads into the living room and the other into the dining room. The stairway to the second floor is built in this hall. The small rear porch is set into the house, being simply a portion of the center strip provided for the hall. However, this porch does not project under a second floor room, which sometimes produces difficulty in heating.

The living room, 13 feet by 25 feet, is almost ideal for a family house such as this. In many living rooms it is necessary to give the effect of length by placing the fireplace in the end. This room, however, is long enough so that it can be arranged to give the impression of compactness. This idea is carried out by placing the large brick fireplace along one of the side walls instead of at the end. Such an arrangement gives plenty of inside wall space so that some well chosen furniture can be secured to fit in with the general scheme. An attractive feature of the living room is the window scheme on either side of the fireplace. The windows are in sets of three, set out from the wall. This places a narrow shelf at a little below shoulder height on either side of the fireplace—an excellent place for ferns or flowers which match with the color scheme adopted for the living room. With the double doors into the sun porch open, the floor arrangement gives a large unobstructed space along this side of the house.

The dining room, kitchen and pantry occupy the first floor space on the other side of the hall. The dining room is 13 feet by 15 feet 6 inches and is provided with an attractive buffet. A hall leads back to the kitchen and the pantry is on this hall. The arrangement is very convenient. In the pantry there is a large, well-lighted work table, a small case and cupboard. A chimney running up through the pantry has a thimble installed on the kitchen side for the range or gas stove ventilator.

The second floor provides two large bedrooms with closets, a small sleeping porch, sewing room and bath. All of these rooms except the sleeping porch are accessible from the central hall. There are double doors opening between the sleeping porch and one of the bedrooms. Along the rear of the house on the second floor there is a large balcony. This balcony is above the sun parlor, rear porch and a portion of the kitchen. Plenty of light is admitted to all of the second-floor rooms.

Mental Preparedness.

"Children trained from the very start to self-expression enter school with invaluable mental preparedness for the work to be done there. They have a poise that keeps them from being diffident in class. They are not afraid to ask questions, declares a prominent educator. They know how to tell what is in their mind. In associating with other children they get more joy from it because they know how to make themselves understood. Older people find them more charming and interesting.

"Effective training toward self-expression in the young child means that characteristic for life, and there is no training more effective than telling him stories and teaching him how to tell them.

"Asking about a child's doings will encourage him to tell you about them.

"For instance, when your little boy comes home from a walk get him to tell you all that he has seen while out. When he comes in from play get him to tell you all about the fun he has been having.

Red Cross Department

Judge Link is expected to give an address in the interest of the Red Cross work at the Newville U. B. Church on next Sunday evening.

Mrs. Price, Mrs. Shook, Mrs. F. R. Bowman and Mrs. Chas. Koch, were at Newville Tuesday afternoon and organized the Newville Red Cross class. The meeting, which was held at the home of Mrs. John Miller was full of enthusiasm and much praise is due the Newville ladies for the readiness with which they grasp the importance of this work. The hostess has two sons in the service and other mothers of sons in camp were equally intersted. Those present were impressed with the thought that the Red Cross well justified its existence if it fulfilled no other mission than relieving the ache of the mother-heart by the opportunity for service. The following officers were elected:

Chairman—Mrs. Gengnagle.
Vice chairman—Mrs. Ina Traxler
Secretary—Mrs. Fussleman.
Ass't. sec'y.—Mrs. Rupp.
Treasurer—Mrs. Joslin.
Membership committee — Mrs. McNabb, Mrs. Fussleman, Mrs. Hively, Mrs. Joslin.
Comfort Kits—Mrs. Ayers.

The sewing days have been changed and hereafter, there will be sewing on Thursday and Saturday afternoons from 1 to 5, also the knitting class will meet hereafter on Saturday afternoon instead of Wednesday afternoon. The yarn is expected any day now and it is hoped that it may be handed out Saturday afternoon to all those that will knit. Mrs. Libbie Milliman will be present and give out instructions. All that can possibly take part in this work are wanted as both sewing and knitting are very essential. Those in charge wish to thank all who have so kindly given of their time and help which has enabled them to get a shipment ready of the following articles: one dozen bed shirts, one dozen and a half Turkish bath towels, fifteen pairs of bed socks, one dozen knitted wash cloths, one half dozen pairs of pajamas, one dozen nightingales, three fracture pillows, one half dozen hot water bag covers, one knitted sweater and one pair of knitted wristlets. Scarcity of yarn has prevented from turning out more knitted articles. Any one wanting knitting needles leave orders with Mrs. H. L. Dunkle.

Keep The Home Fires Burning

Keep the home fires burning,
While your hearts are yearning.
Though your lads are far away,
They dream of home.
There's a silver lining,
Through the dark cloud shining,
Turn the dark cloud inside out
Till the boys come home.

Pack Up Your Troubles

Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag
And smile, smile, smile.
While you'e a lucifer to light your fag,
Smile, boys, that's the style.
What's the use of worrying?
It never was worth while, so
Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag
And smile; smile, smile.

Wait Till the War Is Over

Tune: "Wait Till The Sun Shines Nellie"

Wait till the war is over,
And we see the U. S. A.
We will be happy, Sammy,
Some fine day.
Back to our homes we'll wonder,
Happy, you and I.
Wait till the war is over,
Bye and bye.

when the Great Red Dawn is Shining

When the great, red dawn is shining,
When the waiting hours are past,
When the tears of night are ended,
And I see the day at last,
I shall come down a road of sunshine
To a heart that is fond and true;
When the great, red dawn is shining,
Back to home, back to love and you.

Let's Go

Tune: "Dixie"

In khaki suit and army visor,
All aboard to can the Kaiser.
Look away! Look away! Look away,
Germany!
In Kaiserland he reigns alone;
We'll push the Kaiser off his throne.
Look away! Look away! Look away,
Germany.

We're off to can the Kaiser,
Hooray! Hooray!
In Kaiserland we'll take our stand
Until we can the Kaiser.
Let's go, let's go, let's go and can the Kaiser.
Let's go, let's go, let's go and can the Kaiser.

There's A Long, Long Trail.

There's a long, long trail a-winding
Into the land of my dreams,
Where the nightingales are singing
And the white moon beams.
There's a long, long night of waiting
Until my dreams all come true,
Till the day when I'll be going
Down that long' long trail with you.

There's a long, long trail a-winding
Into No-man's Land in France;
Where the sharpnel shells are bursting
But we must advance.
There'll be lots of drills and hiking
Before our dreams come true,
But we're going to show the Kaiser
How the Yankee boys come through.

A Perfect Day.

When you come to the end of a perfect day,
And you sit alone with your thought,
While the chimes ring out with a carol gay
For the joy that the day has brought,
Do you think what the end of a perfect day
Can mean to a tired heart,
When the sun goes down with a flaming ray
And the dear friends have to part?

Well, this is the end of a perfect day,
Near the end of a journey, too;
But it leaves a thought that is big and strong,
With a wish that is kind and true.
For mem'ry has painted this perfect day
With colors that never fade.
And we find at the end of a perfect day
The soul of a friend we've made.

VOL. XXXI ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1917 NO. 43

Mill is Now In Operation

The St. Joe grist mill is now in operation again after a long continued vacation of several months. The mill is now in the hands of Chas. Abel of Garrett, who operates the Garrett elevator.

Since purchasing the mill of John Benninghoff of Spencerville, Joseph B. Haifley has been employed in completely remodeling the mill in every detail. The boiler was removed and shipped to Garrett and repaired at the B. & O. shop, and over three months time has been used in doing this work.

The manufacture of Daily Bread Flour has been resumed and the people are rejoicing over this fact as it was very inconvenient for the farmer with their grists. Some wheat has been brought in, but the mill is now in need of mofe wheat for grinding.

Don't it seem good to know that the mill is running.

HOOSIER YOUNG MAN TELLS OF AIR RAID ON ENGLAND.

In writing to his parents, Guy Brock of Hartford City, who is stationed at a camp in England, tells of witnessing an aerial fight on August 22.

Ten big German planes came over the camp and were attacked by the British. Two of the German machines fell in flames. The guns in the harbor, on a big monitor there, were booming so that one had to scream to make oneself heard, the writer says.

The planes came directly over the camp and looked like silver fishes in the sky. No bombs were dropped until the machines reached Dover. They were driven to sea there and back to Belgium.

WASHINGTON, INDIANA, FOR THE STATE APPLE SHOW.

The seventh Indiana apple show will be held this year in Washington, Indiana. This official announcement was made today by the executive committee of the Indiana horticultural society which manages the annual exposition.

The date remains as before, November 21 to 27. Announcement was made two weeks ago that the exhibition and the annual meeting of the society would be held in Evansville. It was found later that Evansville was not ready for the show this year. The contract now drawn up with Washington is final.

All fruit for the exhibit should be shipped (express prepaid) to Ebner Ice & Cold Storage company, Washington, Indiana. Here it will be stored free until needed for the exposition.

Veteran from the West

John Borden, of Buffalo Lake, Minn., is in St. Joe, this week, the guest of J. C. Hull and family and Mrs. Sarah Walter and other relatives.

Mr. Borden is a member of Co. D., 155 Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry and was enroute home from the G. A. R. encampment at Vicksburg, Tenn. He was a resident of the east part of DeKalb county, in the vicinity of Spencerville and Maysville many years ago where he has many relatives and friends. Some of these he has never seen until now. It has been fifty years since he saw his sister, Mrs. Manassa Rupert of near Spencerville.

Mr. Borden relates many pleasant memories of his early days in Indiana, being engaged in the saw mill business for years. When he enlisted he walked to Kendallville where many of the boys from this section enlisted.

During his visit in Indiana he has not found a member of his company and he would be pleased to hear from anyone.

Fell Through Manhole

The following was taken from Thursday's Dayton Evening Heald.

Blanche C. Woodcox demands damages of $10,000 against the city of Dayton for injuries alleged to have been due to the defective condition of its streets in a common pleas court action filed late Thursday evening.

She alleges in her petition that a manhole at the intersection of Warren and Jefferson streets was permitted by the city to become defective, and that when she stepped up to a mail box in front of which the manhole was located, the covering gave way and she plunged through. She alleges that she fell into the opening up to the hip with her left leg, which was broken between the knee and ankle. She says the ankle of her left leg was also broken, that she was confined to the hospital for many days and was compelled to pay $382 for medical care and nursing.

Be Careful About Fire

The fire waste of the country is excessive, and is sapping its prosperity. Reduction of the fire waste is an important part of the campaign for the conservation of the national resources.

Fire losses in the United States exceed $200,000,000 a year, most of them due to carelessness.

Fire losses and the cost of fire prevention in the United States amount annually to $500,000,000.

The cost of fires each year is one-half the cost of the new buildings erected in a year.

The legal doctrine of personal and financial responsibility for preventable fire loss is steadily gaining ground.

The annual per capita fire waste in the United States is $2.51; in Europe, 33 cents. Cause: The latter has better construction, less carelessness, increased responsibility.

Harry Shuff Writes Home

Montgomery, Ala.
Oct. 15, 1917.

Dear Father and Mother:

Received your letter this evening and very glad to hear that you are all well.

I started one letter to you this afternoon but when your letter came I threw it into the fire and started another one.

They are going to transfer all but forty-three of the men out of our company into the 5th. or 6th. but I do not go with them. The company will then be filled up with drafted men from Camp Sherman and they will be here some time this week.

You do not need to worry about me as this outfit will never see France. It is known as the Depot Brigade and it's duty is to train the drafted men and then send them to the trenches so I may be here for eighteen months or till the war stops, but we never expect to get any further.

We have been enjoying very nice weather only it gets very cold at night and I haven't slept warm but one night since I have been here.

What do you think, did I do what is right by buying Liberty Bonds? That way I can save some money anyway.

Well don't worry for I am going to come home Christmas if I can.

With love to all,
Your son, Harry.

WILSON WAR ACT SETS FOE APART UNDER NEW LAW

Drastic Measures in Proclamation Aimed Against Germany and Her Allies.

BOARDS GIVEN MUCH POWER

Both War Trade Board and War Trade Council Practically Without Restriction as to Their Acts—Exports of Gold Barred.

Washington. — Tremendous powers and responsibilities are placed in the hands of two executive boards by a proclamation issued by President Wilson, putting into effect the purposes of the trading with the enemy act passed at the war session of congress.

The proclamation:

By virtue of the authority vested in me by "An Act to Define, Regulate and Punish Trading With the Enemy and for Other Purposes," approved October 6, 1917, and by title VII of the act approved June 15, 1917, entitled "An Act to Punish Acts of Interference With the Foreign Relations, the Neutrality and the Foreign Commerce of the United States, to Punish Espionage and Better to Enforce the Criminal Laws of the United States and for Other Purposes" (hereinafter designated as the espionage act), I hereby make the following orders and rules and regulations:

WAR TRADE BOARD.

I hereby establish a war trade board to be composed of representatives, respectively, of the secretary of state, of the secretary of the treasury, of the secretary of agriculture, of the secretary of commerce, of the food administrator and of the United States shipping board.

I hereby vest in said board the power and authority to issue licenses under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law or to withhold or refuse licenses for the exportation of all articles except coin, bullion or currency, the exportation or taking of which out of the United States may be restricted by proclamations heretofore or hereafter issued by me under said title VII of the espionage act.

I further hereby vest in said war trade board the power and authority to issue upon such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent wtih law or to withhold or refuse licenses for the importation of all articles, the importation of which may be restricted by any proclamation hereafter issued by me under section 11 of the trading with the enemy act.

I further hereby vest in said war trade board the power and authority not vested in other officers by subsequent provisions of this order, to issue under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law or to withhold or refuse licenses to trade either directly or indirectly with, to or from, or for, or on account of or on behalf of or for the benefit of, any other person with knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that such other person is an enemy or an ally of enemy or is conducting or taking part in such trade directly or indirectly for or on account of, or on behalf of or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy.

I further hereby vest in said war trade board the power and authority, under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, to issue to every enemy or ally of enemy, other than enemy or ally of enemy, insurance or reinsurance companies, doing business within the United States through an agency or branch office, or otherwise, applying therefor within 30 days of October 6, 1917, licenses temporary or otherwise to continue to do business, or said board may withhold or refuse the same.

And I further hereby vest in said war trade board the executive administration of the provisions of section 4 (B) of the trading with the enemy act, relative to granting licenses to enemies and enemy allies, to assume or use other names than those by which they were known at the beginning of the war, and I hereby authorize said board to issue licenses not inconsistent with the provisions of law or to withhold or refuse licenses to any enemy or ally of enemy or partnership of which an enemy or ally of enemy is a member or was a member at the beginning of the war to assume or use any name other than by which such enemy or ally of enemy or partnership was ordinarily known at the beginning of the war.

I hereby revoke the executive order of August 21, 1917, creating the exports administrative board. All proclamations, rules, regulations and instructions made or given by me under title VII of the espionage act and now being administered by the exports administrative board are hereby continued, confirmed and made applicable to the war trade board, and all employees of the export administrative board are hereby transferred to and constituted employees of the war trade board in the same capacities, and said war trade board is hereby authorized to exercise without interruption the powers heretofore exercised by said exports administrative board.

The said war trade board is hereby authorized and empowered to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient to administer the powers hereby conferred. And I hereby vest in the war trade board the power conferred upon the president by section 5 (A) to make such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with law, as may be necessary and proper for the exercise of the power conferred upon said board.

WAR TRADE COUNCIL.

I hereby establish a war trade council, to be composed of the secretary of state, secretary of the treasury, secretary of agriculture, secretary of commerce, the food administrator and the chairman of the shipping board, and I hereby authorize and direct the said war trade council thus constituted to act in an advisory capacity in such matters under said acts as may be referred to it by the president of the war trade board.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

I hereby vest in the secretary of the treasury the executive administration of any investigation, regulation or prohibition of any transaction in foreign exchange, export or earmarking of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency, transfers of credit in any form (other than credits relating solely to transactions to be executed wholly within the United States and transfers of evidences of indebtedness or of the ownership of property between the United States and any foreign country or between residents of one or more foreign countries by any person within the United States), and I hereby vest in the secretary of the treasury the authority and power to require any person engaged in any such transaction to furnish under oath complete information relative thereto, including the production of any books or accounts, contracts, letters or other papers in connection therewith in the custody or control of such person, either before or after such transaction is completed.

I further hereby vest in the secretary of the treasury the executive administration of the provisions of subsection (C) of section 3 of the trading with the enemy act, relative to sending, or taking out of, or bringing into, or attempting to send, take out of, or bring into, the United States any letter, writing or tangible form of communication, except in the regular course of the mail; and of the sending, taking, or transmitting or attempting to send, take or transmit out of the United States any letter or other writing, book, map, plan or other paper, picture or any telegram, cablegram, or wireless message or other form of communication intended for or to be delivered, directly or indirectly, to any enemy or ally of enemy. And said secretary of the treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to issue licenses to send, take or transmit out of the United States anything otherwise forbidden by said subsection (C) and give such consent or grant such exemption in respect thereto as is not inconsistent with law or to withhold or refuse the same.

I further authorize the secretary of the treasury to grant a license under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law or to withhold or refuse the same to any enemy or ally of enemy insurance or reinsurance company doing business within the United States through an agency or branch office or otherwise, which shall make application within 30 days of October 6, 1917.

I hereby authorize and direct the secretary of the treasury, for the purpose of such executive administration, to take such measures, adopt such administrative procedure and use such agency or agencies as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for that purpose. The proclamation of the president, dated September 7, 1917, made under authority vested in him by title VII of said act of congress, approved June 15, 1917, shall remain in full force and effect. The executive order, dated September 7, 1917, made under the authority of said title, shall remain in full force and effect until new regulations shall have been established by the president or by the secretary of the treasury with the approval of the president, and thereupon shall be superseded.

CENSORSHIP BOARD.

I hereby establish a censorship board, to be composed of representatives, respectively, of the secretary of war, the secretary of the navy, the postmaster general, the war trade board and the chairman of the committee on public information.

And I hereby vest in said censorship board the executive administration of the rules, regulations and proclamations from time to time, established by the president under subsection (D) of section 3 of the trading with the enemy act, for the censorship of communications by mail, cable, radio or other means of transmission passing between the United States and any foreign country from time to time specified by the president, or carried by any vessel or other means of transportation touching at any port, place or territory of the United States and bound to or from any foreign country.

The said censorship board is hereby authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient to administer the powers hereby conferred.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

I further hereby vest in the federal trade commission the power and authority to issue licenses under such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law or to withhold or refuse the same, to any citizen of the United States or any corporation organized within the United States, to file and prosecute applications in the country of an enemy or ally of enemy for letter patent or for registration of trade-mark, print, label, or copyright, and to pay the fees required by law and the customary agents' fees, the maximum amount of which in each case, shall be subject to the control of such commission; or to pay to any enemy or ally of enemy any tax, annuity or fee, which may be required by the laws of such enemy or ally of enemy nation in relation to patents, trade-marks, prints, labels and copyrights.

I hereby vest in the federal trade commission the power and authority to issue, pursuant to the provisions of section 10 (C) of the trading with the enemy act, upon such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, or to withhold or refuse a license to any citizen of the United States or any corporation organized within the United States, to manufacture or cause to be manufactured a machine, manufacture, composition or matter, or design, or to carry on or cause to be carried on a process under any patent, or to use any trade-mark, print, label or copyrighted matter owned or controlled by an enemy or ally of enemy, at any time during the present war; and also to fix the prices of articles and products manufactured under such licenses necessary to the health of the military and the naval forces of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war; and to prescribe the fee which may be charged for such license, not exceeding $100 and not exceeding 1 per centum of the sum deposited by the licensee with the alien property custodian as provided by law.

I hereby further vest in the said federal trade commission the executive administration of the provisions of section 10 (D) of the trading with the enemy act, the power and authority to prescribe the form of and time and manner of filing statements of the extent of the use and enjoyment of the license and of the prices received and the times at which the licensee shall make payment to the alien property custodian; and the amounts of said payments, in accordance with the trading with the enemy act.

I further hereby vest in the federal trade commission the power and authority, whenever in its opinion the publication of an invention or the granting of a patent may be detrimental to the public safety or defense, or may assist the enemy, or endanger the successful prosecution of the war, to order that the invention be kept a secret and the grant of letters patent withheld until the end of the war.

The said federal trade commission is hereby authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient to administer the powers hereby conferred.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

I hereby vest in the postmaster general the executive administration of all the provisions (except the penal provisions) of section 19 of the trading with the enemy act, relating to the printing, publishing or circulation in any foreign language of any news item, editorial or other printed matter respecting the government of the United States or of any nation engaged in the present war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war or any matter relating thereto, and the filing with the postmaster at the place of publication in the form of an affidavit of a true and complete translation of the entire article containing such matter proposed to be published in such print, newspaper or publication, and the issuance of permits for the printing, publication and distribution thereof, free from said restriction. And the postmaster general is authorized and empowered to issue such permits upon such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law, and to refuse, withhold or revoke the same.

The sum of $35,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby allotted out of the funds appropriated by the trading with the enemy act to be expended by the postmaster general in the administration of said section 19 thereof.

The postmaster general is hereby authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient to administer the power hereby conferred.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

I hereby vest in the secretary of state the executive administration of the provisions of subsection (B) of section 3 of the trading with the enemy act relative to any person transporting or attempting to transport any subject or citizen of an enemy or ally of an enemy nation, and relative to transporting or attempting to transport by any owner, master or other person in charge of a vessel of American registry from any place to any other place, such subject or citizen of an enemy or enemy ally.

And I hereby authorize and empower the secretary of state to issue licenses for such transportation of enemies and enemy allies or to withhold or refuse the same.

And said secretary of state is hereby authorized and empowered to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient to administer the powers hereby conferred and to grant, refuse, withhold or revoke licenses thereunder.

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

I hereby vest in the secretary of commerce the power to review the refusal of any collector of customs under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the trading with the enemy act, to clear any vessel, domestic or foreign, for which clearance is required by law.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

I hereby vest in an alien property custodian, to be hereafter appointed, the executive administration of all the provisions of section 7 (A), section 7 (C) and section 7 (D) of the trading with the enemy act, including all power and authority to require lists and reports and to extend the time for filing the same, conferred upon the president by the provisions of said section 7 (A) and including the power and authority conferred upon the president by the provisions of said section 7 (C) to require the conveyance, transfer, assignment, delivery or payment to himself, at such time and in such manner as he shall prescribe, of any money or other properties owing to or belonging to or on behalf of, or for the benefit of any enemy or ally of an enemy not holding a license granted under the provisions of the trading with the enemy act, which, after investigation, said alien property custodian shall determine is so owing or so belongs or is so held.

Any person who desires to make conveyance, transfer, payment, assignment or delivery under the provisions of section 7 (D) of the trading with the enemy act, to the alien property custodian of any money or other property owing to or held for, by or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy, not holding a license granted as provided in the trading with the enemy act or to whom any obligation or form of liability to such enemy or ally of enemy is presented for payment, shall file application with the alien property custodian for consent and permit to so convey, transfer, assign, deliver or pass such money or other property to him, and said alien property custodian is hereby authorized to exercise the power and authority conferred upon the president by the provisions of section 7 (D) to consent and to issue permit upon such terms and conditions as are not inconsistent with law or to withhold or refuse the same.

I further vest in the alien property custodian the executive administration of all the provisions of section 8 (A), section 8 (B) and section 9 of the trading with the enemy act, so far as said sections relate to the power and duties of said alien property act.

I vest in the attorney general all power and authority conferred upon the president by the provisions of section 9 of the trading with the enemy act.

The alien property custodian, to be hereafter appointed, is hereby authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or expedient and not inconsistent with law to administer the powers hereby conferred; and he shall further have the power and authority to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of said section 7 (A), section 7 (C), section 7 (D), section 8 (A) and section 8 (D) conferred upon the president by the provisions thereof and by the provisions of section 5 (A), said rules and regulations to be duly approved by the attorney general.

The alien property custodian, to be hereafter appointed, shall, "under the supervision and direction of the president, and under such rules and regulations as the president shall prescribe," have administration of all moneys (including checks and drafts payable on demand) and of all property, other than money, which shall come into his possession in pursuance of the provisions of the trading with the enemy act, in accordance with the provisions of section 6, section 10 and section 12 thereof.

TO CHECK BOND SHRINKAGE

Treasury Officials Have Realized the Necessity of Coming to Aid of the Market.

Washington.—Treasury officials, concerned over the downward tendency of the bond market as an outgrowth of Liberty-loan financing, have determined to take steps to check the shrinkage in gilt-edged bond values so far as consistent with governmental action and sound financing

To this end the controller of the currency issued a statement announcing that he had instructed all national bank examiners that they need not require national banks holding high-grade bonds of unquestioned intrinsic value and merit to charge them down to present abnormal figures, but to exercise "an intelligent and conservative discretion" as to the prices at which the banks can continue to carry such securities.

This action, it is thought, will tend to prevent undue tightening of the money market with the further decline of bonds, a process which, if continued for a considerable period of time, might lead to heavy losses by the investors in such securities and to the consequent detriment of the properties upon which they are issued.

Similar action was taken by the controller at the outbreak of the European war when security values dropped precipitately to low records.

For months past virtually all securities have been steadily diminishing in quoted values.

BETTER STORAGE METHODS URGED

Food Administration Seeks to Reduce Annual Wastage in Potatoes.

SMALL GROWERS WARNED

Much of Loss From Sweating, Disease, Frost and Other Causes Can Be Prevented, Declares Expert.

Washington.—A large part of the potato crop of the United States is wasted every year through the existence of bad storage conditions. The government food administration is determined that this loss shall be reduced this year, when every bushel of potatoes will be needed by the people of this country. In order to secure the adoption of the best storage methods by the small growers of the country, Lou D. Sweet, head of the potato division of the food administration, has issued the following statement:

"It is of great importance that all the potatoes raised this year should be stored under proper conditions. Even when every precaution is taken the wastage of potatoes during the winter is considerable; under bad conditions of storage it is very great indeed.

"In order that the best methods may be adopted by the small growers, those who have not had the experience in the storage of potatoes, should know the chief causes of the wastage. These causes are:

"1. Sweating, heating and consequent rot: often due to insufficient ventilation.

"2. Rotting, due to potatoes getting wet at the time of putting them in storage.

"3. Injury from frost.

"4. Decay, owing to disease in the tubers at the time of storage.

"5. Sprouting of tubers in the spring.

Losses May Be Reduced.

"It is not possible to prevent altogether losses from these causes, but by using the best methods of storage, it is possible to reduce them very materially.

"This may be done by taking care to guard against losses from each of these causes:

"Sweating and heating occur if the freshly dug potatoes are piled in too large piles, so that the air cannot circulate between the tubers. The risk of loss from this cause is greatest in the fall, immediately after the tubers have been dug, and it is, therefore, important that potatoes when dug should not be put in unnecessarily large piles, nor kept in an ill-ventilated room.

"If the potatoes at the digging time are allowed to get wet and go into storage in that condition, rotting is sure to occur. Be careful to have your potatoes dry before storing.

"Potatoes are easily damaged by frost. If they become frozen, there market value is destroyed. Therefore, take precaution to protect the tubers from frost before and after digging.

Eliminate Diseased Tubers.

"There are several diseases of the potato which destroy the tuber, and if diseased tubers are mixed with the sound ones, the disease spreads rapidly; therefore, it is necessary to sort the potatoes carefully, eliminating all of the disease, the cuts, culls, and dirt before placing them into permanent storage for the winter. All of the cuts, culls, misshapen and diseased tubers should be fed to the poultry and live stock, but should be steamed or boiled before being fed, as in this way you increase the food value, and also destroy the germs of the disease, so that it will not get into the manure and thence into the land.

"By proper ventilation of the cellar or storage room, and by holding the temperature as near 35 degrees F. as possible, you can keep the potatoes from sprouting.

"Seed for next year's planting should be selected from hills that produce all nice, true to type potatoes. These should be selected at the digging time, and stored separately in crates or boxes, and by storing them in a well-lighted room where the temperature can be held at from 34 to 40 degrees, with a little ventilation and this seed planted next spring, the grower will make a start toward improving the quality of his potatoes, instead of as in the past, simply planting the culls or runouts."

Very Deep.

"They tell me young Whiffer made a deep impression when he called on the Lotserox family the other night.

"Is that so?"

"Yes; when old Lotserox helped him through the door he landed in one of the flower beds on the lawn."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

What the Draftsman Does.

Generally speaking, a draftsman, or draughtsman, is one who draws plans from instructions given him. A mechanical draftsman is an assistant to a mechanical engineer, and he draws the plans of the engineer's proposed works. If he is a mechanical engineer it will be plans of machines, bridges, etc. An architect plans buildings, and his draftsman, from instructions furnished him, draws the plans. The draftsman is largely a copyist. He creates nothing, but he gives expression to the ideas of his superior.

"Peter is hedging about referring to the fact that Craven put up a very prompt protest when you told me to take the necklace into the sunlight and satisfy myself."

"Yes," Peter admitted gloomily.

"Is the evidence complete enough?" Mrs. Beggarstaff questioned gently. "We didn't want to tell you this, Betty. For my own part, I'd rather you had conspired with Tad to smuggle—"

"Don't!" pleaded the unhappy woman. Bending forward, elbows on knees, she stared somberly at the carpet. "But how," she asked, "do you account for that perfect counterfeit?"

"Simply," Quoin replied, "after that affair of Thursday night, on my own responsibility I sent a wireless to Paris, to Cottier's, in Betty's name. The answer came through Friday night, saying that the original owner had sold a paste duplicate to a dealer in articles de Paris, which he in turn had sold to a chance customer—definite description unavailable—the same day that the real necklace was taken from Cottier's by your agent."

"It seems incredible. Of all men—Tad Craven!"

"You forget how little we know of him," the Dowager Dragon put in.

"Know of him?" Betty protested, looking up. "Why, everybody knows Tad Craven! Go out among our friends and try to find one who believes he would do anything dishonest."

"And still, I insist, you forget how little we know of him. Hark back into your memory, my dear. How long have we known him? Twelve or fifteen years at most. How did he come to know us? Through introductions to a few clubs, indorsed by Lord Evesden—who was later drummed out of town for card cheating, and never came back. But Tad Craven stuck. He didn't cheat, and he was amusing, and as long as he was personable, agreeable and seemed to have money nobody bothered about his pedigree."

"I've been looking Craven up," Quoin supplemented. "Listen!" He began to read from a tiny memorandum book: "Came to New York in '93 with a British musical comedy company. His wife, Letty Craven, fell ill during the run of the piece and died in a public hospital of quick consumption. After that Craven got a job with some show which perished on the road. When he turned up again he was training with a gang of professional sharpers with whom he played a few turns on the transatlantic ferry route as capper. But he dropped that before he became known to the police. Later he was running with a gay Lord Evesden; but shook him as soon as he felt solid in New York and those ugly whispers began to go round about Evesden's play. The rest is mainly circumstantial damnation."

Quoin put away his notebook and began to tick off his points on his fingers.

"It may not have escaped you that there've been some pretty stiff burglaries among our friends in the last twelve years or so. They weren't frequent; but they were all big hauls, and every one was well planned and culminated in a clean getaway. And it so happens, when one comes to look into it, that Craven was especially thick with all the people victimized. The biggest coup was the theft of the Joachim collection, worth several hundred thousand dollars. Now Lydia Craven, when she came aboard the Alsatia, was wearing a cameo from the Joachim collection which she said her father had given her on her fifteenth birthday. Discreet pumping on the part of Mrs. Beggarstaff has shown that date to have fallen just three months after Joachim was robbed. Incidentally, the cameo disappeared as soon as Lydia and Craven met on board. There's a sinister thread running all through the history of Thaddeus Craven."

His voice trailed off into silence. Mrs. Merrilees was eying him steadily.

"You never got all that information together since morning?" Mrs. Beggarstaff prompted.

"No," Quoin admitted. "I've had my eye on Craven for some time."

"Why?" the old woman demanded bluntly. "What made you first suspect him?"

"Well," replied Quoin, "he never rang true to me; and when it began to be rumored that he was a candidate for Betty's hand—I felt sure he wasn't worthy of her, and made up my mind to be sure before forbidding the banns."

After a pause Betty looked up defiantly. "It does make me out a bit of an idiot, doesn't it?"

"Nonsense! We were all taken in," Peter protested. "Look how I've always stuck up for Tad! But there's one thing I want to say: He may be a rotter, and all that sort of thing; but that girl of his is as straight and fine a proposition—"

"Do hush, Peter! We all know you're in love with her. But what is all this to me?" Betty protested with a break in her voice. "I hope you're right, Peter, and I hope if you are you may be happy. But what about me? To you, all old friends, I can talk about this terrible thing. But what about the outsiders? My name linked with that of a common criminal's—oh, I am ashamed, ashamed!"

Unknown to her, the Dowager Dragon was nodding vigorously to Quoin. This last rose awkwardly, and spoke with a hesitation uncommon in him.

"If you'll leave it to me, Betty," he suggested almost timidly, "I think I can arrange matters with Craven and recover your necklace tonight, quite without publicity. And"—he glanced at his watch—"it's a quarter of eleven. If I'm to do anything, I have no time to lose."

CHAPTER XIV.

True to her instinct for the dramatic moment, when the telephone interrupted Mrs. Beggarstaff answered with no apparent emotion and nothing more than a noncommittal "Yes?" followed at a brief interval by "Yes, if you please, at once." Then, hanging up the receiver, she set herself artfully to delay Mrs. Merrilees. "This is all very well," she announced with complacent determination; "but I want to know what real evidence you have got against Craven."

"Nothing," Quoin admitted, "beyond circumstantial evidence, which, however well grounded, wouldn't hold together a minute under the analysis of any able-bodied criminal lawyer."

"No actual proof?"

"Not a whit. You may be sure Craven never took an active hand in any of these affairs: merely engineered them with his inside information and superior intelligence. Be sure, too, that whenever a job was pulled off he was always conspicuously somewhere else."

"Then what do you propose doing?"

"Why—Betty permitting—scare him silly and run him out of town. I don't think we want more than that—aside from the necklace."

"That will content me," Mrs. Merrilees affirmed.

Here a knock fell on the door, and the Dowager Dragon, for all her protested infirmity, rose with the spryness of youth.

"No, don't go yet. It's only something I've been expecting. And I want one word more with you—about tho girl Lydia. Whatever you do, understand, I won't have her run out of town, or annoyed, or frightened, or ill-treated in any way."

With this she disappeared down the hallway. Followed a sound of voices murmuring.

Quoin and Mrs. Merrilees lingered in doubt and silence, the gaze of each seeking the other's; while, to one side, by these two forgotten, Peter Traft waited, watching, some little sadness and envy in his heart.

Not that he grudged Quoin the guerdon of a lifetime's unselfish devotion; but he felt quite justified in envying them the happiness that was to be theirs. If he could ever hope to see Lydia Craven look up into his face as Betty Merrilees was just then looking up at Quoin—

Betty, in a melting humor and a gown representing the finest flower of the Rue de la Paix, to Peter's fancy cut a figure that filled your eye. And in such matters Peter esteemed himself a distinguished amateur.

But once Lydia Craven had entered the drawing room Peter no longer cared to look at Betty. A fellow's got only a certain limited amount of eyesight, after all, and it's no good wasting it on anything he isn't really crazy about.

In the severity of her street dress the girl's figure had a graciousness that even Betty's couldn't shadow. And Lydia's face, set against the darkness of one of those trim little hats which in those days were just beginning to oust the art-nouveau-coal-hod enormities—Lydia's ruddy hair, the transparent pallor of her brow, the fine glow in cheeks fresh from the rainy night, her dark and animated eyes brightening with surprise and half-timid pleasure—taken altogether Peter thought Lydia's fairness was to Betty's as sun to candlelight.

But with delight apprehension was mixed in his mind. There were still some phases of life Peter hadn't fathomed; for one, the antagonism within the sexes—within the sex, rather; for it was the attitudes often adopted toward one another by the most amiable and delightful of women that perplexed his understanding.

Now, with real provocation on her side, what would be Betty's attitude toward this rival beauty?

His solicitude was wasted. Either he underestimated the generosity of Betty, or Lydia's ingenuousness disarmed. Constraint was absent from their meeting: they went at once to each other's arms.

"It's so good to find you here, Betty. Oh, good evening, Mr. Quoin—Mr. Traft, good evening. The best part is, I thought you were stopping here, and was in despair when I found you weren't."

"It's dear of you; but—"

"I was so anxious to give you—this!" As she spoke the puzzle box left Lydia's keeping finally and for all time.

Betty Merrilees uttered a low cry. "This?" she questioned in a strange voice. "What?"

"Must I say?" Lydia laughed. "I don't believe you really want me to—"

"Not my necklace!" the woman gasped.

"There! I didn't tell—did I, Mrs. Beggarstaff?"

"No, dear child; but we knew all the time."

Incontinently Lydia was overwhelmed by a very unexpected, uncalled-for, motherly and protracted embrace; which, while it didn't lack affection, served as well the most diplomatic purpose of preventing the girl from noticing Betty's half-hysterical attempts to open the puzzle box and that the Dowager Dragon was making significant faces at Quoin over her shoulder.

"Permit me, Betty," Quoin suggested. "I think I know the trick—"

In another breath the box was open, the necklace in its owner's hands.

"Merely my foolish delight to see you again so soon, my dear." A hand patted affectionately one of Lydia's flushed cheeks as, released, breathless, and wondering, she stepped back to readjust her hat.

"You're awfully good to me, Mrs. Beggarstaff. But I can't stop a minute. I've another errand to run for father—he's very busy tonight—"

"Another errand!" Betty Merrilees parroted out of a mind perhaps pardonably confused.

"Yes—I sha'n't be long. Father asked me to bring that to you; but promised to call for me within an hour. So I was to attend to the other errand first, and wait here with you for him. But my taxicab broke down and—"

"Craven coming here?" Betty interrupted incredulously, but checked suddenly at a look from Quoin.

"As soon as he can get away," Lydia affirmed. "I mean, of course, wherever you're really stopping—"

"The Plaza."

"That's just across the way, isn't it? It's odd of him to make such a mistake. He said the Margrave distinctly. But I'll ask for you at the Plaza in half an hour, if you don't mind."

"Mind! On the contrary," Mrs. Merrilees said pleasantly, "I'll be delighted. Tad, too. That will be fun—rather! We'll have supper together—all of us."

"And so—good night for thirty minutes," Lydia laughed. "I must hurry."

"Wait a minute," Peter put in. "I'm off too, you know, and going your way."

"How do you know you are!" Lydia demanded, smiling back from the doorway.

"Because that's the way I'm going."

"But I don't want you now, Mr. Traft—though I shall hope to see you again in half an hour. Good-by."

The hall-door closed, leaving Peter as dashed as Betty Merrilees was thunderstruck, as Quoin was thoughtful, as the smile of the Dowager Dragon was satiric.

There was a little pause.

"What," Peter demanded, "what do you know about that?"

"After her, you loon," Quoin snapped, waking up with a start. "If Craven told her to go somewhere else first, be sure he never meant her to bring that necklace here. Don't you see?"

"Ass!" Peter groaned, smiting his forehead. "Why didn't I think?" Seizing hat and coat, he threw open the door even as the elevator gate clanged.

The car had dropped from sight before he reached the shaft. Planting a thumb on the push-button, he educed only a thin, persistent grumble from the annunciator bell, steadily diminishing in volume as the car continued wilfully to descend.

Infuriated, the young man committed the soul of the elevator attendant to the nethermost depths of damnation and, turning to the stairway, plunged down the flights in breakneck haste, three steps at a time.

Across the lobby he sped as one hounded by furies, and gained the carriage entrance barely in time to see a taxicab pulling away from the curb.

Peter gave chase, affording midnight wayfarers the diverting spectacle of a beautifully arrayed young man—coattails flat to the wind and rain, top coat streaming wildly from one arm, the other brandishing the dernier cri in toppers—in mad, mute pursuit of a self-contained taxicab proceeding stolidly about its business.

Happily for Peter, its business involved observance of traffic regulations; and when it paused to give precedence to a Fifty-ninth street crosstown car Peter caught up—if something more rudely than he had thought to. Unable to check quickly on the greasy asphalt, he skidded against the door with a crash.

"Hold hard!" he begged between breaths. "Give me a chance!"

"What the—" commented the chauffeur suspiciously.

But at the same time Peter jerked the door open, and—a crawly, sinking sensation deserted his midst: the fare was Lydia, after all!

She greeted this breathless apparition with an inarticulate cry.

"You forgot something," Peter gasped in response, climbing in.

"What?"

"Me!" he declared settling into the place by her side; then thrust his head out of the door and panted, "It's all right, driver. Cut along—and don't go too fast—slippery pavements—"

"But, Mr. Traft—" Lydia expostulated.

Peter shut the door with a bang, and the car, with an unobstructed way, picked up wary heels and stole on up Fifth avenue.

Cardiff Is Prosperous.

Cardiff, Wales, has become known as the Pittsburgh of the British Isles. Like the American city, the coal mines are largely responsible for its boom, although shipping has played no small part. Some men who were shipping clerks two years ago now own a string of ships and coal miners are making $100 a week.

Just to show that it has made a lot of money, Cardiff invested $150,000,000 in the last British war loan. This works out at the rate of more than $750 a head of the population and is the most remarkable of all the contributions that came from any one city in the British Isles.

HOOSIER NUTS TO GO TO SOLDIERS

Plan to Have School Children Gather Crop and Send It to the Trenches.

GAS PLANTS MAY SHUT DOWN

Utility Plants of State Notify Officials That They Must Have Coal Supply Within Two Weeks or Quit Business.

Indianapolis.—A "nut day" for the children of Indiana, whereby the soldiers in the trenches in France will be provided with nuts from Hoosier trees, is the new idea that Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist, will lay before Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction. The original suggestion in the matter came to Mr. Wallace in a letter from Leo H. Fisher of Huntingburg.

The letter suggested that all country school children, on a certain day, should gather walnuts and hickory nuts (of which, the writer says, there is an abundance in southern Indiana) and afterward "hold meetings and each school can crack these nuts and extract the kernels and place them in one-half pound or pound packages and inclose return post cards on which the soldier can acknowledge receipt of the package."

The writer said he believed all the schools of the state should be enlisted in this latest "food drive."

"Let the pupils make a social affair out of it," the letter said. "I am sure all of them would enjoy the nut parties and the soldiers would enjoy the nut kernels. Trips throughout the southern part of Indiana show walnut trees loaded with nuts, and my past experience is that the greatest part of these nuts go to waste."

The matter should be put before the teachers at once, the writer said.

Indiana Crop Summary.

The weather for September (as shown by data in the Indianapolis station of the United States weather bureau) was favorable to nearly all crops as a whole, althought the temperature was slightly below normal. A killing frost occurred on the morning of the 11th in the north and east-central sections of the state, doing considerable damage to corn and other crops in low and muck ground. Precipitation was generally deficient and the greater portion fell during the first week. While the soil in some localities is quite dry, fall plowing and seeding is progressing very satisfactorily.

Corn Damaged but Little.

High-ground corn was damaged but little, and in the central and south parts of the state there was practically no frost damage. The crop as a whole, however, is from 10 to 20 days late, but will mature one of the best and largest crops the state has ever produced if no killing frost occurs before October 20. But little damage has been reported from insects or storms, and much of the frosted corn has been saved by putting it into silos.

The Oat Yield.

The oats yield is considerably above normal and the quality good, although some are slightly stained. The early crop of potatoes was exceptionally good, but the late crop was struck by frost in some sections and will not be as large as was anticipated. In the dark district the tobacco crop is one of the best in years. The burley crop is not so good, however. Unfavorable weather and poor plants reduced the burley very materially. Cold weather at blossoming time, and blight, blotch and coddling moth have reduced the apple production very materially. Only the orchards where modern methods of spraying were used will have a marketable crop this year.

Urges Drafted Labor Army.

Mrs. Jennie Conrad, farmer, of Lake county, who attended the meeting of the state woman's council of defense at the statehouse, believes she has started something that will bode ill for the chronic men loafers of the United States.

Mrs. Conrad proposes a drafted labor army that will be put to work to raise the food needed for the allied armies. Mrs. Conrad, who owns and personally oversees the management of 5,000 acres in Lake county, attended a meeting of the Woman's Farm and Garden association in Chicago, and the draft idea was so well received that the women passed resolutions calling on the government to put the plan into effect.

Mrs. Conrad then hurried on to get the indorsement of the Indiana women. A similar resolution was enthusiastically passed and will be presented to the men of the state council.

Riley Ambulance for War.

The project to send an ambulance to the Italian battle fields in the name of James Whitcomb Riley is spreading beyond the boundaries of Indiana, and Riley lovers from the East and the West and the North and the South are sending in donations. Everywhere the little folk are anxious to send not only the money from their banks, but are making money in clever ways so they may help to raise the necessary $2,000 all the quicker. A contribution to the fund means a gift to the men who are fighting for our lives and liberty.

Utility Plants May Close.

Many public utility plants in Indiana may have to close within two weeks unless they can obtain a supply of coal. This information was received by state officials. The Warsaw Artificial Gas company reported it could continue the manufacture of gas only until Saturday on its present supply of coal. The Connersville Electric plant reported it is without gas coal, that gas is being made out of steam coal and that no gas coal can be obtained. Lieutenant Governor Bush said that the state would await government action. He received a telegram from Secretary to the President Tumulty saying his telegram had been turned over to Doctor Garfield, who would take up the Indiana situation.

Santa Claus Box to Each Hoosier.

That each of the 1,808 men in the Indiana regiment of the Rainbow division awaiting sailing orders at Camp Mills, N. Y., shall have a box containing a half-pound of candy, a half-pound of fruit cake and a kahki folder filled with note paper, postal cards and a pencil from the Cheer Society of Indiana's Rainbow artillerymen as a Christmas greeting, was decided at the regular meeting of that organization at the Tabernacle Presbyterian church here.

Probably the most interesting feature of the meeting was the talk by Mrs. A. M. Glossbrenner, who has just returned from Camp Mills.

Hoosiers' Rainbow Regiment.

"The Indiana regiment is called the Rainbow regiment of this rainbow division, for it represents each of the 92 counties in the state, and the New York papers have been calling it the prize regiment in many ways," she said.

Splendidly Kept Kitchens.

She also spoke of the great praise which has been given the Indiana camp for its splendidly kept kitchens and for its appearance in general, reflecting much credit on the thorough training which the Hoosier men have had under Colonel Tyndall and his officers. The Indiana men, she reported, are the only ones equipped with rifles. "I didn't see a man who is not bright and happy nad cheerful and anxious to go across the seas," said Mrs. Glossbrenner, "and it was inspiring to realize that these boys of ours are going to fight not only for their country, but for us mothers and wives and sweethearts." She also brought the comforting messages to the eager women that almost without exception the men have taken on flesh and declare they never were so healthy.

How to Send Mail to Soldiers.

At some day not far distant, Indianians will be sending letters and boxes to their kin "somewhere in France." It is important that before that day the public, and particularly soldiers' relatives, should be familiar with the rigid rules laid down for the sending of mail to fighting forces.

The following instructions have been given soldiers at Fort Benjamin Harrison to be transmitted to relatives:

All mail originating in the United States or any of its possessions for transmission to soldiers and others connected with United States expeditionary forces in Europe is subject to United States domestic classification, conditions and rates of postage.

Parcels of fourth class or domestic parcel post must not exceed twenty pounds in weight and the eighth zone rate of 12 cents a pound is chargeable. Parcels may not be registered, insured or sent C. O. D. Every parcel must bear the sender's name and address, which should be placed in the upper left corner of the address side. United States postage stamps only are valid for the prepayment of postage on matter above described.

Mail intended for members of the expeditionary forces in Europe should bear the name of the addressee, official designation of unit or organization to which he belongs and the words, "American Expeditionary Forces." Under no circumstances should the location or station of a military organization be included in the address.

Unwrapped and unaddressed copies of magazines intended for soldiers and sailors of the expeditionary forces when mailed by others than the publishers, are subject to the postage rate of 1 cent a copy.

Money orders may be issued at domestic rates and on domestic forms, payable at the United States mail agency in France. Payment will be made promptly at headquarters of the agency or at the branch assigned to the military unit to which the payee belongs. Postmasters should refuse to accept for registration letters containing money or other valuables. Important papers which can be duplicated may be accepted for registration, but patrons will be informed that indemnity will not be paid for loss of registered mail. The public should be warned that it is not safe to inclose currency in letters under any circumstances.

To Arouse Loyal Support.

The Indiana State Council of Defense, in a state-wide campaign, expects to lay the cornerstone of one of the most virile patriotic organizations ever attempted in the state. This purpose, it is expected, will be accomplished only when every county in the state is brought to a point of effectiveness where the slightest request from the president, the war department, the council of national defense and the state government touching on war preparations, may be met promptly.

They Just Had to Wait.

Something was the matter with the stop-signal bell of the Toonerville trolley car, and the conductor had to whistle to the motorman, that trip—one whistle to start, two whistles to go ahead.

This wasn't the real Toonerville trolley, but a certain suburban "dummy line" which is so denominated by the facetious car riders.

At one place, the other morning, the car made a long stop, and some of the passengers began to get uneasy. One sought the rear platform and found the conductor eating a frugal luncheon.

"Say, how long we goin' to stand here? What are we waitin' for?" asked the passenger.

The conductor swallowed hard and was understood to reply:

"Looky here, I ain't got nothin' but dry crackers fer my lunch. An' you'll hafter wait till I git 'em all swallered good before I kin whistle!"—Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

An Unreasoning Complainer.

"Most unreasonable man I ever met. Kicks because he has to get up in the morning at six o'clock and throw coal into the furnace."

"Pretty hard, I say."

"Yes! But think of having the coal to throw!"

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

Germany and Austria have answered the pope's peace plea, but the war goes on.

Good business and hard heartedness apparently goes hand in hand many a time.

If you take the dollar out of the business of most folks they will take themselves out.

Naval men still speak of an offensive against the u-boat bases, but we see no signs of such an event.

The submarines seem to have lost their batting eye, but the fact has nothing to do with the world's series.

"God likes to have a little fun," says Billy Sunday. Maybe that's why some people were permitted to live.

Every newspaper makes mistakes occasionally; we are no exception, although nobody has jerked us up lately.

Did you use any of the 35,377,751 pounds of snuff which were imported into this country in the past two years?

The German chancellor was simply following the keynote given by Frederick the Great speaking in 1740: "The question of right is an affair of ministers. Taking what you can; you are never wrong unless you are obliged to give back."

"The object of this war is to deliver the free people of the world from the menace and the actual power of a vast military establishment controlled by an irreponsible government which, having secretly planned to dominate the world, proceeded to carry the plan out without regard either to the sacred obligations of treaty or the long established practices and long cherished principles of international action and honor; which chose its own time for the war; delivered its blow fiercely and suddenly; stopped at no barrier either of law or of mercy; swept a whole continent within the tide of blood—not the blood of soldiers only, but the blood of innocent women and children and also the helpless poor; and now stands balked but not defeated ,the enemy of four-fifths of the world."—From President Wilson's reply to the pope.

When You Become a "Conscious" Reader of Advertising

By J. R. HAMILTON
Former Advertising Manager of Wanamaker's, Philadelphia

When you learn to read your advertising as you read your news, the cost of everything you wear or use is going to be lowered for you.

If you knew how much money it takes to soak an idea into your mind subconsciously you would be ashamed of your mind. It actually takes as long as two years sometimes to get you to think and say a certain word.

It's like teaching a baby to talk.

Every known trick of psychology is brought to bear on you. Advertisers have even been known to print their advertisement upside down, hoping, perhaps, that if you had to stand on your head to read it you might remember what they say.

And what you so often refuse to receive with your will the camera of your eye records in spite of you. So that 96% of what you buy you buy through advertising whether you know it or not.

And yet, in the face of all this, the advertising method of selling things is twenty times cheaper than any other method known.

Think how much cheaper still it would be if you would only read your advertising consciously instead of buying through it in spite of yourself.

The merchant who doesn't advertise hasn't even a chance with the one who does.

Your eye is taking photographs every time you turn these pages. You couldn't get away from these advertisements if you tried. Even the man who claims not to see them at all is recording them all the time. Every merchant who appears here is telling you his story every day whether you know it or not.

All we are trying to do is to make you conscious readers of advertising instead of subconscious readers. This is being done equally for your benefit and for ours.

Every time you look for the advertising in this paper instead of making it look for you you bring down your cost of living, you increase the buying power of your money and you get a better quality for the price. This is true because the men who advertise are always the best merchants. They are the ones who last. The others flicker up for a little while and then go out. That's the proof.

On the other hand, every time we get a hundred more of our readers to turn each day with a conscious mind to the advertising news as well as to the general news, we make this a better medium for our advertisers. We give them more for their money because we give them your will.

And before we are through every subscriber we have will be reading his advertising consciously day by day—never fear. For this is another psychological law.

Granting Every Whim of Child Brings Trouble Later

By LAURA JEAN LIBBEY

When she asks for a gift not fitting
Unto her needs, be true and just.
It is you who breaks the thread in the knitting;
She plucks the fruit that is made of dust.

Haven't you often heard a wife declare with pride: "I have the best husband in the world. He has never yet refused his daughters anything they wanted, not even when they were children."

Instead of admiring such a parent, we mentally rebuke him for bringing trouble to the men who will become the husbands of those girls. It is wisdom to gratify the inexpensive wish of a child now and then, but it's alarming if a parent has not force of character and a mind to know when to refuse.

When you see a young girl wanting about everything she sees, you may well imagine there is trouble ahead for her. If her bosom friend has a lover whom she craves, she will have few if any scruples about winning him away from her. When she weds she will want a home fully as fine as her neighbor's. Whether they can afford it or not will make no difference to her. She will want to live at a twenty-thousand-dollar rate on his salary of modest two or five thousand per annum. It will take jewels, fine clothes, servants and an automobile to gratify her whims.

Such women look upon husbands as money-making machines whose sole duty it is to grind out dollars to fling here and there as a wife's fancy dictates. There is no let-up to the extravagances of such a woman. In truth, she is more to be pitied than blamed. From childhood up, no rein has been put upon her wants. It is a grave matter to attempt to educate her at the expense of the husband's peace of mind.

During courting days a man should be able to study pretty thoroughly the disposition of his sweetheart. If she pouts because he is not spending money on her pleasure every evening of the week in one way or another, he may be pretty sure she will not turn over a new leaf after the wedding bells have rung. Loving her with all his heart, he is apt to firmly believe he has influence enough with her to show her it will not be a hardship not to have all of her whims gratified, but he who marries a woman to reform her in this direction finds out to his cost the hopelessness of the herculean task he has set for himself. Her parents have spoiled her—have bent the twig in the way it grew.

Only the most powerful loving could counteract or uproot the misguided influence of the past. Many a husband has gone bankrupt—and indeed landed himself behind prison bars—to satisfy the extravagant, unreasonable whims of the woman he adored too well. No daughter—or son, either, for that matter—should be allowed to imagine his or her will is law to doting parents. All extravagance should be sternly put down, instantly refused. Home training sets its stamp indelibly upon youthful minds. If you wish to wreck the after happiness of your children, grant them all of their foolish whims.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don t Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

PRESIDENT SETS DAY FOR PRAYER

WILSON DECLARES OCT. 28TH AS PRAYER DAY.

ISSUES PROCLAMATIOM

All America Should Pray for the Success of the American Army at War in Accordance With a Recent Resolution Passed by Congress.

Washington—President Wilson, by proclamation has declared Sunday, October 28, as a day of prayer for the success of the American arms in the war, in accordance with the recent resolution of the congress.

Text of Proclamation.

The president's proclamation is as follows:

"Whereas, The congress of the United States, by a concurent resolution adopted on the 4th day of the present day of October, in view of entrance of our nation into the vast and awful war which now affects the greater part of the world, has requested me to set apart by official proclamation a day upon which our people should be called upon to offer concerted prayer to Almighty God for His divine aid in the successes of our arms;

"And, whereas, it behooves a great free people, nurtured as we have been in the eternal principles of justice and of right, a nation which has sought from the earliest days of its existence to be obedient to the divine teachings which have inspired it in the exercise of its liberties, to turn always to the Supreme Master and cast themselves in faith at His feet, praying for His aid and succor in every hour of trial, to the end that the great aims to which our fathers dedicated our power as a people may not perish among men, but be always asserted and defended with fresh ardor and devotion, and through the divine blessing, set at last upon enduring foundation for the benefit of all the free peoples of the earth;

"Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, gladly responding to the wish expressed by the congress, do appoint October 28, being the last Sunday of the present month, as a day of supplication and prayer for all the people of the nation, honestly exhorting all my countrymen to observe the appointed day, according to their several faiths, in solemn prayer that God's blessings may rest upon the high task which is laid upon us, to the end that the cause for which we give our lives and treasure may triumph and our efforts to be blessed with high achievement."

WISCONSIN SENATOR IS KILLED BY BROTHER.

Senator Paul O. Husting Shot While Hunting Ducks.

Milwaukee, Oct. 22.—United States Senator Paul O. Husting, of Wisconsin, died at a farm house near Rush Lake, Wis., late last night as the result of wounds accidentally inflicted upon him with a shot gun by his brother Gustave, while hunting ducks early Sunday morning. Senator Husting recently returned to his home at Mayville after the extra session of congress where he was one of the leading supporters of the administration's war program.

With his brother he had gone on a hunting expedition to Rush lake and the two men were in a boat when the accident occurred. He had sighted a flock of ducks and called for his brother to fire, and at the discharge of the shot gun he rose slightly, receiving the full charge of the gun in his back. He was rushed to the farm house where all efforts to save his life were unavailing.

ANTILLES VICTIMES TO GET INDEMNITIES.

Military and Naval Men Are Protected Under New Law Passed by Congress.

Washington, Oct. 22.—All hands in the military and naval service who perished with the lost American transport Antilles, torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine October 17, came within the scope of the new war insurance law, the treasury department announced yesterday and thereby automatically carried insurance of $6,000 each. The sum will be paid to the families of the dead soldiers and sailors in monthly installments of $25 each over a period of twenty years. It is in addition to compensation which will be paid to widows, children and dependent mothers of the men. A widow, for example, will be paid $25 insurance and $25 compensation, a total of $50. While the $25 insurance is a fixed premium, in cases where no application for insurance was made, the additional compensation varies from $20 for a motherless dependent child to a maximum of $75 for all dependents.

Former German Ship Wrecked.

Tokio, Oct. 22.—The former German steamer Darvel which for some time has been in the control of the United States navy is a total wreck on Strasi island. The crew of the ve[illegible] saved.

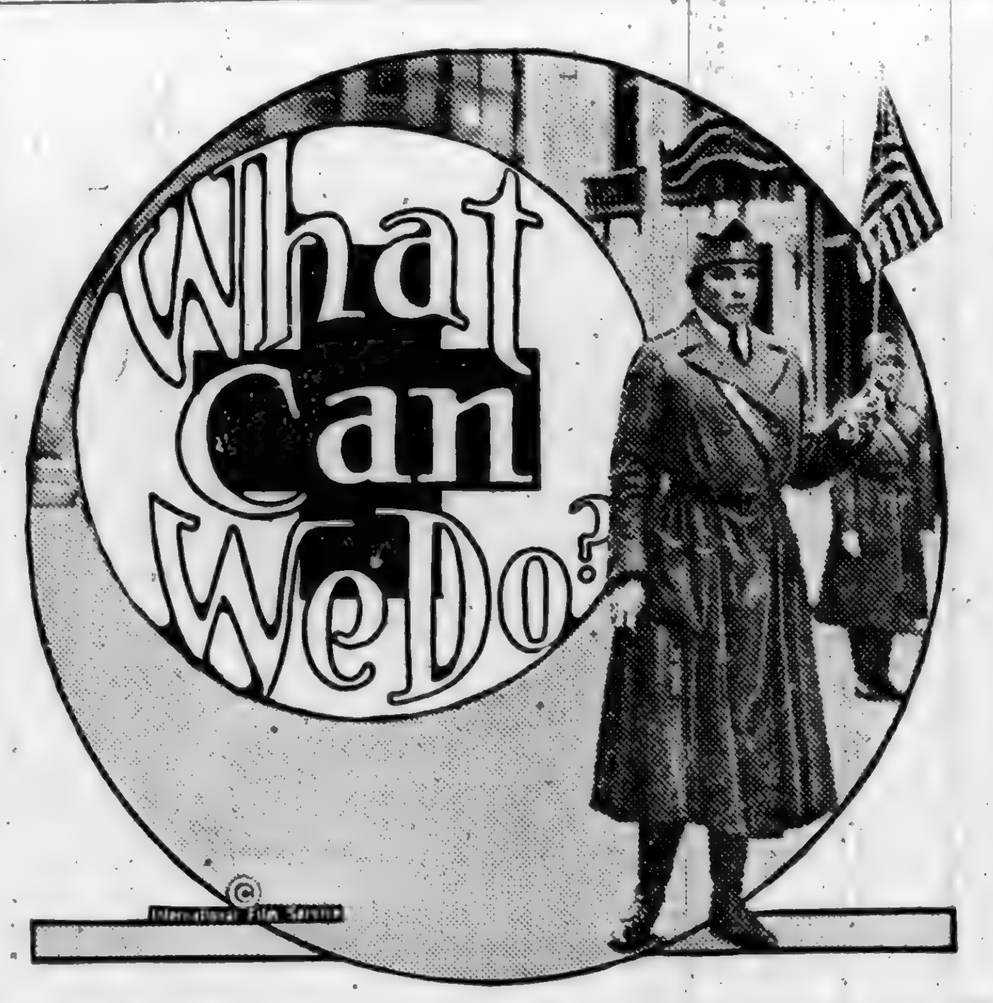
Shelbyville.—Mr. and Mrs. James Green of Shelby township celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary.



There is no time to lose now if Christmas boxes to the soldiers in France are to have a chance to arrive on time. They should all be ready for the last of October. The Red Cross will co-operate with individuals in getting Christmas gifts delivered at the right time.

Boxes should not be large or heavy and nothing that is perishable is to be put in them. This does not exclude candies or "smokes" or other luxuries that will not spoil. Probably the most appreciated present from home will be these things, along with a lot of kodak pictures of the folks at home or an illustrated letter, the longer the better. Comic illustrations are the best of all. Stationery makes a good gift and knitted garments—sox and more sox—among them, insure comfort. The boys want cheerful letters from home—they are a long way off and will just naturally be a little homesick occasionally.

The Red Cross suggests that Christmas bags be made of gay cretonnes or of brown or blue denim or other heavy cottons, with cutout figures appropriate to the season applied to them, such as Christmas trees, reindeers, holly wreaths and candles. These can be cut from printed cottons or other materials.

Besides the bags she made for her own, who are at the front, each woman will wish to do something toward remembering soldiers who may not have people to do a bit for them. There are so many inexpensive gifts that can be made at home. Among them the small portfolios of denim or kahki or of bright cretonne, are among the best of gifts. Rifle mits, scarfs and wristlets, and of course sox, along with sweets, and tobacco, take little time to get ready.

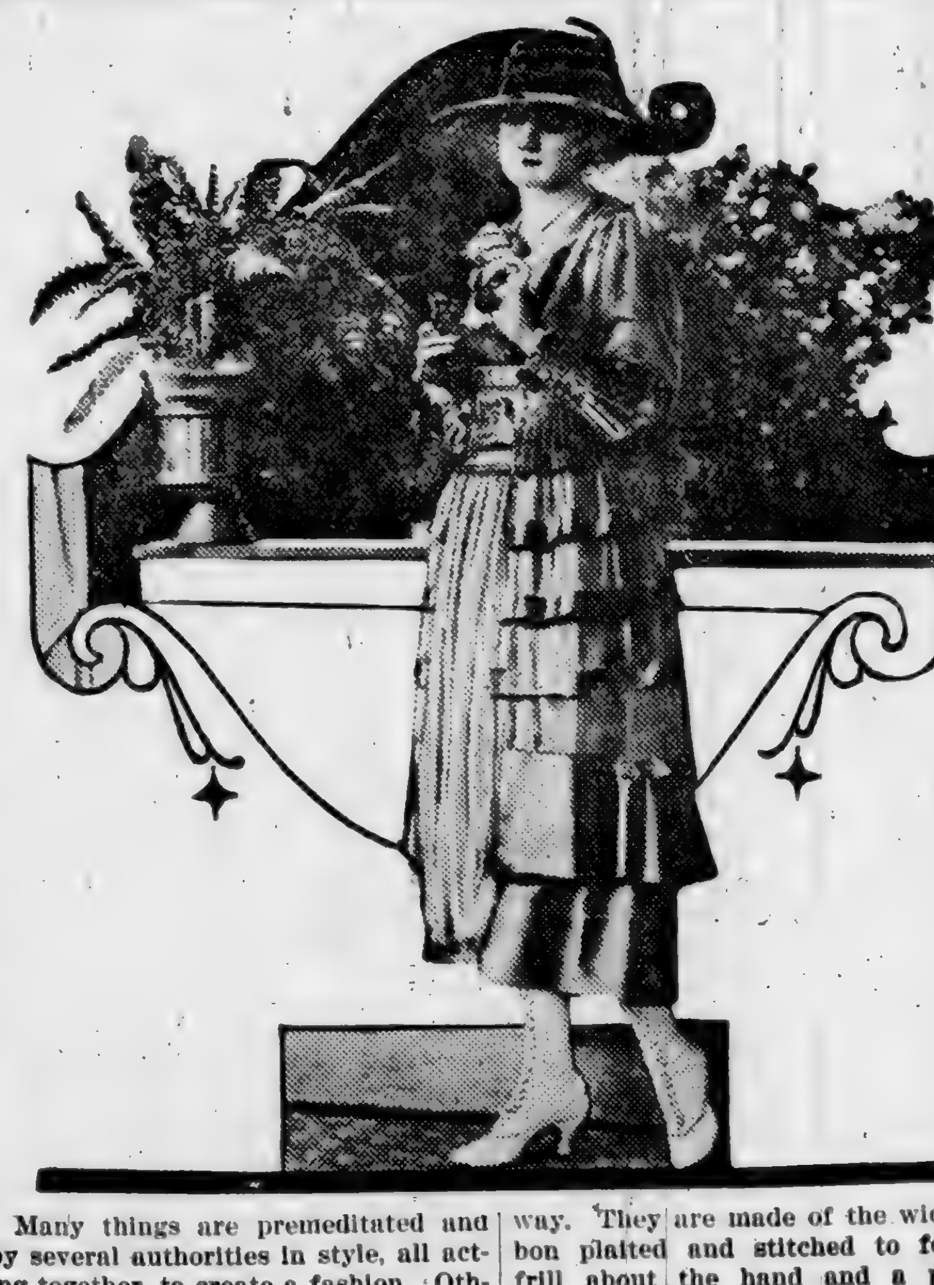
Save That Skirt That's Spotted.

If a skirt is worn across the front, or if you have been unlucky about spotting it, a panel and belt of contrasting materials will often make an old skirt new, says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion. When the skirt is of plain material, the contrasting can be a stripe, and will be specially smart if the panel is cut crosswise. Plain materials can be used where the skirt material is fancy. In a suit, collar and cuffs of the contrast will make an attractive addition. Then, of course, if you can match the materials, there is always that possibility, though in these days matching seems almost impossible.

Ribbons in Afternoon Gowns



Many things are premeditated and by several authorities in style, all acting together, to create a fashion. Others just happen when some original and independent designer has an inspiration and works it out without regard to what other designers are doing. Once presented a good idea is seized and made much of and this is what has happened this season in the ribbon-trimmed gowns. Some one used wide brocaded ribbon in a stunning matron-of-honor gown, and wide moire ribbon to drape the net dress of a debutante, and set the ball rolling. Now afternoon as well as evening dresses employ ribbons in their clever makeup.

A beautiful afternoon dress in which plain satin ribbon plays the most important part, shows what a good designer has done with this idea. Over a brown satin underdress a bodice and tunic of brown crepe georgette are trimmed with ribbon bands and plaitings. The underdress is almost entirely veiled by a full panel of crepe, gathered at the top, which hangs to the bottom of the skirt where it is caught in a pretty drapery. The tunic is not so long. It is finished at the bottom with wide satin ribbon laid in plaits. At the top of the tunic another band of wide ribbon is plaited and between the top and bottom are three bands of narrow ribbon applied to the crepe. The plaited band at the top extends above the waistline and parallel rows of machine-stitching form the definition of the waist and a narrow standing frill over the bodice.

The cuffs are managed in the same way. They are made of the wide ribbon plaited and stitched to form a frill about the hand and a plaited flounce over the forearm. Small buttons, covered with the same ribbon, finish the cuffs and are placed at each side of the small panel of embroidery at the front of the waist. Two narrow bands of ribbon, applied to the crepe extend over the shoulders and between these two, similar bands cross the bodice above the waistline at the front.

Julia Bottomley

Child's Hat.

Decidedly original and charming is a child's model in tete de negre, with a wreath of diminutive mushrooms in natural colors. Close fitting cloche shapes are still to be seen, and these show little adornment, beyond the originality of their making.

This usually takes the form of rows of ribbon or strips of silk, drawn to the required shape; a ruche of narrow ribbon suffices, with occasionally a tiny wreath of futurist blossoms set above it, while long hanging ends provide a graceful finish.

The Hat-Brim.

Artists will tell any woman that she needs a brim to shade her eyes if she is over thirty years old. This is an artistic axiom that is broken by thousands of women over fifty years old, and yet it is a safe statement by which to stand.

INFORM PUBLIC OF RED CROSS WORK

Heads of American Relief Body Undertake Extensive Tour of the West.

TELL HOW MONEY IS SPENT

Henry P. Davison, Chairman of War Council, and Harry D. Gibson, General Manager, Make Long Trip.

Washington.—At the request of the Red Cross war council, Henry P. Davison, chairman of the council, and Harry D. Gibson, general manager of the American Red Cross, have undertaken a tour through the West, in the course of which they will visit points at which division managers of the Red Cross have been stationed. The purpose of the trip is to meet with representatives of Red Cross chapters, also with those who have contributed to Red Cross funds and with the public generally. It is also the purpose of the war council to render an account of its stewardship, to interest the people in the work of the Red Cross and to let the public know just how the $100,000,000 war fund is being utilized.

Beginning at St. Louis October 22, the schedule for the trip called for large meetings to be held successively at Denver, San Francisco, Seattle, Minneapolis, Chicago and Cleveland.

Purpose of the Trip.

In announcing the purpose of the trip, Mr. Davison authorized the following statement:

"With the division of the United States into thirteen districts, each headed by a successful business man serving this country through the Red Cross during the war, the Red Cross organization in this country is now complete. Also special Red Cross missions, made up of competent and sympathetic American citizens have now arrived and are at work on behalf of the American Red Cross in France, Great Britain, Russia, Italy, Roumania and Serbia.

"Collections to the war fund of the Red Cross up to October 1 amounted to $64,424,232.90, of which $6,269,566.57 has been refunded to chapters to provide for their own Red Cross activities. Up to that time the war council had appropriated from the war fund $25,000,870.41. The Red Cross membership has just become more than four million. Included in that membership are hundreds of thousands of American women who are knitting, making surgical dressings and comfort kits. The Red Cross war council is seeking to render an account of its stewardship to the American people in the most effective manner possible. It is giving frequent announcements of its activities and every fact concerning the work of the Red Cross is available to everybody. We now wish to go a step farther and give a detailed account of our stewardship, as well as to advise with Red Cross workers and supporters throughout the country as to Red Cross policy and methods. We have felt that this could best be done by appearing face to face before audiences of representative citizens, telling the Red Cross story, answering questions, and ourselves gaining a more complete knowledge of public sentiment.

Would Inform Public.

"We are extremely anxious that the people at large should be fully informed as to the methods and policies adopted in handling the great fund with which the Red Cross war council has been intrusted and also that all policies and activities of the Red Cross should be in accord with a fully informed public sentiment. The purpose of this trip is not to solicit subscriptions or to take collections, although we expect to give to the American people the latest advice we have received as to conditions in France, Russia, Roumania, Italy and Serbia.

"Our reports indicate that the American Red Cross has an opportunity to lend a helping hand and to carry a practical message of cheer to suffering humanity such as no philanthropic undertaking in the history of the world has ever had before."

Accompanying Mr. Davison and Mr. Gibson on this trip is Rev. Robert Davis of Englewood, N. J., who has just returned from France, having gone to Paris with the American Red Cross commission in May.

Would Make Paper From Straw.

The manufacture of paper from the 4,500,000 tons of straw which must accrue from the planting of 8,000,000 more acres of land in England to wheat is advocated by farmers of the realm. Prior to the war England manufactured much paper, but, with the importation of foreign pulp stopped, the industry has lapsed. The board of agriculture of the island has been asked to act on the suggestion.

HERE AND THERE

Toleration is a better proof of love than action.

For shipping perishable goods long distances a Russian has invented an artificial ice, made by freezing solutions of salt at various degrees of concentration.

A resident of Venezuela has applied for a patent in that country upon a new dry process for recovering tanning extracts from the fruit of the divi-divi plant.

IMPROVEMENTS ARE NOT TAXED

Western Canada Does Not Tax Stock or Improvements, but Collects an Additional Tax From Land Speculators.

Owners of uncultivated lands Western Canada are loud in their protests against an extra tax on their lands because they are not under cultivation. Western Canada, through its provincial governments, is endeavoring to force the speculative land owner to either sell his land to a settler or to cultivate it himself. At present a surtax of a few cents an acre is levied against all wild land, so that the owner of land held in its natural state, without improvements, is contributing more taxes to the government than the owner of a farm that is cultivated and even improved with buildings and stock to the value of thousands of dollars. In order to encourage the farmer to improve and to go into stock raising, he is not charged one cent of taxes on any of his improvements, implements or stock of any kind.

As a result of this surtax on uncultivated or speculatively held lands, the owners are now trying to sell them to actual settlers, and, in nearly every instance, have been offering on very easy terms of payment, usually a quarter down, and the balance extending over a term of years at prices much lower than their productive value would warrant.

A world-wide shortage in farm stuffs has given a new value to all agricultural products and the margin of profit today is greater than ever in the past. It is true labor and implements have increased in price, but it is now possible to secure 50% profit in farming, and higher. Possibly not on the $100 to $200 an acre farm lands but on land that can now, under existing conditions, be purchased at from $15 to $30 per acre. Western Canadian farm lands are as productive as any in the world and can be as economically farmed. Wheat yields of from 30 to 50 bushels per acre have been common in Western Canada during the past few years, and the farmers have been too busy farming all they can so as to sell as much wheat as possible at $2.00 a bushel, that they have not had time to do any talking or writing. It is doubtful if there ever was such an opportunity to make big profits in farming. The value of each year's crop has been in hundreds of cases more than the market value of the land it was grown on. It is unreasonable to suppose such a condition will last long, as the land now being forced onto the market by surtax on speculative owners will soon become absorbed by those who have learned of these highly profitable wheat lands. The news is spreading gradually throughout the high priced land districts in the United States, where there is a renewed awakening to the realization that the maximum profit in farming is not being obtained when it is possible to secure from forty to seventy per cent return on the investment in Western Canada. Many who have been planning to visit Western Canada for the purpose of personally investigating conditions are leaving this month, when the good weather can be enjoyed. As threshing operations and marketing of grain is under way, no better time could be selected to secure first hand and reliable information from the farmers themselves. The winter months afford ample time for completing moving arrangements to allow the settler to take up residence in early spring, so as to get something done next year and to make a start on the big and profitable farming operations in Western Canada.—Advertisement.

A Saxon-French Cigar Lighter.

Several years ago the then new minister of France, M. Klotz, decided to impose a tax of two francs, or 40 cents American money, on each cigar lighter used in that country. The reason for this is that the sale of matches in France is in the hands of the government monopoly and the portable lighters interfered with the sale of the matches. On the other hand the matches have become so bad in quality that they are subject of complaint and ridicule. The law has become unpopular and there is an effort now being made to have the order rescinded. Notwithstanding the fact that an increased tax was placed on tobacco by the French government several years ago, it has caused a tendency to increase smoking and that is proven by the many smokers to be seen in public places and thoroughfares.

EZRA RETURNING FROM BABYLON.

LESSON TEXT—Ezra 8:15-36.

GOLDEN TEXT—The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him.—Ezra 8:22.

An interval of some fifty years intervenes between the dedication of the temple and the journey of Ezra to Palestine. Some stirring events in the world occurred in this time which greatly helped the Jews. It was during this time that the episode of Esther's being made queen and the elevation of Mordecai occurred, which favorably disposed the Persian government toward the Jews. The time was auspicious for Ezra to make his request unto Artaxerxes. The supreme aim of Ezra was the restoration of the true worship of Jehovah, for it is evident that the work done by Zerubbabel had largely failed of its aim. In order that Ezra might be an efficient instrument in the hands of God for the accomplishment of this purpose, he "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord and to do it, and to teach in Israel the statutes and judgments" (7:10). There are three stages in the experience of every true teacher. First: to seek the law of the Lord. Second: to do it. Third: to teach it to others. The last is impossible without the first two.

The royal commission granted to Ezra embraced—

(1) The return of all whose free will prompted them to do so (7:13).

(2) Ezra's being given magisterial authority over the district "beyond the river" (7:25, 26).

(3) Exemption from taxation to the Levites (7:24).

(4) Conveyance of offerings from the king and his officers (7:15, 19).

I. Register of Ezra's Companions (1-14). Doubtless this is a representative list of those who joined Ezra. There is clear implication that the twelve tribes are represented among those who returned. (See 2:70; 6:16, 17.)

II. Ezra Sends to Iddo for Ministers for the Temple Service (vv. 15-20). Before the journey to Palestine was actually begun, Ezra gathered about him his companions who were to accompany him, to see whether they were representative. In this review he discovered that none of the sons of Levi were in the company. So he sent chief men to Iddo, who was doubtless the president of the school of the Levites, for ministers for God's house. In response to this appeal, 38 Levites and 220 Nethinims joined him.

III. Ezra Seeking the Guidance of the Lord (vv. 21-23). The journey was full of deadly perils. It lay through a region invested with Bedouin marauders. Ezra, fully conscious of these, and ashamed to ask help of the king, proclaimed a fast, in which in deep humiliation they sought the guidance and protection of God. This is a fine illustration of the independence, and yet dependence, of the men who fully trust God. His chief concern was for the honor of God's name. He had so confidently and repeatedly spoken to the king of the divine sufficiency that now to have asked for a guard of soldiers would cause him to blush with shame. In this critical hour they committed themselves to the care of Him who keepeth Israel. We should begin every journey, every undertaking, every new piece of work, every new day by seeking the direction of God. No friendship or business interest ever reaches its best unless God's hand be in it and upon it. We should not go anywhere, engage in any business or have any friendship upon which we may not ask God's blessing and aid. They sought this for themselves, for their children, and all their substance. They knew that as soon as they made God first his blessing would be upon them, and as soon as they forsook him his power would be withdrawn and his wrath would be upon them.

IV. The Treasure Committed to Twelve Priests (vv. 24-30). Combined with their faith in God, we find practical business sense. Honest, trustworthy, good men were selected (v. 28). To such only should be intrusted the Lord's money—gifts offered freely to the Lord by his people. Again, the money was carefully counted and weighed, and the amount set down. The men were held accountable at the end of the journey for everything intrusted to them. Men ought to be held to strict account for everything intrusted to them, to the very last cent. The men to whom this was intrusted were holy; the gifts were God's; they did not belong to any man; they were charged with the obligation to deliver these gifts before the chief priests.

V. The Safe Arrival at Jerusalem (vv. 31-36). The journey lasted four months. They carried with them millions of dollars' worth of treasure, through a region infested with marauding Bedouins, yet God delivered them from their hands. At the end of the journey they testified to the faithfulness of God in bringing them safely on (v. 31). The safe arrival at the end of each day's journey is due to the good hand of our God upon us. After resting three days, the treasure was brought into the temple and burnt offerings were made before the Lord Jehovah.

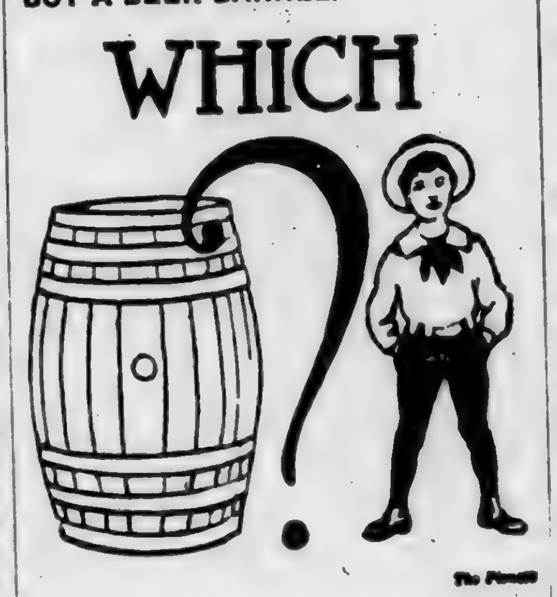
A DRY DIVISION.

Gen. John F. O'Ryan, commander of the New York National Guard, is a major general in the United States army. He is one of only two of the National Guard officers to be thus honored. General O'Ryan, who last year put his 20,000 border troops on the water wagon, takes a bone-dry division of 37,000 men to France. In an address issued to every one of these men on their responsibility for the efficiency of the division, he said this:

"Alcohol, whether you call it beer, wine, whisky, or by any other name, is a breeder of inefficiency. While it affects men differently, the results are the same, in that all affected by it cease for the time to be normal. Some become forgetful, others quarrelsome. Some become noisy, some get sick, some sleepy; others have their passions greatly stimulated. When you stop to consider the thousands in a division, do you not see how vital to efficiency is the elimination of liquor? If one officer or man is permitted to use liquor, then others will claim the right to do so. How can a division of troops be ever ready—ever up on the bit to drive ahead or thrust back the enemy's drive—if through the presence of this insidious evil some soldiers forget their orders or become noisy when silence is essential, fall asleep when every faculty should be alert, or are absent from their posts?"

Would that every soldier boy in our army could serve under such a wise general. And the mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts of the enlisted men will echo this wish.

BOY A BEER BARREL.



For Which Will You Vote?

Have you a boy to spare? The saloon must have boys or it must shut up its shop. It is a great factory, and unless it can have 2,000,000 from each generation for raw material, some of these factories must close up, the operatives be thrown out upon the cold world, and the public revenue dwindle! One family out of every five must contribute a boy in order to keep up the supply! Will you help? Which of your boys shall it be?

MOVING FOR A DRY CHICAGO.

Chicago is in a wet and dry campaign. Its citizens, men and women, will vote upon the question next April. "It is the largest city in the world that ever organized to put its saloons out of business," says Rev. Philip Yarrow, superintendent of the Dry Chicago federation, who is firm in his belief that the day will win, provided all voters opposed to the saloon will register and vote. The federation has a special committee which will look after persons who are thrown out of employment by the prohibitory law. Where one man loses his job by the closing of saloons, it is stated ten will be opened for him.

SIGNIFICANT SIDELIGHTS.

In the first week-end under Nebraska's dry law, one Omaha store reports, the sales of infants' shoes increased 5 per cent. At the end of the second and third weeks the increases were still more marked. A woman told a department manager that when the saloons were open her husband spent one-half of his weekly earnings for liquor. Now, after a few weeks of prohibition, she had $25 in the savings bank, and had bought $11 worth of cooking utensils, articles she had needed for years.

This is just one of many similar stories from dry states.

NO RUM-TRAINED SOLDIER.

We are training for a national effort, and we cannot train men for anything worth while on rum. The theory of selective conscription demands elimination of rum. It provides that each man shall perform the task for which he is best fitted, whether it be in the army, the navy or in a munition factory.—Dr. Edward Martin, Surgeon in Chief of the University of Pennsylvania.

THINK THIS OVER.

It is well pointed out by Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler, attorney for the A. S. L. of America, that if a man with a sober, physically fit son votes wet, he votes in effect to send that son to the trenches to fill the place of a boy made physically unfit for military service by drink. "Who is responsible for the liquor-disqualified boys? Prohibition increases the number and fitness of men for military service and equalizes the responsibility of all in meeting the requirements for such service."

War Declared on Rats by U. S. Gov't.

The government at Washington is preparing a campaign that should be effective in killing the rats that are so destructive both to lives and property. A conservative estimate places the loss of foodstuffs from rats at over two hundred million dollars annually, and in the present scarcity of food, this loss must be prevented. The most efficient way to "Kill the Rat" is by the use of Stearns' Paste, and thousands of dollars worth have been bought by the government. Every housekeeper troubled with rats, mice, roaches or waterbugs should buy a small box of this reliable exterminator for thirty-five cents, and stop further loss of food in her home. Adv.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

Mrs. Jane Crum had the misfortune to fall and get a badly bruised face. In getting up in the dark she fell over a rocker.

The newspapers are giving plenty of advise concerning food economy —but how about sending the soldier boys hundreds of dollars worth of cigarettes. Why should the people eat wheatless, meatless, sweetless meals while money is being spent to give the boys a filthy poisonous concoction called cigarette. We would make any sacrifice to help the boys and make them comfortable and happy—but we would no sooner give our boys a cigarette than a glass of beer thinking no difference of the two evils. A sinful deed altho propelled by a good motive cannot bring forth good results.

A. M. Cline, wife and children, Wayne, Melba and Alice, of Napoleon, Ohio, and Foster Welker, of Melbern, Ohio, were Sunday guests of Hugh Traxler and wife.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXI — ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1917 — NO. 44

Go to Sunday School

DEKALB COUNTY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION TO JOIN IN NATION WIDE "GO TO SUNDAY SCHOOL DAY."

Schools of County to Make Effort to Get Out Big Attendance on First Sunday in November—Stimulates Greater Activity.

Sunday, November 4, is "Go to Sunday School Day;" the movement is continent wide and the slogan adopted by the International Sunday School association is: "Every man, woman and child in some Sunday school on November 4."

Marion Lawrence, general international secretary, known to many DeKalb county Sunday school workers, has issued an official call for mobilization. In this call he says:

"All state and provincial Sunday school associations of North America are asked to observe November 4, 1917, as an international go to Sunday school day. This is the first attempt of our association to observe a uniform date annually.

"The proper observance of this day will increase the attendance by several millions on that Sunday, thus affording an opportunity to undertake a greatly enlarged program for the future."

Objectives.

1. To enlist recruits for the Sunday school.
2. To stimulate all Sunday schools to greater activity.
3. To advertise to the community that the Sunday school is for persons of all ages.
4. To impress upon the church a larger sense of its responsibility and opportunity in the Sunday school.
5. To emphasize the value of the Sunday school as an evangelistic and educational agency.
6. To emphasize temperance teaching and the importance of pledge-signing, this Sunday being World's Temperance Sunday.
7. To impress upon all the importance of lining up the Sunday school to help our government in such matters as Bible study among the soldiers, Red Cross promotion, and food conservation through the joint committee of the Sunday school council and our association.
8. To vitalize the Sunday school work in order to maintain the proper moral tone among our young people.
9. To inaugurate plans whereby each local church and Sunday school may be kept in helpful sympathetic touch with its members who go to the front in this world war.
10. To impress the great truth upon the young that while this war is changing the map of the earth and overturning customs and institutions, God and His Word, Jesus Christ and His saving power, man's individual responsibility for Christian living, abide and ever will abide unchanged.

The DeKalb County Sunday School association, through its president, George Beugnot, and other officers, is urging that all the schools make special effort and get everybody to attend on that day.

Some of the aims of the state association and echoed by the county association, are:

1. To promote the educational and evangelistic interests of the Sunday school work everywhere within its field.
2. To co-operate with all agencies and forces that have for their aim the development of the Sunday school life of the North American continent.
3. To be a common, rallying organization for the Sunday school workers of all evangelical denominations and thus foster the unified spirit of the Kingdom of Christ.
4. To especially direct and stimulate community or inter-school work for the help and encouragement of local Sunday school workers along educational lines in both principle and method.

Smallpox in Fort Wayne

Twenty-seven new cases of smallpox were reported in Fort Wayne Friday and city health officers are becoming alarmed at the spread of the epidemic. Many of those suffering with the disease are children and the health board has issued strict orders that all who have not been vaccinated against the disease were to be made immune, by Monday.

Old DeKalb Sends Nine.

Indiana physicians have made a splendid showing in responding to their country's call for doctors, according to statistics placed before the State Council of Defense by Dr. Charles P. Emerson, Chairman of the Council's medical section. Indiana's quota at present is 572 and 380 doctors are already in the service, with a total of approximately 600 who have volunteered. Practically all of these doctors are members of the Indiana State Medical Association.

Marion County heads the list for the State with sixty-three doctors enrolled in active service. This total includes the staff of the Lilly Base Hospital Unit No. 32 now encamped at Ft. Benjamin Harrison. Allen County comes second, with seventeen doctors enrolled, and Vigo County is third, with a total of fifteen. Madison County has sent eleven doctors into the army. DeKalb, Vanderburgh and Montgomery have each supplied nine physicians for service, with Cass and Lake Counties falling just one below that number. The other Counties of the State have supplied totals on down to one.

The government has a sufficient number of doctors for present demands, but with the call for additional national army quotas a great many more physicians will be needed. All of our Allies are calling for additional medical help. It was rumored for a time that the selective draft would be applied to physicians, but the latest information from Washington is that the government is not contemplating taking such action. It is rather relying on the fine spirit of patriotism which members of the medical profession all over the country have shown.

To Have a New Store.

Negotiation for a new General Merchandise Store for St. Joe have been completed. We are informed by B. L. Dunkle stating that he has rented his room to A. M. Imhoff & Co., who will open up within a week with an entire new stock such as is available under present market conditions. Mr. A. M. Imhoff is an aimable young man, well experienced in general merchandising and comes very well recommended by those who know him. He states after considering different locations St. Joe appealed to him as a place to live and build up a good business. This is all good news to St. Joe people, who will appreciate a good, well conducted store with all new fresh goods by giving it a liberal share of their patronage.

The goods are arriving daily for the stocking up of the store and our people will soon be given an opportunity to show how much they really do appreciate a store of this character. As fast as the needs of the people are learned Mr. Imhoff will endeavor to meet them. He will his family here shortly and occupy the C. A. Patterson house.

Merchants-Beware!

Sugar consumers of Indiana were called upon by Dr. H. E. Barnard, Hoover representative in Indiana, to report to him every dealer selling sugar at more than ten cents a pound. The names procured will be made public and the people asked not to patronize these merchants. Any retailer doing more than $100,000 worth of business a year who charges more than ten cents, will lose his license after November 1, Barnard announced.

Farmers Association Meet

J. W. Mertz, president of the DeKalb County Better Farming association, has called the annual meeting of the association for Saturday evening, October 27, in the court house assembly room in Auburn.

All officers of farm organizations, and all others interested, are urged to be present and help formulate the plans for the coming year, to carry on the idea of better farming for DeKalb county.

At this meeting it is hoped to consider, among other subjects, the following:

1. "Our County Problems—What are They and How Shall We Meet Them? (a) Live Stock; (b) Crops; (c) Soils;" J. W. Mertz.
2. Report of Fall Fair of 1917.—S. H. Nugen, president fall fair association.
3. Farmers' Institute Plans—E. T. Miller, county institute chairman.
4. Annual report of county agent and plans for the coming year, A. Z. Arehart, county agricultural agent.

The county farm organization is just now at the point where it can be made a most efficient power for better farming. However, this will take co-operation, everyone pulling together in order to make it the most beneficial and secure the best results. Come to the meeting and help us with your advice and counsel. Bring your neighbors and let us make this meeting well worth while.

COLONEL HOUSE, WILSON'S FRIEND NOT A MYSTERY

Unofficial Counsellor of the President Is a Modest But Well Posted Man.

STUDENT OF WORLD AFFAIRS

Now Gathering Data on Economic and Other Problems Which Must Be Solved at the Peace Table—Has Qualifications That Go to Make a Sound Diplomat.

AUTHOR'S NOTE—Men have made a mystery of the life and the doings of Col. Edward M. House, the friend and adviser of Woodrow Wilson. If there has been mystery, it is none of the Colonel's making. I venture the hope that whatever may have seemed to be hidden is disclosed in this article, the material for which was obtained in the only way in which such material can be obtained, by direct personal contact, inquiry and study.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

Washington.—Who is Col. Edward Mandell House who is to gather war data for the United States government for service on a future day of peace? This is a question that is being asked by a very large proportion of the people of the United States and in fact of all the allied nations..

Colonel House does not wear the record of his deeds on his sleeve. It is probable that if this unofficial counsellor to the president of the United States were to be elected to congress the autobiography which he would prepare for the congressional directory would read like this:

Edward Mandell House, Democrat of Austin, Texas; born 1858; elected to the ——— congress, November. ———

In this brief, ultra-modest, if you will, way would this Texan be prompted to write an autobiography, justified doubtless from the viewpoint of other men in being extended into many chapters.

Who is Col. Edward Mandell House, who, until the day when the final order "Cease Firing" comes, is to study in behalf of the government of the United States the economic, the geographic, the democratic and the humanitarian problems which the American counsellors at the peace table must seek to solve after a manner which the people of a great democracy can approve?

Consulted by President.

In the Washington dispatches something like this is read several times a year: "Colonel House has been in the city for twenty-four hours as the guest of the president. He will leave for New York tomorrow morning."

Beyond this the reader gets nothing from the dispatches except the word that the president and his visitor discussed Mexican matters, or European matters, or it may be, but in this latter case rarely, political matters.

The public has known little more about Colonel House than that he is a man frequently consulted by Woodrow Wilson and a man in whose judgment on political, economic and legislative matters the president puts confidence. There is a sort of a glamour about men and things which are mysterious. It would seem that because of the attraction which mystery has for the people, as shown if you will in their gluttonous reading of detective stories and the like, that writers of the news of the day in part have chosen to treat the goings and comings of the colonel and his conferences with men of affairs as if they were a deliberate attempt to hedge them in and hide them from public knowledge.

It is just as possible to get at the truth in the case of Colonel House as it is in the case of any other man whose doings are of public interest. It is modesty not mystery which has been the basic difficulty.

Colonel House will not tell you that he is a modest man, as I know from personal contact with him. To claim modesty for one's self is to be immodest. He does go from his present abode in New York city to Washington occasionally or frequently as the requests may come, to give what he can of "the counsel of his views" to the president of the United States. Why should he any more than any other man send a trumpeting herald ahead or a band of cymbal clashers?

He goes to the White House, stays his while and leaves, and because no great noises fill the streets at approach or departure, exclusiveness, seclusiveness and secrecy have been the order of the day's words concerning each visit.

Gives No Word of Work.

It perhaps is not too much to say that if the full record of the results of the conferences which House of Texas has had with Wilson of the Col. Edward M. House.

United States is to be read it must be sought in some of the accomplished deeds of the present administration. That Woodrow Wilson has been moved to certain courses or strengthened in his purpose to pursue them, by the counsel of Edward M. House is not to be doubted. The impossible task would be to get from the latter a definite word concerning the public work in which his counsel has played a part.

Those who have built up a wall of mystery about the man who is studying matters against the day of peace apparently have not wished to pull down their handiwork. The wall can be demolished by anyone who tries to get at the foundation of the fiction.

Edward M. House lives as open a life as that of any American whose profession or business does not call him daily into the places where men throng. If one wants to know about him through motives other than those of the idleness of curiosity he can see him and talk with him, and the chances are that he will be told everything concerning the subject of his inquiring curiosity that any man of modest mien and inclination naturally would be willing to tell. Colonel House is a genial man who seemingly never has sought to define for personal use the meaning of either of the words, coldness or austerity. He has a sense of humor well developed, and a temperamental warmth.

Secret of His Power.

In Houston, Texas, in the year 1858, Edward M. House was born. He was educated at the Hopkins grammar school, New Haven, Conn., and at Cornell university. He has been active all his adult life in Democratic politics, but never has been a candidate for office.

Add to these admittedly meager details one fact and unquestionably you will have the secret of this man's power to attract other men to him for the purpose of consultation on really high public matters. From the day that he was old enough to undertake serious study, Edward M. House has been deep in the books of politics, economics and legislation. He has marshaled in his mind all the greater events which have happened in these three words. Moreover, he has the men, the things and the motives connected with each case constantly in procession before him. He is quick to trace a cause to an effect, or to go the reverse route. He has been a student of human nature as it has shown itself in many of the great problems of human life. This means that he has in him, or at any rate men believe that he has in him, the qualifications which go to make up a sound diplomat.

Through successive administrations in Texas the governors of the state, one after another, consulted Colonel House on public matters. How deep an impression he has made on Texas legislative history never may be known definitely, but there is enough salient to make Texans know that they are right in attributing to him many of their public welfare acts.

Though not accounted wealthy in these days of huge fortunes, Colonel House is quite well fixed financially and is not engaged in business of any kind.

Has Studied Hard.

I have talked to Colonel House and have learned things which make me feel that I shall not go wrong when I try to put an interpretation upon some of his methods of doing things. He is free enough to say that he has studied hard at economic, political and legislative subjects. He probably even would be willing to admit that he thinks the results of these studies continued and their results retained, have enabled him to be of some service when men were seeking information concerning events in the past which have relation to events in the present or events expected in the future.

Therefore, there is here a man who has held what he has studied, who has collated and correlated the happenings of history, who has drawn lessons from them, who takes an interest as deep in the living present as he does in the dead past, and who men believe is able to make his knowledge serviceable, for old as it is let us say it, history repeats itself.

Woodrow Wilson did not meet his friend Colonel House until the days when he was holding office as governor of New Jersey. It is said by friends of Mr. Wilson that almost instantly he came to understand why the Texan had been of service along constructive lines to some of the governors of the state in which he has lived most of his life. For six or seven years Mr. House has been the confidant and the counsellor of the president of the United States, and seemingly time enough has gone by and things enough have been proved or disproved to give certainty to the word that Woodrow Wilson has found Edward M. House an advisory asset.

There hardly can be much of real mystery about a man who twice since this great war began has been sent abroad as a special commissioner for the president of the United States. Colonel House has been twice in Berlin, five times in Paris, and frequently in other of the great European capitals. Some day it may be that Woodrow Wilson will write what may be called an autobiographical review of his administration. If he does it is entirely likely that the part taken by Colonel House in the shaping of some of the policies of the president may be given the [illegible] place which [illegible] believe that it deserves.

No Mystery There.

While living in New York Colonel House resides in an apartment not very far uptown. It is a homelike place where good books are found and where good friends may come. It is a genial place and no curtain of mystery hangs over the door of any one of its rooms. Men go there and are welcome. They go and they talk. Man learns as much from man as he learns from books and more perhaps if we believe the ancient saying about the proper study of mankind.

I asked Colonel House what his recreations are. He said, "Friends, reading and walking." His library shelves show the kind of books that he has read, still is reading and will continue to read, for those in the book cases are made the companions day by day of the others as they come from the hands of writers worth while.

No man probably can read politics, legislation, economics and history constantly without getting some of Dr. Dry-as-Dust's characteristics. So it is that Colonel House does not read the four formidables constantly. He turns to fiction and here one finds something of possibly more than passing human interest.

George Frisbie Hoar of Massachusetts was one of the scholars in politics. It was said of him that he had read everything from Aristophanes' "Frogs" to Locke's "Human Understanding" and from this latter book of "dismalaties" to the lighter minded reader, down to everything heavy and semi-heavy which was published to the week of his death. Senator Hoar kept his mental condition balanced by turning not merely from the heavy to the light on occasion, but to the actual featherweights of fiction. He read "Nick Carter."

Woodrow Wilson, it is said, turns away from the studies of states, past and present and in prospective to the reading of what the English call penny dreadfuls, and what the Americans in the old days called yellow backs. It is said that the speaker of the house of representatives, Champ Clark, stops frequently his mental digging into all kinds of history to take up for relief purposes books of the kind which make a boy happy.

Reads Good Fiction.

In the library of Colonel House there is plenty of good fiction. He does not turn to Nick Carter, nor to "The Hidden Hand" of Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, nor yet to "Owl Face, The Pawnee" of Beadle dime novel fame, but he manages to keep the mental balance even by an evening lamp hour or two with the writers of fiction who can lay claim to what the book reviewers call literary merit.

Today Colonel House is entering upon the work of preparing material which one day, perhaps far in the future, will be serviceable to the American commissioners at the great peace conference. Another has written this concerning the choice by the president of Colonel House for this work: "He is peculiarly qualified for it by his diplomatic experience of recent years, by his study of political problems which the war has raised and by his integrity of mind and character."

"Sherlock, will you take on the House Mystery Case?"

"Mystery? my dear Watson, there isn't any."

Pipe Line of Wood.

Seattle.—A wooden water pipe 10,400 feet long and 12 feet in diameter, supplied by a local company, will be in a power development project in New York state. Douglas fir staves equivalent to 1,800,000 board feet of lumber will be used in the construction of the pipe line.

Eagle Pecks Elk to Death.

Clayton, N. M.—One of the largest eagles ever seen in this section of the country was reported this week. The eagle perched on the back of a young elk and pecked it to death, according to word brought here from Glenoro.

WANTS TO SHINE SHOES FOR PERSHING'S ARMY

Pueblo, Colo.—Thomas Price, twenty-seven, a legless bootblack here, wants the job of shining shoes for General Pershing's Sammies "over there." His crippled condition prevents him from entering the army, so he has written President Wilson, requesting that he be given a chance to "do his bit."

"I am told that soldiers have to keep their boots polished," wrote Price, who conducts a shoe-shining parlor here, "and that they have to do it themselves. If you can make a place for me to do the shining for them I don't think you'll find me loafing on the job."

Vanity.

Vanity dies hard, wrote Robert Louis Stevenson; in some obstinate cases it outlives the man.

GET LEATHER FROM SHARKS

Series of Tests by Government Shows That Product Is Durable and Satisfactory.

New London, Conn.—A contract for 1,000 shark hooks, 300 to be completed in ten days and 700 in twenty days after the first consignment, has been awarded by the government to J. W. Fordham, a blacksmith, of this vicinity.

There are to be three varieties of hook, eleven, ten and nine inches in length. A chain and swivel are to be attached to each hook.

It is reported from a Washington correspondent that the government is about to prospect in a new leather field, that of shark skins. In a series of tests a durable and satisfactory leather has been evolved from the skins of these fish. It is believed there is no reason why an industry may not be profitably started.

FLIES JOHN PAUL JONES FLAG

Ancient Banner of Sea Hero Carried on Frigate Ranger, Raised at Centerville, Md.

Centerville, Md.—The flag carried by the frigate ranger of the continental navy, under command of John Paul Jones, recently was hoisted on the flagstaff of the Observer. This cherished banner is owned by William Anthony of Queenstown.

Tattered and torn at its end from whipping in the ocean gates, the flag is still in a good state of preservation. Its blue field has faded into drab, its white stripes and stars are tinged with cream of age and its red is dingy with years.

Mr. Anthony received the flag from his grandfather, who served under John Paul Jones on the Ranger.

To Sell Greek King's Stables.

Athens.—One of the signs that democracy has taken the place of royalty is the public notice that the king's stables will be sold at auction. The stables are in the very heart of Athens, occupying a whole block on the two main streets. Now that Premier Venizelos has restored a democratic administration one of the first moves has been to dispose of this royal eyesore in the center of the city.

Draft Leaves Only Aliens.

Weirtown, W. Va.—The selective draft will leave only foreigners in this steel mill town. Of the 950 registrants here it has been found that 700 are aliens who are exempt from military service. Practically every physically fit American will be taken in the first National army.

KEPT GENUINE BLIND PIG

Indiana Man Admitted Fact and Exhibited It to "Dry" Workers—Had Booze, Too.

It was during one of the periodical "wet" and "dry" fights for which Muncie has been noted for many years that a "dry" worker received on anonymous letter, saying that a man living just outside the city limits was keeping a "blind pig," says the Indianapolis News. He reported this to a secret meeting of "dry" workers, one of whom, a neighbor of the man under suspicion, confirmed the story and said he knew it to be a positive fact that this situation existed there and that he had seen men going back and forth to it. Greatly aroused, a committee of three reputable "dry" workers paid a visit to the suspected man and finally asked him boldly whether it was not true that he was keeping a "blind pig."

"Yes, it's the truth," the man replied. "Since you've caught me with it, I might as well show it to you."

So at the head of the trio of investigators the man started on a long tramp across meadows, through pastures and fields, over hog lots and fences, until they arrived at a mysterious looking place along the river where the four came squarely in front of a big, fat hog, both of whose eyes had been lost in a fight with another hog.

"Don't tell anybody about this," pleaded the owner, "but I'm only keepin' this blind pig until she gets fat enough to kill. If you boys 'ud like to have a little somethin' t' drink, though, I might arrange a little nip in the kitchen for you."

Two Bets.

Teddy, four years old, was looking out of the window. A storm of sleet and snow was raging.

"You darling!" he declared with emotion. "Wait—till I get my—breath. Man's got—no business courting—when he ain't in training."

Lydia laughed aloud. Impossible to resent the extravagances of this irrepressible boy! "I'm in no hurry," she countered, a hint of malice making piquant her demureness.

"I got you!" said Peter, breathing heavily.

Suddenly Lydia realized that Peter was the cheerfullest soul she had ever known. She'd be sorry to lose him, with his high spirits and honest, outspoken friendliness.

But she was bound to lose him; and not him alone, but all her new-found friends. This night had demonstrated indisputably in her understanding that Craven's mode of life could never be hers. They lived and thought on different planes. Downing street's secret agent must of necessity have his secrets and guard them jealously; but love and loyalty could not endure in an atmosphere of petty deception, useless, persistent fibbing, feigned emotion intrinsic selfishness.

She meant to leave him without delay. Come morning, and she would strike out for herself. And that involved forfeiture not only of her father, but of his friends that now were hers. It would be impossible to keep on terms of equality and companionship with those amiable creatures of exalted irresponsibility, and spend her days—behind a counter! She felt very forlorn, lonely, young and inexperienced.

She turned at length from unseeing contemplation of Central park's dismal perspectives, to look curiously at Peter, who forthwith grinned gracelessly. "What do you want—madman?"

"Just to talk to you," he replied frankly. "You keep to yourself so much—I get lonesome and desperate. Think what it must mean not to see you in over twelve hours to a man of my mercurial temperament! Honest, I was feeling awful low when you showed up just now. In another hour I'd 've been taking things seriously—the same as you."

"What makes you say that?"

"Because you show it."

"Do I, really?" she pleaded anxiously.

"Not so's anybody'd notice it but me. You'll have to learn that you can hide nothing from me. Consider what a swell time you'll have when we're married."

"No—don't joke, please. I—I am not very happy tonight."

"You aren't?" Peter sat up at attention, serious for once at least.

"It's nothing—don't ask me, please. I'm just a bit low-spirited."

"Nothing doing!" declared Peter firmly. "Dissimulation isn't your long suit. I know!" He nodded with immense gravity. "You're fretting about that cussed necklace." He drew a long breath and lied magnificently. "You see, we were talking it over when you came in: Quoin calling Betty down for making Craven try to smuggle, and Betty fighting back like a good one—the whole story coming out. I don't care if Tad is your father, he hadn't any right to put a raw deal like that on you. Now," Peter wound up defensively, "turn loose the heavy artillery! I've spoken my mind when it was none of my business, and it's up to me to take the count without a whimper."

Lydia was silent, her face averted. "No," she said presently, "I'm not angry with you. Why should I be? I myself don't think it was right. It—it's pleasant to know somebody sympathizes, when everybody else seems to think it nothing at all."

"Not my way of looking at it," Peter insisted. "Listen to me now! Why not marry me and chuck the whole game—Betty, Tad, Quoin, the whole outfit? Think how good it would be to know you don't have to care what they think! Just say 'Peter, you're on!' and we're off—winter in Egypt—everything like that. You see? Not a bit of use fretting about people when life makes itself so easy."

"Please don't, Peter. It makes you seem—unsympathetic, after all."

"Don't you believe it. I'm so full of sympathy for you that it hurts me. Please won't you marry me?"

"I can't listen to you if you will go on this way!" she cried, half distracted. "I'm not thinking of marrying anybody."

"I know. It's just as good a line as it ever was, and you read it to perfection. But it loses force with repetition, my dear. Don't forget that this is another scene—several chapters farther on—and no other fellow has turned up to make it difficult for you to decide. I know, 'cause I've been watching."

"Please be—kind—if you can't be serious."

"But I am serious."

"Ah, but you promised me you never were and never would be!" She tried to laugh; but not very successfully.

"That just goes to show how little I knew myself. The diagram is, of course, I never wanted to be serious before I fell in love with you. Don't you understand that, really? I love you, Lydia!"

The girl sighed and looked away, troubled, a strange, sweet fluttering in her bosom. And Peter was searching her shadowed face with eyes she dared not meet lest they surprise her agitation and wrest a victory from it. Her lips grew tremulous, her eyes dim.

"I love you," he repeated gently. "Oh, believe me, heart of my heart!" His hand closed firmly over her own.

"But," she protested in a voice scarcely more than a whisper, he had to bend very near to hear, "but Peter—"

"Dearest?"

"It's the first time you—you ever told me that."

"God forgive me!" cried the young man devoutly. "I never thought. I thought you knew all the time!"

CHAPTER XV.

"Peter!" The cry was smothered.

"Silly boy! Can't you see the cab is turning? Do let me go!"

"Only into a side street. I say, where are we bound anyway?"

"It doesn't matter—only to deliver a note and get an answer."

"Who to—and from? Grammar's nothing to me, anyway."

"I sha'n't tell you if you don't stop. Well, a friend—nobody you know. If you don't let me go, I'll—"

"What will you do?"

"If you'll let me go, I'll tell you something."

Curiosity triumphed. Lydia extricated herself.

"What is it?"

"There—I'm all mussed and rumpled. You're frightfully inconsiderate."

"May's well get used to it. You've got a long, rumply, mussy lifetime before you. What were you going to say?"

"Promise not to be silly again, if I tell you?"

"I say, that ain't sporting of you. You promised—"

"Very well. No—wait. Is my hat straight? We're turning again—stopping. Look out and see if it's the right number."

"Ninety-eight."

"That's right."

"Now what are you going to do?"

"Get out, deliver the note, get the answer, and—come back to you, Peter."

"Nothing could be fairer than that. Only you don't get out till you tell me what you promised to."

"Very well. But you'll have to get out first. Not a word while you're in this cab. Now, Peter, please!"

"Oh, all right."

Peter backed out and offered his hand. He closed strong fingers round hers.

"No, you don't—not till you keep your word!"

"Then—listen, Peter!" her voice was low, but clear and very sweet. "It doesn't make an ounce of difference to me about—those others so long as it's only me you love now and always will!"

With this Lydia ran up the steps, leaving Peter dazed with the memory of her face at parting.

And indeed the wits of the young man were reeling, drunken with the fragrance of his beloved. It was some moments before he began to recover. Interim, he stood bareheaded in the drizzle, blinking fatuously at an electric arc on the corner of Park avenue. Then suddenly he remembered what misgivings had sent him headlong from the Margrave to overhaul this taxi of ten thousand Elysian delights. But when he did remember it was too late. His dearest had already been engulfed by the front doors of that ill-omened house.

Ill-omened, at all events, he must consider it in the light of what Quoin had hinted. And yet, surveying the residence, one began to doubt—

An eminently respectable quarter, Seventy-sixth street, between Madison and Park avenues, a block as sedate as any in town, dedicated to the homes of solid, decent, law-abiding bodies who, to be sure, wouldn't suffer association with any establishment of the least questionable character.

Since the cab had stopped not a sound had disturbed the quiet save the semioccasional rumbling of surface cars on the one hand or snoring of motors on the other.

And number 98 itself was a residence of a type and caste to allay distrust at a glance—an elderly, well-to-do sort, with brownstone front, well groomed; nothing in this ensemble the least ominous or threatening.

Inclining to question old Quoin's ever-ready inference, Peter climbed back into the cab, and for five minutes hugged himself in private ecstasy.

Everything was for all the best in the best of all possible worlds. He needed only to crowd things a bit, rush the wedding through before Lydia realized that people were onto Craven, keep her if possible ignorant forever of old Tad's disgrace— That could be fixed, no doubt. Fortunately Betty wasn't vindictive. Quoin's commission from her had been merely to scare Craven silly and run him out of town. And that, of course, would keep things dark; for Craven would never dare return.

Of course, if he ever found out his daughter didn't know, and her husband didn't want her to know, he would likely try on a little blackmailing, just to keep body and soul together. But Peter wouldn't mind that—not in moderation. Anyway, he'd always liked old Tad; and to think of him in want, who had been so refulgent a figure in the life of town, would be keen discomfort for his prospective son-in-law. Peter dared say old Tad could do with a tidy bit of blackmail—something adequate and regular. And he, for one, would never begrudge it.

But when five minutes had elapsed Peter began to fidget. That's a long time to wait for a girl you're crazy about, who has just owned up she's crazy about you!

He consulted his watch: ten minutes past eleven. Lydia had come to the Margrave about a quarter of: they couldn't have been more than a quarter of an hour coming up town. Peter became convinced that he had waited ten minutes, not five.

Things began to look dubious. He hopped out and up the steps of 98.

The outer door was fastened; but a steady pressure on the push-button brought a shadow to skulk suspiciously behind lace-screened inner doors. One edge of the curtains was pulled aside a trifle, he was inspected narrowly, and then the shadow materialized into a woman who came forth and unlatched the outer doors. Even to Peter's captious scrutiny she looked a very nice sort, altogether an apparition to abash suspicion.

"Yes?" she inquired in a pleasant voice.

"Yes," the discomfited young man replied intelligently. "That is to say—I—ah—"

"Perhaps you've mistaken the house?"

"No—I mean to say—Miss Craven—I brought her here—was to wait to see her home, you know—waited so long—began to wonder—"

"I see," said the woman quietly, a flicker of amusement in the eyes that Peter rather liked. "If you don't mind waiting another minute, I'll ask her."

Singularly enough, Peter thought, she didn't ask him to step in out of the weather. On the other hand, she was considerate not to keep him waiting long; though the message she finally brought him proved distasteful enough.

"Miss Craven asked me to give you this, Mr. Traft."

"Thanks," said Peter, graciously accepting the proffered envelope.

It wasn't sealed. Unceremoniously he lifted the flap and withdrew the inclosure, a square, white, heavy correspondence card with the address stamped in black letters. Below a stub pen had been used with disastrous effect:

"Dear Mr. Traft—Please don't wait for me. I can't tell how long I may be detained. Sincerely,

"LYDIA CRAVEN."

Dear Mr. Traft, nonplussed, accepted dismissal with what grace he could muster. "Oh—ah—thanks," he said blankly. "Awf'ly good of you—"

"Good evening, Mr. Traft."

"Good evening."

The door closed. Peter grunted disgust and went slowly down the steps.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

War Reduces Insanity.

War as a palliative of insanity is a theory unfamiliar to most people, but we have no reason to doubt the conclusions of Doctor Oswald of Glasgow Lunatic asylum on the matter, says the London Globe. One phase of the subject is instructive and significant. This is "the removal of the powerful effect of poverty on the mind, and its replacement by the higher standard of living and remunerative employment." Poverty and unemployment are thus by medical testimony fore fertile causes of insanity than war. This is a lesson to be borne in mind when the war is over.

The First Umbrella.

The first umbrella in America first appeared on the streets of Baltimore, where it created a great sensation. This importation from India was quickly taken up in Philadelphia and New York.

At present the fastest motion picture camera takes pictures at the rate of 2,000 a second.

EDITS FIRST JERUSALEM DAILY

Mar Ittamar Ben Avi, editor of the first daily paper ever published in Jerusalem, and properly a Hebrew paper—the Jerusalem Haov—recently visited Boston. It might be well to explain that "Mar" means "Mr."

Think of it. If—if Mar Ittamar Ben Avi's enterprise had flourished 1917 years ago; and if it had kept pace with the current events of that period in Jerusalem, how much of mind speculation, personal and national animosity, fruitless controversy and trouble generally it would have saved the world—providing Herod did not out-Herod himself in the use of a ruthless and perverse censorship.

However, as Jerusalem is again passing through a crisis in its history and as it is likely to become of more political importance—of more international importance—than ever after the war, it is well that it should have so comprehensive and capable a journalist as Ittamar Ben Avi to chronicle the events and the news. For he believes that Palestine has a new message to give the world, and that it is destined to play a large and important part, not only in the future history of the Jews, but in the future progress of humanity.

MRS. LONGWORTH DOING HER "BIT"

Two daughters of ex-President Theodore Roosevelt are showing their colors; they are not allowing all the glory to fall to the share of the three brothers, Theodore, Quentin, and Archie, who are now in France. Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who as Alice Roosevelt was the most popular girl in the White House since Dolly Madison, has turned her home in Cincinnati over to the Red Cross for war relief work. The war has had a sobering effect on the original and daring daughter of Theodore Roosevelt, who, in her reign in the White House, attracted general attention, no less for her independence of manner and scorn of conventional rules as for the charm of her unusual costumes.

In London, where the society of the English capital lionized her, she was hailed as the most daringly free young woman who had ever been admitted to the inner circles. She declined to wear a wedding ring, smoked cigarettes, and declared that a cocktail was not necessarily an instrument of evil. Today she is one of the most ardent workers in the Red Cross, giving of her time, her energy, and her money.

Her sister, Mrs. Richard Derby, the former Ethel Roosevelt, has served in France as a Red Cross nurse, going over with her husband, Doctor Derby, at the beginning of the war. Doctor Derby had charge of a Red Cross unit and together the young couple worked in their mission of mercy. Mrs. Derby has been back twice since her first trip over and the pitfalls of the ocean do not seem to daunt the valiant daughter of Colonel Roosevelt.

WAR SECRETARY'S BOYHOOD

© FRANK MOORE CLEVELAND

Newton D. Baker, secretary of war, got his first military experience when he accepted the office President Wilson offered him. He never even played with tin soldiers when he was a boy. He was always peaceable. His own mother, Mrs. Mary D. Baker, says so.

"I hate war," the mother of the war chief said, "but I wouldn't have a son who would hesitate to fight for his country."

Another son, Capt. Frank H. Baker, is on his way back to his post in Paris. Her husband was a noncommissioned officer in the Confederate cavalry, and 13 of her cousins served in the Civil war.

"Nonsense! No!" she said when asked if she thought her son, Newton D., would be the next president. "I don't think he wants it. The only person who is confident he'll be the next president is his old black mammy down in Virginia. Newton has aged in the last year. There are lines in his forehead which were not there before.

"I don't worry about my boys, though. They can all take care of themselves."

Mrs. Baker, though seventy-five, hasn't a gray hair in her head. "That's because my boys are so good," she explained.

HERE THERE and EVERYWHERE

The absence of money is always felt more than its presence.

Mrs. Addie Patterson had Miss Ina Shordon as a Friday over night guest.

The Rural Housewives club met Thursday afternoon with Mrs. Pluma Hamilton. Every member except one was present. Mrs. Anna Bachtel and daughter were guests. After a short business session the time was spent in "snipping" for the Red Cross. The hostess served chocolate pudding, cake and tea.

Mrs. Alice Gee was hostess Friday afternoon at the C. A Patterson home, to the W. C. T. U. The president called the meeting to order, opening song was Stand Up for Prohibition. Heroes of Patience was the topic of the devotion led by Mrs. Retta Hathaway. Prayer. Selection on the Victrola, a Hawaiian Song. Mrs. Grace Dilley read a very interesting paper on Education for Citizenship through the Bible in the Public School. Mrs. Spayd gave a good talk on How is Tobacco Effecting our Nation. Discussions were had on both talk and paper and many interesting things were said. Mrs. Minnie Bayman gave her report from the state convention. Seven hundred delegates were present at Anderson. Her report showed a gain of 703 new members in the state the past year. The financial part of the report also showed that the unions had all been busy. $336 30 alone having been raised in Indiana for the ambulance fund. Mrs. Daisy Woodcox was not present on account of the rainy afternoon so the ladies are looking forward to more good news from the convention. Addie Patterson and Jennie Sechler also told about the convention. Secretary's report and roll call, thirteen members responding. The treasurer's report was also given. It was decided to give a banquet Friday evening, November 2, for the new members who have joined during the past few months. The hostess served popcorn.

"PRAISE THE LORD!"

Thanksgiving Song in Boston Harbor Rings in the Ears Today.

"Praise ye the Lord!" The psalm today
Still rises on our ears,
Borne from the hills of Boston bay
Through five times fifty years,
When Winthrop's fleet from Yarmouth crept
Out to the open main,
And through the widening waters swept,
In April sun and rain.
"Pray to the Lord with fervent lips,"
The leader shouted, "Pray;"
And prayer arose from all the ships
As faded Yarmouth bay.

They passed the Scilly isles that day,
And May-days came, and June,
And thrice upon the ocean lay
The full orb of the moon.
And as that day, on Yarmouth bay,
Ere England sunk from view,
While yet the rippling Solent lay
In April skies of blue.
"Pray to the Lord with fervent lips,"
Each morn was shouted, "pray,"
And prayer arose from all the ships,
As first in Yarmouth bay;

Blew warm the breeze o'er western seas,
Through Maytime morns, and June,
Till hailed these souls the Isles of Shoals,
Low 'neath the summer moon;
And as Cape Ann arose to view,
And Norman's Woe they passed,
The wood-doves came the white mists through,
And circled round each mast.
"Pray to the Lord with fervent lips,"
Then called the leader, "Pray;"
And prayer arose from all the ships,
As first in Yarmouth bay.

Above the sea the hill-tops fair—
God's towers—began to rise,
And odors rare breathe through the air,
Like balms of Paradise.
Through burning skies the ospreys flew,
And near the pine cooled shores
Danced airy boat and thin canoe,
To flash of sunlit oars.
"Pray to the Lord with fervent lips,"
The leader shouted, "Pray;"
Then prayer arose, and all the ships
Sailed into Boston bay.

The white wings folded, anchors down,
The sea-worn fleet in line,
Fair rose the hills where Boston town
Should rise from clouds of pine;
Fair was the harbor, summit-walled,
And placid lay the sea.
"Praise ye the Lord," the leader called;
"Praise ye the Lord," spake he.
"Give thanks to God with fervent lips,
Give thanks to God today,"
The anthem rose from all the ships,
Safe moored in Boston bay.

"Praise ye the Lord!" Primeval woods
First heard the ancient song,
And summer hills and solitudes
The echoes rolled along.
The Red Cross flag of England blew
Above the fleet that day,
While Shawmut's triple peaks in view
In amber hazes lay.
"Praise ye the Lord with fervent lips,
Praise ye the Lord today,"
The anthem rose from all the ships
Safe moored in Boston bay.

The Arabella leads the song—
The Mayflower sings below,
That erst the Pilgrims bore along
The Plymouth reefs of snow.
Oh! never be that psalm forgot
That rose o'er Boston bay,
When Winthrop sang, and Endicott,
And Saltonstall, that day;
"Praise ye the Lord with fervent lips,
Praise ye the Lord today;"
And praise arose from all the ships,
Like prayers in Yarmouth bay.

That psalm our fathers sang we sing,
That psalm of peace and wars,
While o'er our heads unfolds its wing
The flag of forty stars.
And while the nation finds a tongue
For nobler gifts to pray,
'Twill ever sing the song they sung
That first Thanksgiving day:
"Praise ye the Lord with fervent lips,
Praise ye the Lord today;"
So rose the song from all the ships,
Safe moored in Boston bay.

Our fathers' prayers have changed to psalms,
As David's treasures old
Turned, on the Temple's giant arms,
To lily-work of gold.
Ho! vanished ships from Yarmouth's tide,
Ho! ships of Boston bay,
Your prayers have crossed the centuries wide
To this Thanksgiving day!
We pray to God with fervent lips,
We praise the Lord today,
As prayers arose from Yarmouth ships,
But psalms from Boston bay.
—Hezekiah Butterworth.

All Should Be Grateful.

There is something about the shocked grain in the fields, the heaps of yellow pumpkins, the stubble of the cut corn and wheat, even the blue-gray of the November sky which bends low like a benediction that speaks of plenteousness, of fruition, of God's loving care. It is the universal thanksgiving, the uplifting of all his creatures' hearts in praise.

RESOLVED TO PUT PART OF MY EARNINGS IN THE BANK EACH WEEK BANK

Into the bank and out

INTO the bank put as large a portion of your earnings as you can, and out of it will come a certificate of safety, a source of security—a feeling you never really had before and one you are sure to enjoy. And it's so easy to start. Just come into the bank, tell us you want to open an account and we'll do the rest.

You won't know but you've been banking for years. No distinction is made in the service we render our patrons. We are glad to get the small as well as the large depositors, and we give each account individual attention and each depositor special advice when requested.

We want your account. Come in and talk about it—ask us "the why" of everything and we'll gladly explain.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don t Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy: four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

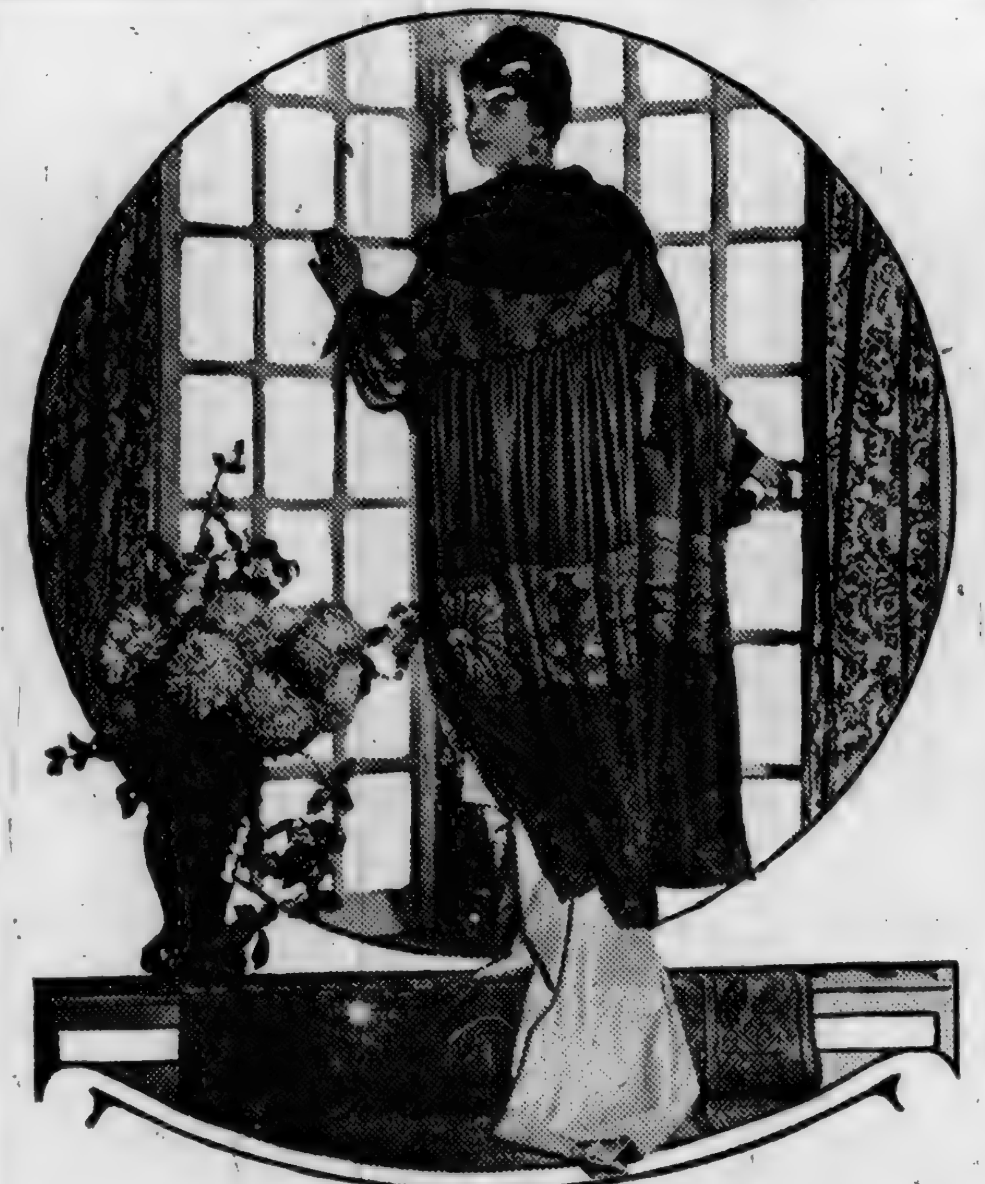
Inspired by Looms of the Orient



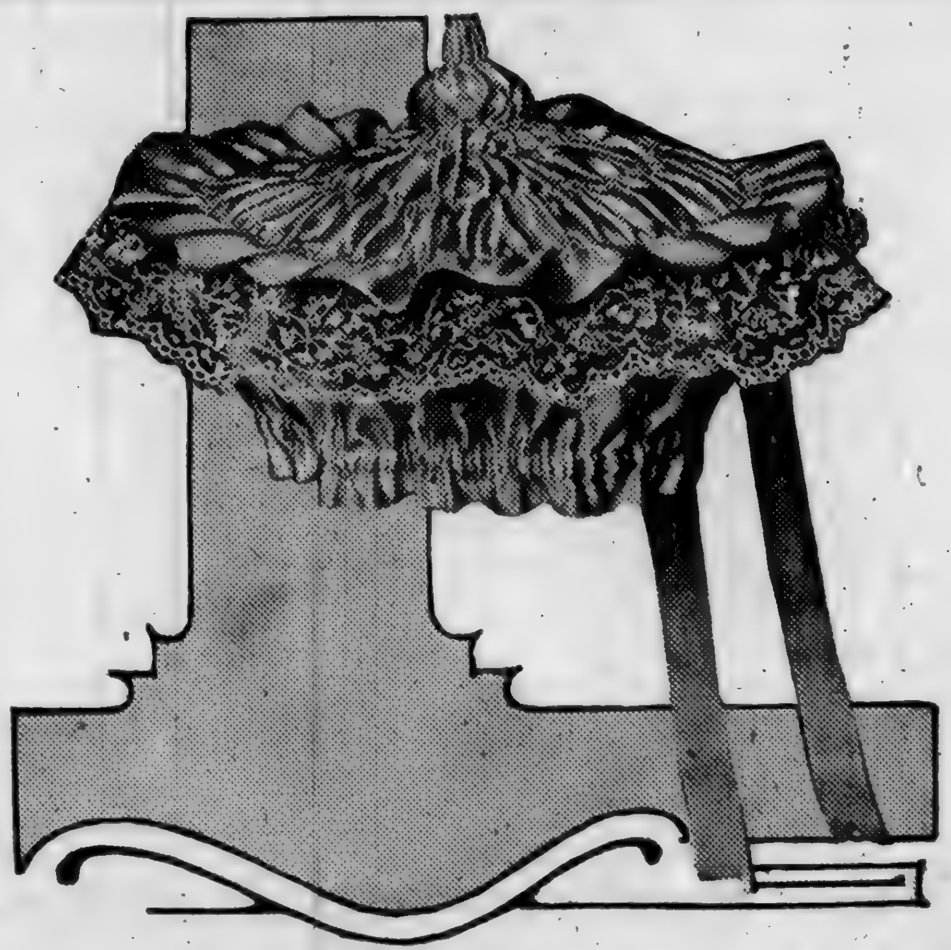
Everywhere in the big stores, the art of China and Japan greets the eye, in furnishings and in apparel. Its an ill wind that blows no one good and the war has made the looms of the Orient prosperous, turning out fabrics to make up for the shortage in Europe. France, in the face of all her difficulties, manages to manufacture many splendid stuffs, but not enough to meet the demand. Our almond-eyed neighbors have speeded up their producers and made a tremendous increase in their exports to us and already American products reflect their art in the adoption of design and colorings. Our taste is being cultivated—without our knowing it.

In the evening wrap shown here a gorgeous ribbon spreads a panorama of rich color across a background of black satin. Whether it was woven on American looms or not we know it is an inspiration from China; interesting and vivid. The cloak is unusual in itself, because of its design, but it is the ribbon that seizes the eye and fires the imagination and lends splendor to the garment.

The body of this wrap is gathered to a band of ribbon that is long enough to extend partly over the arms, at the back and front. Full sleeves of black crepe georgette are attached to it and tied about the wrists with a wide band of ribbon finished with a hanging bow. The collar is a wide cape with one side extending with a scarf end, to be thrown over the shoulder. It is lined with crepe georgette, like the cloak, in the shade of blue that makes a lovely background for the gleaming figures in the ribbon. Altogether this wrap will delight an artist; it is a great achievement from every viewpoint.

This is only one of many instances, where wide ribbons have been made the dominant feature in splendid garments this season. In dinner gowns, and for weddings they are used in the construction and not merely as accessories of dresses. Plain or moire ribbons make the drapery on net dance frocks in many pretty ways.

Latest Boudoir Caps



Who would think that a coolie hat from China could ever inspire a boudoir hat for our American girls? But that is just what has happened. No quarter of the globe is "far" any more, but it does seem a far cry from the simplest and humblest of headwear, made for the least considered of heads, to this ribbon creation for the proudest and most pampered. Here it is, and it is a triumph for which we delight to honor its designer.

This cap is made of wide pink ribbon and requires a few very fine silk-covered wires to support the shape. The ribbon is shirred in rows to form the top, the first row about two inches in from the edge, makes a scant ruffle. Along this shirring a ruffle of lace is tacked to the under side and a circlet of wire supports it. The lace is wide enough to form part of the crown. Its straight edge is sewed to a band of ribbon about four inches wide, with a casing sewed on its under side. A flat elastic run through the casing holds the hat to the head.

At the center of the top the wide ribbon is shirred to form a standing peak with a small bow and two long ends sewed at its base, made of narrow satin ribbon. This is about the newest and most unique of headdresses for home wear. They are becoming interesting as the holidays draw nearer. The coolie hat is not the only humble piece of headwear to inspire the extravagant designer. The old-fashioned sunbonnet is the origin of a pert little affair in lace and ribbons that is easy to make. Then there is the Russian cap, if one is looking for the unusual in caps. But bands made of wide ribbons, edged with narrow lace and trimmed with little handmade silk or chiffon flowers, are new and popular, and the easiest of all to make. They are laid in plaits at the ends where they fasten together with snap fasteners.

Julia Bottomley

Spring Suits Dark and Simple.

Predictions as to style and color tendencies in the dress and suit trade generally favor the darker colors and designs whose keynote is simplicity. Said one manufacturer in the trade on this subject: "When I get around to making up my spring sample lines, I am going to steer clear of any freak fashions or novelty features. I think simple suits along straight lines, made up in broadcloths or serges, will be the best sellers. And in colors, I am going to stick pretty close to the darker shades of blue and brown with a fair scattering of black."

Black Underwear Again.

Black has again invaded the undergarment field, lightened, however, by little gilt flowers and frivolous ribbon arrangements, so that there is not the slightest suggestion of mournfulness in its use.

A gown and chemise is developed in silk marquisette, printed in an all-over design of gold flowers. Black satin ribbon, in tube twists, is tacked to form the yoke decoration, and the double shoulder straps on both gown and chemise, and black bows occur at intervals. A fold of black georgette finishes the bottom.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

TRANSPORTATION SITUATION.

Hon. Jeanette Rankin, member of congress from Montana, writing in the Chicago Herald on the federal food bill and its prohibition amendment, emphasizes very forcefully the transportation side of this economic problem. We quote:

"The converting of grains into food products instead of into liquor would not stop in its beneficial results with the mere increase in food supplies. It would touch the heart of a problem of food distribution which has been long begging for solution.

"For years we have known that the reason produce was rotting in the fields in one part of the country while men, women and children were starving in another part of the country, was because transportation facilities were inadequate to transfer all available food from its source of production to the consumer.

"According to the United States statistics abstract for 1916, there are in this country 2,350,338 freight cars. There were consumed in this country in 1916 almost 500,000 carloads of liquor, including more than 35,000 carloads of wine and spiritous liquors and more than 363,000 carloads of beer.

"Of course, much of this liquor was consumed in the same locality in which it was produced, so that perhaps one-third of it, or even one-half of it, never necessitated the use of freight cars for conveyance. But it is conservative to estimate that the transportation of liquor in the United States requires the use of 10 per cent of the freight cars available for use in this country.

"Two hundred thousand freight cars would go a long way toward relieving the transportation situation with regard to food products, and the release of these cars for this service would greatly augment the paring-knife campaign which the women of the country have been urged to wage in the interests of the war.

"Inasmuch as the production of beer in this country has occupied just ten times the bulk of spiritous liquors and wines, the exemption of beer and light wines from the prohibition regulations would mean that less than one-eighth of the possibly available freight cars (to say nothing of the grains used) would be released for food transportation."

BREWERS WASTING GRAIN.

Barley mixed in the bread makes a bread which has as fine a texture as wheat. . . . And would enable us to release just exactly that quantity of wheat. . . . There is a certain deduction from the barley—the total barley used in brewing—to account for the malt which is given back to the feed, but even then there is a large margin of saving if the brewing could be cut out. . . . The difference between the feeding value and the fodder and the intake of the breweries in grains means just that much more foodstuffs to our allies. . . . We could save from 50,000,000 to 60,000,000 bushels of grain on the brewing side after having allowed for the fodder proposition, and that grain is of utmost value to our allies.—Herbert C. Hoover, pages 389, 417, Hearing Before Senate Committee on Agriculture.

A CONVERTED MAYOR.

Rev. W. J. Johnson, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Missions for the middle West, to Mayor J. C. Dahlman of Omaha, who during the Nebraska wet and dry campaign was a pro-liquor advocate: "Mr. Mayor, I have come out here from Chicago to see the harm that prohibition has done to your city."

Mr. Mayor: "Well, sir, you've come to the wrong place. You'll find a city vastly improved, both from a moral and a business standpoint. Prohibition has done wonders for Omaha, and I am thoroughly converted to the dry cause."

CATCHING UP WITH LUTHER.

Martin Luther said: "I have prayed to God that he would destroy the whole brewing industry. . . . All Germany could live on the barley that is spoiled and turned into a curse by the brewer." This year, the four hundredth anniversary of the Reformation, the world is at last awake to the crime of spoiling food to make drink, and Luther's prayer may be answered before the year ends.

DON'T TOLERATE IT.

The slaughterhouse is a nuisance because the odor that comes from it cannot be confined to the land on which it is situated; it is as impossible to confine the evil influence of the saloon to the city that licenses it.—The Country Gentleman.

GOOD PLACE FOR ARMY.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

RARE BUFFALOES.

"Mrs. Buffalo," said Daddy, "was watching the children growing up. 'Little son Henry,' she said, 'will soon be a big buffalo. His horns are curved. For such a long time they have been quite straight—the way all my sons' horns have been when young. But now it shows Henry is growing up—he has beautiful horns which go off in semi-circular curves.'"

"What are semi-circular curves?" asked Nick.

"They are curves which only go half round—just like half a circle," answered Daddy. "And so Mrs. Buffalo gazed with fondness at her son.

"Henry, Mrs. Buffalo's child, was really much older than I think we would guess."

"How old was he?" asked Nancy.

"About six months old," said Nick.

"Maybe a year old," suggested Nancy, "if Daddy says he was older than we would imagine when full-grown."

Daddy laughed and shouted, "Both wrong!

"Now Henry was born one May, seven years before Mrs. Buffalo made this speech. She did not know that he was seven years old. She had not stopped to count the years, but she did know that he was at least a grown-up son because of his horns.

"To be sure every spring of the seven years she knew that she and her family and cousins and relations had all shed their coats and that they had not bothered about new ones until the fall. This had happened every year. It was simply that Mrs. Buffalo had not counted how many years there had been.

"'Come and talk to me,' said Mrs. Buffalo, as she noticed Mrs. Bison not far away."

"What kind of an animal was Mrs. Bison, Daddy?" asked the children.

"Mrs. Bison belonged to the same family of animals as Mrs. Buffalo. Sometimes one is called a buffalo, then it is also called a bison. It is like having two names that mean just about the same thing.

"I Am Feeling Rare," Said Mrs. Bison.

"But this buffalo had always been called Mrs. Bison, and when Mrs. Buffalo called her she went right over.

"'Good morning,' she said politely.

"'Good morning,' said Mrs. Buffalo.

"'How are you feeling?' asked Mrs. Bison.

"Well, and how are you feeling?"

"'I am feeling rare,' said Mrs. Bison.

"'What in the world does that mean?' asked Mrs. Buffalo.

"'It means the way I am feeling of course,' answered Mrs. Bison.

"'If that's the way you feel I am sure I don't understand. Are you ill at all?'

"'No, not at all,' said Mrs. Bison.

"'Then whatever do you mean?' asked Mrs. Buffalo, who was becoming more puzzled every moment.

"'I heard some people from a long distance off shout to each other, and this is what they said when they looked at me: "Do you see that buffalo over there?"

"'Then some one else said, "Yes."

"'And after a little bit I heard a third person say, "The buffalo is getting to be very rare these days." So, you see, I am right. I am rare—very rare.'

"'Then I must be feeling rare too,' said Mrs. Buffalo. 'Your name is Bison though you are the same as I am, and so I am every bit as rare as you are.'

"'I suppose that is true,' said Mrs. Bison. 'But you must give me the credit for having heard that we are rare. If I hadn't, we might never have known it.'

"'No, we probably never would have known it,' said Mrs. Buffalo.

"'It must mean that we are gentle and nice, even if we are stubborn and always insist upon having our own way. Of course now and again the bulls get very angry, but we don't. And perhaps it means that we are so very large.'

"'No,' said Mrs. Bison, 'I'm sure from the way they were talking it didn't mean anything usual like that. It must have meant that we were considered very wonderful.'

"'Perhaps,' said Mrs. Buffalo, 'but it is nice to be feeling that way.' For even though they did not know that rare meant something unusual and scarce, they liked the new word."

Equal to Emergency.

The best way to learn to be equal to the big emergency is to be equal to the small ones. It is all nonsense to suppose that the girl who bursts into tears over some trivial vexation is going to stand up bravely to the big trials of life. The people who distinguish themselves in an emergency are those who have practiced self-control in the commonplace, every-day routine.

Suffered For Years
Back and Kidneys Were in Bad Shape, But Doan's Removed all the Trouble.

"My kidneys were so weak that the least cold I caught would affect them and start my back aching until I could hardly endure the misery," says Mrs. D. C. Ross, 973 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y. "In the morning when I first got up, my back was so lame, I could hardly bend over and any move sent darts of pain through my kidneys. It was hard for me to walk up stairs or stoop, and to move while lying down sent darts of pain through me.

MRS. ROSS

"The kidney secretions were scanty and distressing and the water remained in my system, making my feet and hands swell. There were dark circles under my eyes and I became so dizzy I could hardly see. I had rheumatic pains in my knees and it was all I could do to get around. For years I was in that shape and I wore plasters and used all kinds of medicine to no avail until I tried Doan's Kidney Pills. They rid me of the trouble and strengthened my back and kidneys. When I have taken Doan's since, they have always benefited me."

Efficiency.

After many trials and tribulations Mrs. Timson had managed to get a "maid" of sorts.

"Now, Thurza," said she, "be careful about the water. We only use the well water for drinking, as we have to pay a man to pump it. The rain water is good enough for washing up and so on."

After tea Mrs. Timson asked:

"Did you remember about the water, Thurza?"

"Oh, yes, m'm," said Thurza. "I filled the kettle half full of water from the butt and the other half with water from the well. I thought that bottom half might as well be getting hot at the same time for washing up after tea."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Answered.

The motorist was looking disconsolately at his car that lay helpessly on its side on the border of a small plowed field. It had obviously skidded off the road.

Presently a passer-by of the genial kind that will ask senseless questions came along.

"Hello! Have you had an accident?"

"No," returned the exasperated motorist. "I've just bought a new car, so I brought the old one out to bury it in this field. Got a pickaxe and shovel in your pocket you could lend me?"—Answers.

He Got the Blind.

A tradesman in a certain town put a box outside his shop, labeled "For the Blind." A few weeks later the box disappeared.

"Yes," he agreed, "but an American sailor doesn't like the same kind of wine that a German sailor likes."

"Why, how's that, uncle?" I asked.

"Well, you see," he answered with a chuckle, "the German sailors like to stick to 'port.'"

ALL MEN AT HOME SHOULD PREPARE FOR WAR

The first test a man is put thru for either war or life insurance is an examination of his water. This is most essential because the kidneys play a most important part in causing premature old age and death. The more injurious the poisons passing thru the kidneys the sooner comes decay—so says Dr. Pierce of Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., who further advises all people who are past thirty to preserve the vitality of the kidneys and free the blood from poisonous elements, such as uric acid—drink plenty of water—sweat some daily and take Anuric, double strength, before meals. 60c a package.

This An-u-ric is a late discovery of Dr. Pierce and is put up in tablet form, and can be obtained at almost any drug store. For that backache, lumbago, rheumatism, "rusty" joints, swollen feet or hands, due to uric acid in the blood, Anuric quickly dissolves the uric acid as hot water does sugar. Take a little Anuric before meals and prolong life. Send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce for trial package of Anuric.

FORT WAYNE NEWS

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"I have been made most comfortable by the use of Anuric. When I started to take this medicine my right kidney pained me each time I had a passage, and my back ached all the time and was so stiff I could scarcely get up after lying down. The first bottle I took of Anuric completely cured me of these conditions, and the rheumatism in my shoulders, hands and feet is diminishing so rapidly I can scarcely believe that Anuric has done so much for me in so short a time. I feel extremely grateful for this relief and am only too glad to recommend it." MRS. S. J. ROBERTS, 917 Cottage Ave.

Every package of Anuric is sure to be Dr. Pierce's. You will find the signature on the package just as you do on Favorite Prescription, the famous friend of ailing women, and Golden Medical Discovery, proven by years to be the greatest general tonic.—Adv.

Became a Bit Worried.

The conversation at a recent social affair turned to the beautiful indifference of some children, when this story was fittingly related by Representative Frank L. Greene of Vermont.:

Recently a small party named Bessie had a birthday, and a little girl friend of her own age was invited to come around and help her celebrate the glad occasion. Both were given cake and things, and afterward they happily pranced off to the upper part of the house.

Two hours later the mother of Bessie went to look for the children and found her sweet child sitting alone in a great armchair nibbling on a remnant of the dainty repast.

"Why, Bessie," exclaimed the surprised mother, glancing around the room, "where is your little friend?"

"We were playing hide and seek in the attic," calmly answered Bessie, as she continued to nibble her cake, "and I gave up looking for her quite a long time ago."

"Can't Cut Off My Leg," Says Railroad Engineer

"I am a railroad engineer; about 20 years ago my leg was seriously injured in an accident out West. Upon my refusing to allow the doctor to amputate it I was told it would be impossible to heal the wound. I have tried all kinds of salves and had many doctors in the past 20 years, but to no avail. Finally I resolved to use PETERSON'S OINTMENT on my leg. You cannot imagine my astonishment when I found it was doing what over 100 things had failed to do. My leg is now completely cured."—Gus Hauft, 799 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"It makes me feel proud to be able to produce an ointment like that," says Peterson. "Not only do I guarantee Peterson's Ointment for old sores and wounds, but for Eczema, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Itching Skin and Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles, and I put up a big box for 25 cents, a price all can afford to pay and money back from your druggist if not satisfied." Not in His Line.

A young man, very fond of the girls, but very cautious as to his dealings with them, recently went to a poetical friend and asked him if he would help get up a birthday sonnet to a certain young lady.

"Well," said the poet friend, "what do you want me to say?"

"Why, you ought to know about what's the proper thing," said the young man. "Something rather tender, but at the same time, remember, I don't want to commit myself in any way."

"Well," said the friend, "you don't want a poet to draw up your birthday verse; you want a lawyer."—Stray Stories.

ATROCITIES AS THEY EXIST

Orphaned Children, Homeless Families, Devastated Towns, Marked Germany's Path in Belgium.

The Germans entered Belgium in August and September, 1914; we began to come in November. Hence we saw none of the atrocities of the invasion—we saw only results of them, writes Vernon Kellogg in the Atlantic. Among these results, as seen by us, were, I hasten to say, no women without breasts or children without hands. But there were women without husbands and sons and daughters and children without mothers and fathers. There were families without homes, farms without cattle or horses or houses; towns without town halls and churches and most of the other buildings, and even some without any buildings at all, and a few without many citizens. But there were cemeteries with scores and hundreds of new graves—not of soldiers; and little toddling children who came up eagerly to you, saying, "Mon pere est mort; ma mere est mort." They were distinguished from some of their playmates by this, you see!

And we had to hear—and endure—the stories, the myriad stories, of the relicts of Dinant, Vise, Tamines, Andennes and all the rest. Of course, there were stories exaggerated wilfully and others exaggerated unintentionally, simply by the inevitable inaccuracies that come from excitement and mental stress. But there were stories that were true, all true.

Has a Job He Can't Quit.

Jim Garry believes that if you don't like a job, quit the job. Jim enlisted in the Sixth regiment and soldiered for 17 days, when he got leave to go home. A few days later the Sixth got back Jim's uniform, and the whole outfit. A note accompanied it. It read:

"I've thought it over and decided I don't want to be a soldier. So I quit now. My outfit is on the way."

But the soldier's job is one job you can't quit when you want to. So Jim is back in the ranks, trying to like it. —Toledo News-Bee.

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 4

DEFEAT THROUGH DRUNKENNESS.

(World Temperance Sunday.)

LESSON TEXT—I Kings 20:1-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.—I Kings 20:11.

I. Samaria Besieged (vv. 1-12.)

1. By whom (v. 1.)

Benhadad, the Syrian king, accompanied by 32 kings, came against Samaria. These 32 kings were not allies, but rulers over the neighboring cities—vassal princes.

2. Benhadad's message to Ahab (vv. 2-6.)

He offered peace on the most abject and insulting terms. His demands meant more than the exaction of tribute. He over-reached himself in this; thus defeating his purpose. He not only demanded tribute money, but the surrender of that which was most vital to Ahab's manhood and self-respect—his wives and children. He thus made a thrust at his tenderest spot. Many a man has been thus aroused to do his duty, who otherwise would have submitted to shameful indignities.

3. Ahab's reply (vv. 4, 7-9.)

His reply was tame and humiliatingly submissive. Perhaps, he thought it only meant the giving of tribute, which he was willing to do in face of Benhadad's overwhelming army. Conciliatory measures were regarded as most prudent. But the peremptory demands of the enemy repeated, awoke Ahab to his senses, and caused him to call together the elders of the land, who counseled against submission. Thus stiffened for the opposition, Ahab refused to make full compliance with his demands.

4. Benhadad's bluster and boasting (v. 10.)

The design of this was to strike terror into the hearts of the king and people. He vows that he will make Samaria a heap of dust, and that this dust will not be sufficient to fill the hands of his army, so overwhelming is the number of his host.

5. Ahab's answer by a proverb (v. 11.)

"Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." This is a proverb full of points for all boasters. God's purpose may overrule all man's proud presumptions. "Man proposes, but God disposes." "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall."

6. Readiness for the attack (v. 12.)

In the full confidence of victory, the Syrian king was giving a banquet to his princes. In the midst of this feasting, the command was given to invade Samaria. Incited by strong drink, he gave no attention to the striking proverb of Ahab. Many have gone to ruin because through the stupor of drunkenness, they have failed to heed proper warnings.

II. A Prophet Sent to Ahab (vv. 13, 14.)

Who the prophet was, we are not told, but why he was sent, is made clear. He brought from God a promise of victory which was to cause Ahab to know Jehovah. It is a marvelous display of God's goodness and grace. Israel deserved the most severe chastisement, but God promised victory for his own sake in order to make his glory known. The agency by which the victory was to be achieved, was the young men, an agency purposely feeble, that the victory might be seen to be of God.

III. Ahab's Victory Over the Syrians (v. 15-21.)

The army of Ahab was but a handful compared with that of the Syrian king (v. 15; cf, v. 10). Benhadad, with confidence in his superior numbers, ordered the young men of Israel to be taken whether they came for peace or war. He, with his princes, continued their drunken debauch. The young men struck right and left, creating great consternation. When the seven thousand reserves joined the young men, a general panic was produced among the Syrians. From the human side, the victory is accounted for by the drunkenness of the Syrians, but from the divine side, we see that God wrought for his own glory. Ahab pursued the Syrians with a great slaughter, but Benhadad escaped. Many have been the defeats which have come through drunkenness; defeats in morals, defeats in religion, defeats in business, defeats in physical endurance. The man who indulges even moderately, has reduced his opportunities of success very greatly. Most of the accidents by automobiles, railroads, etc., are traceable to the use of intoxicating liquors.

Short-Sightedness.

Few people, rich or poor, make the most of what they possess. In their anxiety to increase the amount of means for future enjoyment, they are too apt to lose sight of their capability for the present.—Leigh Hunt.

Duty for All.

I am sure that it is a duty for all of us to aim at a just appreciation of various points of view, and that we ought to try to understand others rather than to persuade them.—A. C. Benson.

ZAPATA KEPT HIS PROMISE

Paid Back 50,000 Pesos He Forced Bankers to Give Him to Feed Hungry Men.

One morning Emilio Zapata issued two proclamations. One was a prohibition edict closing the saloons; the other a command for the bankers of the city to assemble for a conference. The bankers attended the meeting. They went in fear, dreading confiscation of their deposits. Only a few days before the armies of General Carranza had collected a "forced loan" of ten million pesos from the banks. What mercy could be expected of the bandit leader?

Zapata's speech was short and to the point. "Caballeros," he said, "my men are hungry. I want 50,000 pesos to feed them for a few days. You will pay this. I promise you protection. You may carry on your business without molestation as long as you do not aid the enemy. You may go when you sign the order for the money." Thankful to escape with such a modest demand, the bankers did as they were ordered. Zapata kept his part of the bargain, and for months the city was better policed than it has ever been since Porfirio Diaz was driven from Mexico. But this is the strange part of the story—strange to one who knows the system of confiscation which has bled the business men of the country. Ten days later Zapata paid back the 50,000 pesos.

Not Original at All.

It is recorded that a certain literary man of high reputation had occasion to remark to a waiter in the restaurant where he sometimes lunches: "Waiter, this beefsteak is not at all tender; I can hardly cut it."

The waiter looked at him with a sorrowful expression, and sighed deeply.

"Perhaps you will tell me," said the literary man, "why you sigh in that fashion?"

"Ah, sir," said the waiter, "I took you for a man who always wrote and said original things, and here you come and say the same thing that all the rest of the customers do."

His Bright Idea.

"Now, look here, Mr. Mikey! This won't do! You haven't paid any rent for over a month."

"I'm sorry, but I really can't pay just now," replied Mikey.

"You're the third one today with that yarn!" exclaimed the landlord, "and I can't afford such a loss. You must see what you can do to help me!"

"All right—I will! I will write you tonight," answered Mikey.

Next morning the landlord eagerly opened the letter, expecting to find a remittance, but this is what he read:

"Dear Sir: I've thought it over, and the only thing I can suggest, to diminish your loss, is to lower the rent."

The St. Joe Branch of the Red Cross expects to hold a Fair in Widney's Opera House on Thursday, Nov. 22nd., with an Auction Sale in the evening. All of Concord Twp., will be solicited for donations of fruit, grain, vegetables, fancy work, and in fact anything that goes to make a Fair. The north half of Newville Twp., which belongs to this territory but whose membership campaign is just beginning, will not be solicited but their patronage will be appreciated. The proceeds of this Fair will go to defray expenses of the local chapter and to buy material to make articles for the soldiers and sailors. Further announcements and naming of committees will be given next week.

On account of the scarcity and expense of fuel the Red Cross work room will be open only on Thursday afternoon of each week. Mrs. Copp and Mrs. Blanch Leighty will have charge of the class. All the ladies who will help with this work are urged to come at 1 o'clock so that a full afternoon's work may be done. Also the present head quarters must be changed on account of there being no chimney in the room and the oil stoves used at present will not give sufficient heat. At the time of this writing arrangements have not been completed for another location but a room will be ready by Thursday P. From Those In the Service

Winchester, Ky.
October 28, 1917.

My dear parents:

This is a beautiful fall day. Last Wednesday we had quite a snow and rain storm. It was quite an experience in the mountains. I drove twelve miles over Pine Ridge to a little town called Forrest on the L. & N. railroad. It was a wonderful trip. On either side of the ridge, they dropped abruptly four and five hundred feet. The slopes are covered with pine and cedar trees. The mountain country is almost a wilderness and very rugged. The people raise mostly a corn crop and how they farm on the slopes is something short of the miraculous. Wolfe County, where I am drilling for the company, is the home of moonshiners. Most of the people have never been farther away than Lexington. They are almost pure Anglo-Saxon. And they are astonishingly well acquainted with the Bible. They have odd terms of speech, such as: ary, nary, least one (meaning the youngest one) heap,- and one is greeted with a "howdy howdy." And nearly every person is nicknamed for some peculiarity.

I went possum hunting Thursday night with some of the younger boys. We caught one. The usual manner is to go up some "holler" or woods, and sit down and let the dogs hunt and when they get one treed or holed, the dogs begin to howl till we come When we shook the possum out of the sapling the dog had a great time catching him. They are seldom killed. Once the boys get their hand around his neck he instantly becomes "sulled," that is, he plays being dead. After we caught this one, we found several persimmon trees and climbed them. Ripe "simmons" are very delicious. We had a great time. It was a pretty moonlight night.

The people generally retire about 6:30 p. m. and arise at 4:00 to 5:00 a. m. They do not have much to do but whittle and spit, and argue and sit.

I completed a dry hole Friday and plugged it. Shall start another one soon.

The aristocrats live in the country in the Blue Grass. When one meets a girl, it is always proper and correct to ask her the name of the farm and on what pike. There are more pretty girls in this section of the country than I saw in Kansas and Oklahoma. I am in love with—the Blue Grass.

In answer to the oft asked question "when are you coming home," will say I want to come for the holidays.

Did you all buy a Liberty Bond? I didn't, but will the next issue.

With love and best wishes.
Your affectionate son,
Lester Curie.

Dear Mother:—

Received your letter and very glad to know that you are all well.

I am feeling fine and have begun to like camp life better than I did. We have three cooks in the kitchen now so that takes part of the work off of me.

There were thirty-five of our company transferred to Co. L. of the 8th. Ohio yesterday afternoon and today we received thirty-five drafted men and tomorrow we get thirty more.

Oh! yes, mother, I saw a fellow from St. Joe that was with the bunch, can you guess who it was? It was Frank Ulm and I had quite a long talk with him. John and Chet are still in the company, but can't tell how long they will be as they are taking our regiment and filling other Ohio regiments so they can ship them across in a short time.

I am sending the roll call of the company and the record of my service in the army. Our regiment has the honor of being a training regiment for the drafted men so we will be in this camp sometime but will never have the honor of killing a German. Some of the boys like the idea but I believe I would rather be on the fireing line.

With love,
Harry Shuff.

The following letters are from Cousins of O. K. and Mark Shull and they will be of interest to our readers, as they are the first reproduced from France.

FRANCE, Sept. 1, 1917.

Dear Folks:—

It doesn't seem as late in the season as September. Gee, how time is flying! But "let 'er go," is my sentiments. Ha, ha!

We hope to hear from you again next week. You can't imagine how much we think of those letters which reached us last week. We didn't expect to get mail so soon as that.

The only worry I have is that you will work too hard. Hope the work is going on alright.

We are crazy to get some newspapers from near home. No difference how old they are, so they have been printed since July 20th. Before you get this we will receive papers, but this is to let you know what we think of them.

Some of the people over there must have had trying times about the draft. I think that will be the last draw, and that not all of those in the first draw will see foreign service.

Banner and I were on a trip yesterday of a hundred and fifty miles, and saw some very interesting sights and had some unusual experiences, as we always do on all our many trips. Once we were near some anti-aircraft, also field guns. They were only practicing with them. Some of the shells lit not over an eighth of a mile from us. Gee, but the dirt did fly. We have seen every kind of air gun. The machine guns are the most interesting, especially those captured from the Germans. You should see our little Major fire them. One type of gun is hard for a light weight man to hold to the ground but the Major sure has the grit.

Our Company don't have drill of any kind now. Everyone is busy building the big arsenal base.

Yesterday we met many American boys at an Aerial school. One of them was from South Bend. They are all in the French service, of course. They are a fine bunch, well educated and all are experienced flyers, but haven't had the last lessons yet, that of acrobatics.

While we were in the field, the air machines were about as thick as bees about a hive. Flying is nothing, it's the stunts that get them. Anti-airguns don't bother much the soldiers say, and they know; it's the guns on other planes.

We wondered for a long time why corn doesn't grow here, but it is no mystery now—the nights are too cool. Guess that is why we sleep so sound

I will take back about the apples being so small here. The later varieties are coming on now and they are very large. Don't think they have anything like the San Jose scale here. The trees are half covered with moss, which looks strange on a fruit tree.

Did I mention how they keep their grapes trimmed? Saw one vineyard yesterday with the old stalk not longer than eight inches. That is an exception, for most of them are three feet long with a new growth of the same length.

We will send some French money to the boys. It seemed very strange at first for it is so different from U. S. money, so many different bills and coins and some of the bills are no good in certain districts.

This is not a dry country, you know. Banner and I would like to have all the money that will be spent on wines in the next year or two. He and I will always be total abstainers, and we are not alone. Everyone respects us for it the same as when we were on the B. & O. R. R.

With love to all.
Henry.

France, Sept. 1, 1917.

Dear Folks:—We haven't received any letters yet addressed here. We are getting a little anxious. It must be you did not get our first letters. We are having a good time. This is a pretty country to travel through and Henry and I get some pretty good trips.

We just stood inspection and it was pretty stiff. Everything has to be just so and I am glad it is that way. The company looks a whole lot better We expect a bunch of boys any day now. We boys are going up town this afternoon, it is the first day we have had to ourselves since we came over here.

The grapes are getting ripe, and such a sight! When we get back, think we will have some new ideas about grapes, but of course, it might not work there. The soil is a heavy clay and it sticks to a person's feet like the South Scipio mud. When it rains very hard it is almost impossible to move a truck. You see we are driving just for a short time. Everyone has some thing to do toward our new school. Don't think it will be long till it starts right.

Henry has written, so I guess I will close for this time or I will have a few things cut out by the censor.

As ever,
Banner.

Everything seems to point to ambitious attempts on the part of the Allies next spring. Greece will aid at Salonica, Italy is preparing, Russia will return to the fray and the United States, with France and Great Britain, will keep the lines busy in France.

YOU ARE INVITED

To the Revival Meetings at the Christian church in St. Joe, Indiana, beginning

Mon. Night, Nov. 5 '17

A. L. Martin, State Evangelist for the Diciples of Christ in this part of the state, will do the preaching; and he will do it well, for he is a cultivated and able preacher. Be sure to come and hear his first sermon, for it will make you want to hear the rest.

Some of the subjects on which he will preach are:

What is the Church?
Who is a Christian?
Hypocrites, a New Kind.
The People of St. Joe Who Don't Pay Their Debts.
When Does a Church Fail?
How Does a Man Know When He is Saved?
What Is It That Saves a Man?
What Is Conversion, a Study in Psycology?
The Second and Third Factor in a Man's Conversion.
Big Guns In the Church.
Religious Experience.
A Study of Paul's Conversion.
The First Psalm.

Do not fail to hear Mr. Martin on every one of these for they embrace some very instructive lectures. Singing with social worship begins each evening at 7 o'clock. Preaching begins at 7:30. The Churches of St. Joe and its environments are especially invited to these meetings; so are the lodges; and so, and much more so, are the people who belong to neither church nor lodge.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXI | ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8 1917 | NO. 45

To the READERS of The News.

We wish to announce the happy news that the St. Joe Flouring Mill has been thoroughly overhauled by our competent townsman, Mr. J. B. Haifley, and is now running and making first-class flour. Mr. Haifley is a millwright of no little ability and is also a first-class miller and knows what he is doing.

This surely will be good news to our friends to know that they can again come to St. Joe to trade and also get their wheat exchanged for flour that is equal to the best.

Give the Mill a Call.

Entertains Few Visitors

Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. S. W. Tustison, the St. Joe Lutheran Missionary Society very pleasantly and profitably entertained the Missionary Society of the Lutheran Church of Spencerville. The meeting was opened with a hymn, followed by prayer by Mrs. Mumma, and a very impressive scripture lesson by Mrs. Thornton.

Mrs. Hathaway read an article entitled "What Luther means to the Missionary Cause'" after which Mrs. Mumma gave a talk on the same general subject showing that while missionary work varies in form with the centuries, it is always characterized by the same spirit of sacrifice, and by the same aim to give the Gospel to the world.

Luther's Cradle Hymn was sung by Katherine and Elizabeth Bayman and Margaret Tustison. Mrs. Grace Dilley read a Thank-Offering Tract. The feature of the program, however, was a very excellent report of the recent Kalamazao Convention, given by Mrs. Ella Patterson. It showed that notwithstanding the many war calls for money the women of Northern Indiana Synod had brought up the largest offering in its history, by five hundred dollars. The slogan is, "Missions forever, with prayerful endeavor". Goals are: larger membership, larger magazine subscriptions, and larger funds for the extension of the work.

The next convention goes to Gary, Ind. A hearty vote of thanks was given Mrs. Patterson on the conclusion of her report. This being the Annual Thank-offering occasion, the boxes were opened, yielding almost $10.00, with several boxes yet to hear from. The program concluded with the society benediction.

The hostesses served a dainty luncheon—Withal it was a most enjoyable occasion.

It is reported that Frank Shaffer has quit the Standard Oil Company and has bought out the city dray line at Syracuse. He is now working for himself.

Mr. and Mrs. John Goldsmith and baby, Mrs. Eva Elson and the Misses Jennie and Laura Shutt, of Harlan, were Friday evening supper guests of Mrs. Kate Leighty.

Mesdames Gengnagle, Hugh Traxler and Lizzie Joslin, of Newville, spent Saturday afternoon at the Red Cross work room receiving instructions for making garments.

The result of Rally Day was very pleasing to the committee in charge as well as all who attended at the Christian Church, Sunday. 121 were present at Bible School and the offering amounted to $6.75. All who were present had a Rally Day felt pennant pinned on. The church had no other decoration except "Old Glory" and needed no other. The program while not lengthy was interesting and as it was World's Temperance Day too, part of the program was temperance. Frank Scholes, temperance superintendent, gave a talk just before the close of the services.

Results of Election.

The local election has proved to be one of the most interesting in the past few years. On Monday evening the several candidates did some hustling in trying to line up their forces. The count showed that the Citizen ticket took everything, and not an Independent man was put across.

Following is the result:—

W. C. T. U. Reception.

As a climax to a contest given in the local W. C. T. U., which began in March and lasted until August with Mrs. Elizabeth Mumma captain of the "White" side and Mrs. Amanda Spayd captain of the "yellow" side, a reception was given Friday evening at the home of the president, Mrs. Jennie Sechler, in honor of the new members gained; there having been 24 gained during the contest and 4 since it closed. The points were so nearly even it was decided that all of the older members join in giving the reception for the new ones. The forty-one ladies present listened to the following program which was opened by a duet by Mesdames. Hathaway and Leighty. Elizabeth Mumma led the devotional by reading a part of the sixth chapter of Galations, and laying stress on the following verse—"And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not". Mrs. Mumma also offered prayer. Mrs. Dermott sang a solo. Mrs. Amanda Spayd gave the address of welcome, and also a talk along the line of department work, giving an idea of the vast amount of work the organization is doing. Solo, Mrs. Leighty. Reading—"Tribute to Frances E. Willard" was beautifully given by Mrs. Cora Price. After the program the following menu was served Cafeteria style:—Sandwiches, pickles, meat loaf, cake, fruit and coffee. Toasts were given during the luncheon "To the New Members" by Mrs. Jennie Sechler, and responce "To the Old Members" by Mrs. Bessie Tustison, with Mrs. Mumma as toastmistress. At a late hour the guests departed each declaring they had had a fine evening.

Frank McKinley Killed.

In Fairfield Township Woods while Cutting Timber, by a Limb from Tree—Died Before a Physician Could Rerch Him. Funeral Thursday A. M.

A falling limb from a tree is responsible for the death of Frank McKinley of Spencerville, in a woods in Fairfield township late Monday afternoon. He with Fred Witt of Auburn, were cutting timber for a Ft. Wayne firm at the time.

They had just finished sawing a tree and had stepped back to await its fall when a big limb from another tree broke off and struck McKinley on the head, crushing his skull. Witt who was nearby escaped injury. Seeing that his companion was seriously hurt he hurried to the nearest house and summoned a physician from Kendallville. The unfortunate man, however, lived but a short time after the accident and had passed away before the doctor arrived.

Cororner H. A. Hinklin of Garrett, was called and gave as his verdict "accidental death." The body was removed to the home of his parents at Spencerville, Monday evening, where the funeral was held on Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

The unfortunate man had been urged by his father for months to come home and take charge of one of his father's farms near Spencerville. Frank had planned to do this, and was expecting to take up the farm work next week.

He had been doing teaming, but after having some words with the head teamster he left this and went to cutting down the timber and it was while in this work that he lost his life.

Mr. McKinley was about 38 years of age and had been making his home temporarily in Auburn. He lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James McKinley, a greater part of the time. Surviving besides his parents are a divorced wife and a thirteen-year-old daughter at White Pigeon, Michigan.

Mr. McKinley also has a number of relatives in Auburn who attended the funeral.

This is the second son Mr. and Mrs. McKinley have lost in the past two years and the shock is a severe one for them. Another son died two years ago following an operation.

Back on the Job.

The editor of The News is again on the job, having given up the managing of the Auburn Courie, in which capacity we acted for six months, being succeed ed by O. B Hamilton, editor of the Garrett Clipper. By D. W. Carson leaving the force the mechanical work became too heavy for the force and it necessitated us returning to the office.

St. JOE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

On the evening of Friday, Oct. 26, the Seniors gave a Hard Time party in honor of the Freshmen, who were initiated into and accepted as full pledged members of the high school. A lunch suitable to the title of the occassion was served, which, along with games and music made the evening an enjoyable one. The Sophomores, the Juniors, and members of the faculty were guests.

Because of the high school teachers' attending the state teachers' institute at Indianapolis, there was no high school Thursday and Friday.

The basket ball team is forelooking to a hard fight but good success in their first game at Auburn, Friday evening.

It certainly looked all right: no question about that woman being straight goods. Of course Lydia might have been decent enough to write a more explicit excuse to "Dear Peter" instead of "Dear Mr. Traft;" but, then, a correspondence card conveyed through the hands of a third person with whom the dear girl couldn't feel well acquainted—

"Where to, sir?"

Peter came out of morose reverie to find himself hesitating beside the taxi. "I'll be darned if I do!" Peter replied hotly.

"What's that?"

"Oh, beg pardon—no offense—was thinking. Just wait, please." Peter threw himself back into the cab, slamming the door. "Rotten fix," he grumbled. "Why, she said she'd come back." Regarding the note critically, he enunciated a somber doubt, "Don't believe she wrote you. It's all a plant."

The handwriting was unmistakably that of a woman of culture. How was he to say it wasn't Lydia's hand, who had never seen a scrap of it?

He would have kissed it, could he have been sure.

Through the forward window he commanded a perspective of the southerly sidewalk as far as to Madison avenue, where a surface car, swinging uptown, hesitated with grinding brakes, and then rumbled on.

A moment later the shadowy shape of a man darted across the street and toward the taxicab, and Peter recognized Craven's characteristic gait. But for that he wouldn't have known the man, who was all but disguised to eyes that had never beheld him out of dress clothes after nightfall—Craven wearing a bowler with a shabby, flapping raincoat, at a midnight hour, was a sight unprecedented.

Peter sat up. Barely in time a devious thought engaged his fancy, and he acted on it promptly. Ready to his hand rested the mouthpiece of a flexible speaking tube, ending in a fixed earpiece close by the chauffeur's head.

"Five dollars," Peter said distinctly into the mouthpiece, "if you don't let on I'm inside, in case this man questions."

The chauffeur didn't even signify he had heard, so positive became his immobility at sound of those magic syllables, "Five dollars."

Hastily Peter dragged his overcoat across the bosom of his shirt and crowded himself into the corner nearest the curb.

Bearing out his premonition, Craven stopped to speak to the chauffeur—and the eavesdropper cursed bitterly to hear no more than the confused grumble of their voices.

Then without the least warning the car shot away at a round pace westward.

Simmering with profanity, Peter seized the speaking tube to bellow a demand for incontinent halt; but on second thought permitted the car to round into Madison avenue before he gave the order.

Again at pause, this time halfway down the avenue block, the cab ejected an infuriated fare.

"What the blank did you do that for?"

"Why in blank shouldn't I?" the chauffeur demanded as hotly. "You told me not to let on, didn't you? Here—come through with that five!"

Choking, Peter found his money, disbursed. "How did it happen?"

"Why the old gink says, did I bring a young lady and was I waitin' for her, and I says yes, an' he slips me three bones—the clock says two-forty—and says to clear out, I won't be needed. And what did you want me to do about that, seein', you didn't want him to know you was inside?"

"Oh, all right," said Peter wearily. "You did precisely the right thing. Only—I didn't quite understand." He eyed perplexedly the colored lights of a drug store across the way.

"Well, what's the good word now, boss? If you're done with me, I'm on my way."

"No," Peter insisted, "I'm keeping you. Run across the block and wait just out of sight on Park avenue. I'll walk back."

Buttoning topcoat to chin and sacrificing his Bond street topper to the elements, Peter trudged back to Seventy-sixth street, then eastward past number 98, regarding the house aggressively.

It looked down on him now, he thought defiantly, with a touch of contemptuous pity for his impotence to read the riddle of its staid, uncommunicative walls.

Embittered, he walked on to Park avenue, and found his chartered car at the appointed place. Pausing beside it, and ignoring the chauffeur's well-meant advances (stimulated by the romantic notion that this swell young guy was tryin' to beat it with the old duffer's daughter, and had stubbed his toe in the getaway), Peter painfully excogitated the inevitable conclusion that the only thing he could do was wait and watch. He comforted himself a little with the cold assurance that Craven was now with his daughter. Whatever old Tad's shortcomings, Peter couldn't believe he would suffer a hair of Lydia's innocent head to be harmed. Only—

What the deuce was keeping the two of them there so long?

Then abruptly a second taxicab swung round one of Park avenue's scrubby little ovals of grass and shrubbery, slid into Seventy-sixth street, checked briefly in front of 98, discharged two passengers, and slipped away toward Madison avenue. Peter recognized something familiar in the association of a long and slender figure with one short and stoutish, as the two dodged hastily into the basement area of number 98 and disappeared.

"Musical comedy rogues," mused the perturbed young man: "the tall thin scoundrel and the short fat sharper; Messrs. Southpaw Smith and Gordon, of course. What in thunder— Confound it! she must be all right! Craven would never let anything happen to her."

He began to fume impotently. No good trying the front door again.

Then he thought of consulting Quoin by telephone, and had started back through Seventy-sixth street toward the corner drug store, when a taxicab shot round from the avenue, passed at a sharp clip, and immediately slid to as smart a stop, while the door swung open and a man, jumping out, hailed sharply:

"Peter!"

"Quoin—thank heaven! How in the name of wonder—"

"Found Craven had left the Great Eastern, taxied back to the Margrave, got the address Miss Craven gave from the carriage porter. Luckily you made such a sensation bolting after her taxi that it had fixed the number in the fellow's memory. Now what's up?"

Briefly Peter detailed the inconclusive and unsatisfactory circumstances of his vigil.

"In through the basement, you say?" Quoin pondered this darkly. "Looks like a move to trick somebody—Craven, at a guess. Come along."

Grasping Peter's arm, the detective trotted him rapidly back toward number 98.

"What are you going to do?"

"Let developments guide us."

"You mean to try to get in?"

"No: I mean to get in," Quoin corrected grimly.

"How'll you make 'em admit you?"

"Don't know precisely, as yet. But we're going to find out something—we're going to see Miss Craven and get her personal assurance she's all right, or raise the deuce of a row in this quiet neighborhood. Not only that, but I'm still pining for a chat with Craven."

They were ascending the brownstone steps. Quoin rang imperatively.

"Stand back a moment," he suggested. "Let me do the talking."

Peter had barely time to withdraw to one side when the woman of the house came out through the vestibule and hurriedly opened the outer door.

As it opened Quoin entered. Peter heard him say pleasantly "Good evening, Mrs. Ellsworthy," and after that a sort of strangled gasp from the woman. A moment later, Quoin moving on, Peter saw her clearly.

She had fallen back against the closed door, blanched and trembling, destitute now of every shred of her amiable self-possession of half an hour earlier. Her eyes were fixed in terror on Quoin's face. She made an effort to speak, but evoked only a dry, rasping sound.

"You're not ill, I trust, Mrs. Ellsworthy?"

There was a sardonic inflection in Quoin's voice that seemed to Peter a trifle unnecessary.

"I thought," she gasped, and gulped, "I thought you were the doctor."

"Otherwise you wouldn't have let me in, I presume? Is there anything really serious the matter?"

"Craven—" the woman panted.

Quoin started with horror. "Craven!" he iterated; then, controlling himself, "I was afraid—something of the sort. You've phoned for a doctor, you say? While we're waiting let me have a look at the poor devil."

CHAPTER XVI.

"I am Mrs. Ellsworthy—yes," said the woman with the agreeable voice who answered Lydia's ring. "Won't you come in?"

And when Lydia had crossed the threshold Mrs. Ellsworthy shut the vestibule door and looked the girl over with smiling interest.

"Miss Craven, I presume?"

"You were expecting me?"

"Your father telephoned sometime ago. Would you mind stepping upstairs?"

"But—I have merely a message—"

"Yes, my dear, I know; but do let me consider it in comfort—upstairs."

Under the soft glow of the electric dome Mrs. Ellsworthy's smile and the gracious inclination of her head that invited Lydia anew to ascend the stairway were alike quite irresistible. Lydia found no excuse for refusing; so subdued her impatience, assented with a murmur, and preceded her hostess up the staircase.

"I'm really delighted to know you, Miss Craven. Yes—straight ahead, if you please. But I do need more light to see you by."

Entering the designated room, Mrs. Ellsworthy touched a wall switch, adding the illumination of an electrolier to the subdued glow of the reading lamp on a desk, and paused to review the girl with her kindly and engaging glance.

"I've known your father for many years," she affirmed, nodding; "and you've much of his charm, my dear, though you don't resemble him in the least—rather, I fancy, your mother."

"You knew my mother?" Lydia asked eagerly.

"No. Won't you sit down? No; Tad Craven has always been a confirmed bachelor in everybody's esteem since I've known him. Is it true he means to marry again?"

"Yes," said Lydia; and opening her wrist bag produced Craven's note.

"No—please don't rise," interrupted Mrs. Ellsworthy, crossing to her. "Mr. Craven mentioned this over the wire. Pardon—"

Taking a chair beside the reading lamp, she opened and scanned the message with careless interest. A nod confirmed evident foreknowledge of its contents. Folding the note abstractedly, Mrs. Ellsworthy seemed for some moments preoccupied.

But Peter Traft had claims not long to be disregarded, and presently Lydia stirred restlessly, with an inquiring look ready for the eyes that her hostess then lifted from the carpet.

"You've met this—ah—Mrs. Merrilees, no doubt?" Mrs. Ellsworthy queried unexpectedly. "Is she then such a beauty as they say?"

"She's very beautiful," Lydia returned, "and I'm very fond of her. But, if you don't mind, Mrs. Ellsworthy, I have another appointment; in fact, with Mrs. Merrilees and my father—"

"Oh, I beg your pardon, my dear." Mrs. Ellsworthy assumed a convincing look of contrition. "So thoughtless of me. I quite forgot to tell you: Mr. Craven wants you to wait for him here, rather than keep the appointment at the Margrave."

The Margrave again!

"The Plaza," Lydia corrected absently; then in a breath remembered. "I'm sorry," she said, rising, "but I can't wait. If daddy's coming here, he'll get the answer from you personally; so there's no need," here Mrs. Ellsworthy rose in her turn. "And—I left a friend waiting in the taxi."

"A friend?"

It was none of Mrs. Ellsworthy's affair, but quite automatically Lydia answered, "Mr. Traft."

"But really hadn't you better wait? I'm sure Mr. Craven won't be long now."

Mrs. Ellsworthy was moving slowly toward the door, as if she didn't really expect her objection to avail, an effect heightened by her manner, which continued to be perfect, lacking anything but gracious interest.

Lydia, however, was quite settled in her determination to wait no longer. Craven could lose nothing by being obliged to follow her to the Plaza; and anyway, in all fairness, she owed his wishes little consideration—he who was little enough considerate to her—and below in the taxi all earthly happiness waited.

"I'm sorry," she repeated mechanically. "You're very kind; but I really don't think—"

At this point she was interrupted by a shrill-tongued electric bell downstairs. Mrs. Ellsworthy started nervously, eyed the girl fugitively with what seemed a trace of doubt, and darted toward the door.

"The telephone!" she said indistinctly. "Forgive me if I—"

Her hand caught the knob as if thoughtlessly; but the slam of the door cut short her words emphatically enough to have wakened her to appreciation, had her act been really thoughtless.

For an instant Lydia paused in amazement. The thing was incredible, preposterous, outrageous!

None the less the door remained obdurately shut, mutely testifying that the incredible was an accomplished fact.

With a little cry of indignation the girl tried the knob. It turned freely, but without engaging the latch. Infuriated, she caught it with both hands, braced a knee against the wall, and pulled with all the strength of her lithe and vigorous young body; but failed to budge the door by so much as a hair's breadth. And the only discoverable keyhole was in the knob itself—a thin, irregular slit for a combination latchkey, lacking which the door, once closed, could never be opened, but only hewed or battered down.

Examination proved the room a veritable stronghold. It had only the one door. The sashes of the two windows were guarded with locks requiring a key; through the panes closed steel blinds with hasps and padlocks were to be seen. There was not a bell button on the walls; and the telephone on the desk yielded no response to the girl's manipulation of the receiver hook—evidently an extension cut off from the main line.

At length Lydia yielded to the inevitable, sat down, composed herself to the best of her ability, and strove to fit some reasonable explanation to this atrocious and high-handed act. There was but three:

She was the victim of a nightmare.

Mrs. Ellsworthy was insane.

Or else Craven had never meant her to restore the necklace to Mrs. Merrilees!

Bending forward, an elbow digging into her knee, her chin clipped between knuckles and palm, her mouth mutinous, her eyes smoldering, a hot spot in each cheek, motionless, Lydia brooded.

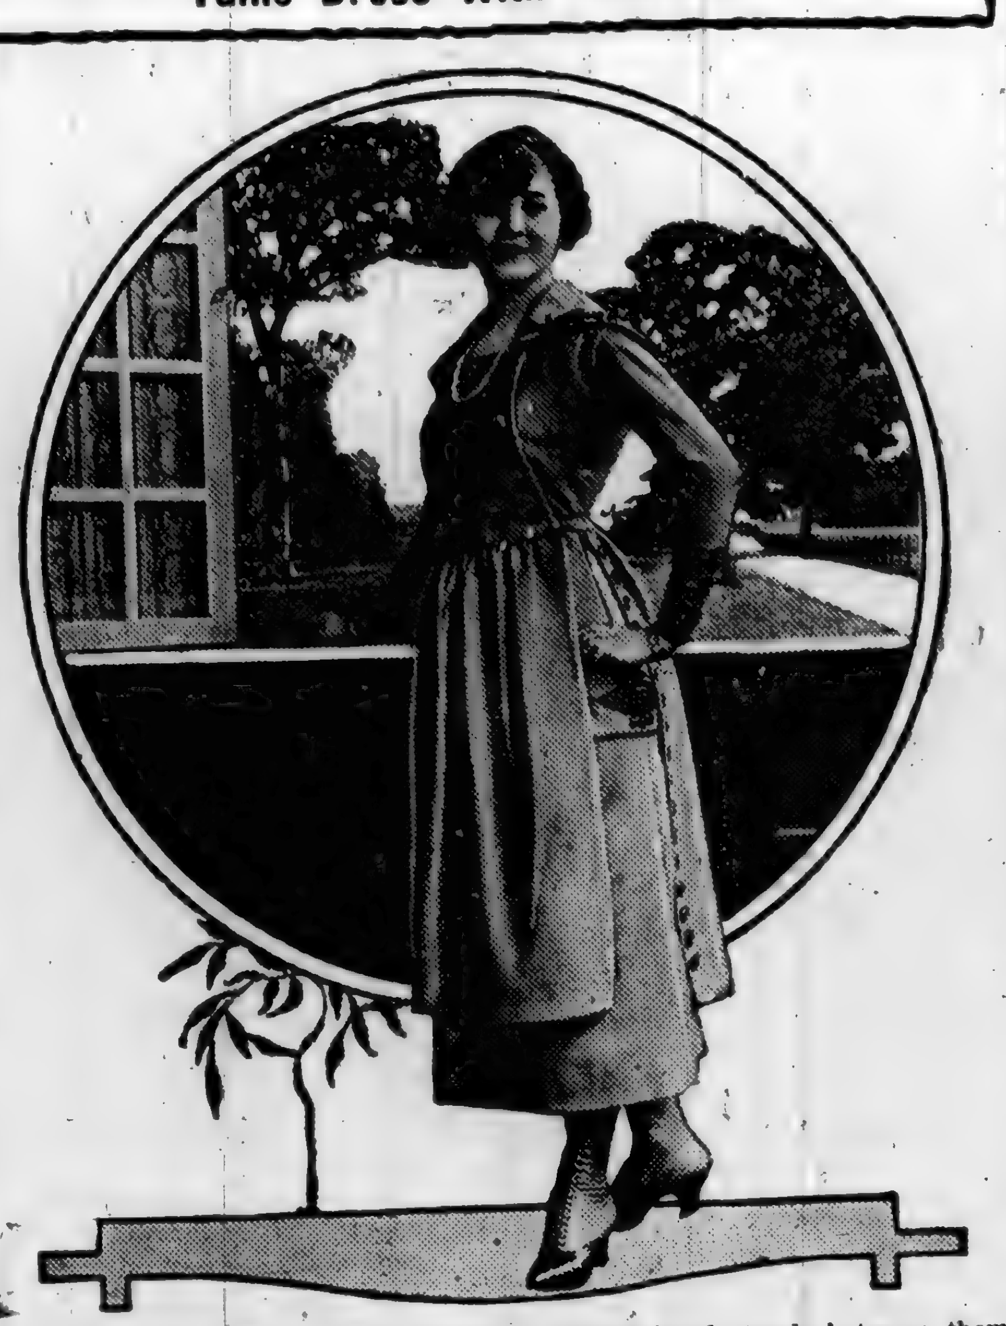
The Changing Times.

This war is changing all of our oldest institutions. In more peaceful days the typewriter repair man came in, turned a screw, untangled the ribbon, wrote, "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party," and went his way.

But times are different. The repair man entered the office this week and wrote: "A quick movement of the enemy will jeopardize six gunboats."—New York Evening Post.

Tunic Dress With Overbodice



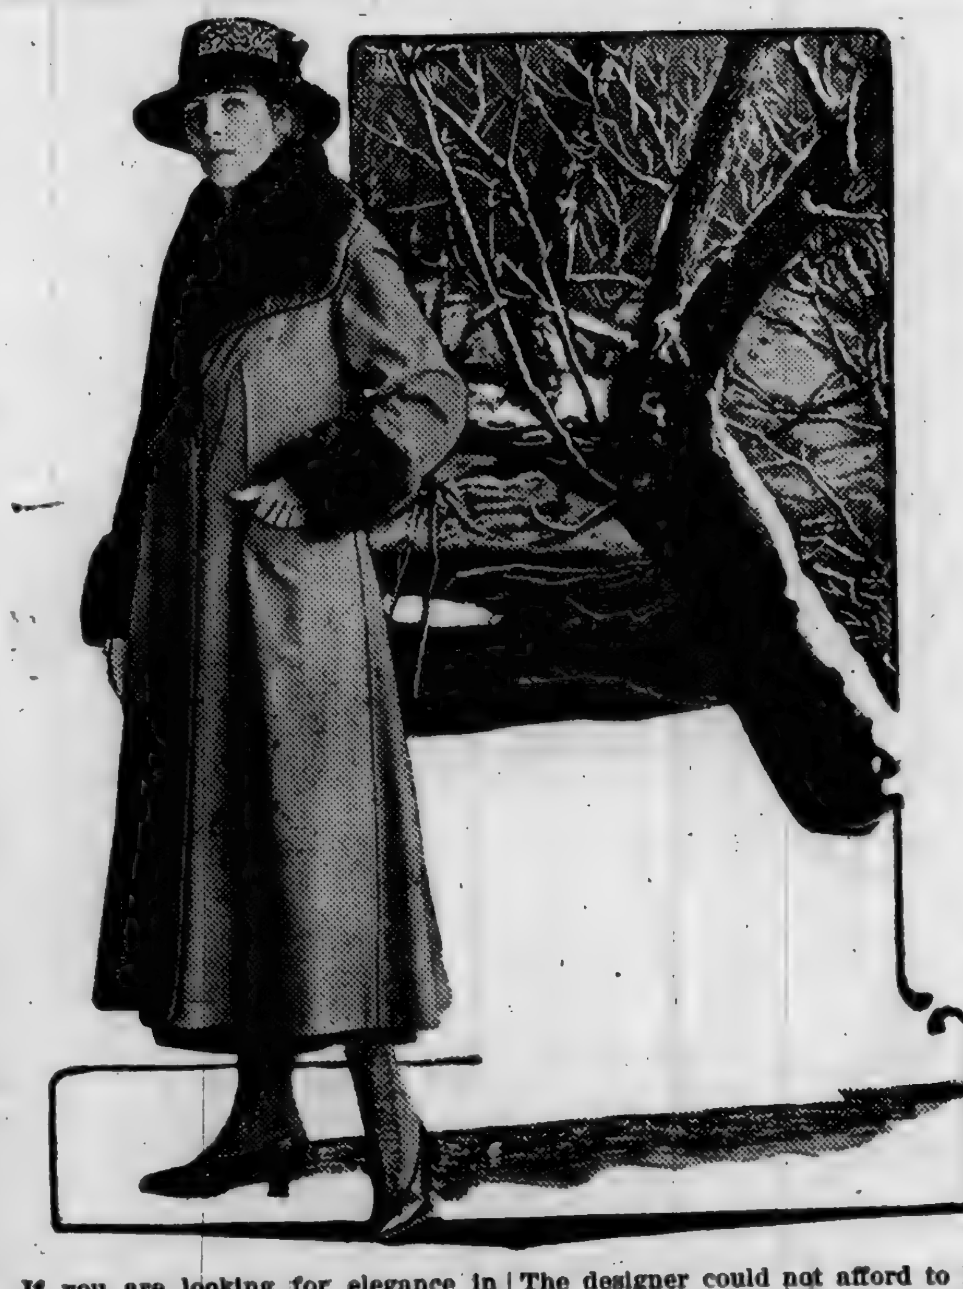
An overbodice and a tunic joined together, distinguish the smart and snappy dress of wool fabric which is pictured here. Both are decided successes in this season's styles. The tunic is worn over a narrow, straight-hanging underskirt and the sleeveless bodice over a lining bodice, with sleeves attached made of the same cloth as the dress or of satin. Quite often the underskirt is of satin also. These two items of information will prove useful to those thrifty and patriotic women who are conserving our wool supply by making over a last year's suit or dress into a this year's model. It can be done very successfully when a shortage of material is helped out with satin sleeves or satin underskirt.

The dress pictured is excellent for business or general wear. Machine stitching in rows, buttons and buttonholes give it a tailored finish. The tunic opens at the left side, with one edge finished with buttonholes and the other with buttons, manifestly made for each other. But they are destined never to be united, for a mere slip of a braided band stands between them. Braiding in the same design appears on the sailor collar that finishes the neck.

The underskirt is joined to the underwaist (which need not be made of wool or satin, but of a lining material). The overbodice is well managed with its fastening of buttons and buttonholes at one side and sleeve finished with three tucks above the wrist. Each of them makes place for a bone button, forming a row of three. These rather large, plain, bone buttons are lined up with military precision in straight and in curved lines on tunic and bodice, making what appears to be a simple trimming, but it takes an expert to place them so exactly.

A dress of this kind, worn with a fur neckpiece, is warm enough for street wear on autumn days and as appropriate as a tailored suit. In winter it is worn under a long, enveloping coat with muffler collar, and together they can defy the thermometer to go as far as it likes in a downward direction.

Elegance in Broadcloth Coat



If you are looking for elegance in a coat you are of the same mind as the designer of the handsome model shown in the picture. He has undertaken to make, with castor broadcloth and beaver fur, a garment that cannot be outclassed by any rival, no matter how rich or expensive. His achievement is an example of the best art of the tailor and merits study to make this coat the peer of far more costly garments, the refinement of broadcloth (especially in the color chosen), long, graceful lines and superb tailoring are all combined in a result that will delight the woman of exquisite taste.

The coat is cut in the modish length, is semi-fitted at the back and hangs straight in front. It has lapped seams, and slit pockets, cut in a curve. The only stitching, put in solely to be ornamental, appears in several rows below the pockets and running parallel to them. There are long shoulders and roomy sleeves cut in the plain coat-sleeve fashion.

No other fur would do quite so well for the ample collar and cuffs as beaver, although seal or mink or kolinsky all make a good finish. But the beaver fur keeps the coat all in one color, for even the huge, semi-transparent buttons are of the same color as the cloth. The designer could not afford to have them commonplace and their unusual size is warranted by the character of the coat which is altogether out of the ordinary. This is one among a good many attractive coats this season that will serve for many occasions, just as a fur coat does. It is certain that no winter has brought with it more becoming wraps or cloths better adapted to graceful styles.

Cocked Hats.

The "cocked" hat again is noticed. One comes in the sheen variety of black velvet, and is trimmed with two huge pompoms of clipped material unusually trim in their effect. The hat worn high on the head looks extremely well when worn with the closely fitted fur pieces, and gives the wearer a chance to display some head length even if her neck is completely hidden.

Way to Clean Mesh Bags.

An easy way to clean a silver mesh bag is to wash it in warm water, using a pure white soap and a small brush such as a toothbrush. Rinse well and pat dry with a cloth.

"Blue" and Worried?

"Blue," worried, half-sick people should find out the cause of their troubles. Often it is merely faulty kidney action, which allows the blood to get loaded up with poisons that irritate the nerves. Backache, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder troubles are added proofs that the kidneys need help. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands thank them for relief from just such troubles.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. Mary M. Stoy, 216 E. Elm St., New Albany, Ind., says: "My kidneys were weak and I had bladder trouble. It didn't take much to tire me. I was so weak and run down, I was so lame I couldn't turn in bed without help and could hardly walk across the floor. Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me right away. Now I am able to do my own work and I feel fine. I can't speak too highly of Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

Housekeepers Can Save $200,000,000 on Food

In these days when the high cost of living pinches nearly every home, no waste should be overlooked. One of the most flagrant and the most easily prevented, is the destruction of food by rats. One rat will often do a hundred dollars' damage of food and property in a single night, and a careful estimate gives over $200,000,000 as the value of foodstuffs destroyed annually by these pests. Exterminate them with Stearns' Paste and save this enormous loss of food. A small box of Stearns' Paste costs only 35 cents and is usually enough to completely rid the house of rats and mice; also effective against cockroaches and waterbugs. Adv.

Peat Bogs in Ireland.

Ireland possesses 25,000,000 acres of peat bog—one-seventh the total area of the island. Much of this peat is concentrated in the center of the country, in the Bog of Allen, but there are also large tracts in other localities. To utilize this peat, not merely for domestic use, but also for power purposes, is a problem which has exercised the minds of prominent Irishmen for many years, and the department of scientific and industrial research appointed a committee, with Sir John Griffiths of Dublin as chairman to investigate the whole question. Some successful attempts have already been made in Ireland to deal with the substance on a commercial basis, but any efforts to utilize the deposits must always have regard to three circumstances—that peat contains and retains a large amount of water; that, compared with other fuels, it has a low caloric value, and that it is extremely bulky, involving a high cost of carriage.

THE LAST EXAMINATION OF WAR'S DRAFT

Many a man has fallen down because a test of his water showed unmistakably that he had kidney disease.

The kidneys are the scavengers and they work day and night in separating the poisons from the blood. Their signals of distress are easily recognized and include such symptoms as backache, depressions, drowsiness, irritability, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic twinges, dropsy, gout.

"The very best way to restore the kidneys to their normal state of health and cure such symptoms," says Dr. Pierce of Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., "is to drink plenty of water and obtain from your favorite pharmacy a 60-cent bottle of An-u-ric, double strength, which is dispensed by almost every druggist." You will find Anuric more potent than lithia, dissolves uric acid as water does sugar.

Send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. and ask for advice if there is need.

Charm Is Necessary.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, the great French actress, in a signed article in Harper's Bazar, attributes the numerous divorces that have come into the courts of late years to lack of charm in the women concerned.

"If I stood at the threshold of life," says Mme. Bernhardt, "asking of it something with which to buy happiness, I should beg for charm. For if one has charm, she will be loved. And a woman must have love to be happy. Beauty does not matter. If a woman has charm she can secure whatever she wants—love, success, power."

The divine Sarah also says that this invaluable quality can be cultivated.

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 25

A PSALM OF THANKSGIVING.

LESSON TEXT—Psalms 103.
GOLDEN TEXT—Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.—Ps. 103:2.

This Psalm is man's response to the goodness and mercy of God. It expresses the joy and gratitude of a forgiven sinner as he worships before God. There is too much in this Psalm for one to attempt to set it forth, so we must be content to display some of its most prominent notes.

I. Man's Entire Being Should Sing God's Praise, v. 1. The true worshiper praises God with every faculty of his being; his intellect, emotion, desires, affections all unite in praising Jehovah. The entire being responds in a song of harmonious praise. Some praise God with their voices but not with their hearts; some with their intellect but not with their affections; some with their emotions but not with their wills. That praise which involves the entire being alone is pleasing to God.

II. The Benefits Granted, vv. 2-6. The Psalmist exhorts man not to forget all God's benefits. This seems to be needed now as well as then, for most of us are better at remembering our troubles and adversities, our losses and our sorrows, than we are at remembering our mercies and blessings. It would be a good thing for some of us to keep a record of the good things of life and see that, after all, our blessings outweigh our burdens. We have more days of sunshine than of clouds, more joys than we have of sorrows, more hours when we are free from pain than we suffer with pain. If God were as forgetful of us as we are of Him, life would be hard indeed.

(1) Forgiveness of sins, v. 3. In forgiveness we are freed from the curse of sin and its blight and burdens are removed. We are not only forgiven, but we are healed of sin's disease! not only freed from the burdens of sin but of its effects, so that we do not go after the things of this world. To be saved for heaven means that we are saved from the world.

(2) Redemption, v. 4. We have been saved by Christ giving Himself as a ransom for our souls.

(3) Satisfaction, v. 5. When God redeems, He so thoroughly renews the man that the good things which he gets from God satisfy him. His blessings are so real that he finds satisfaction in God. Men and women of the world are reaching out after fleeting things. They are ever grasping after something, but are never satisfied. Not so with the redeemed soul; he finds absolute satisfaction in the things which God gives him. Worldings may be satiated, but God's redeemed alone are satisfied.

(4) Executing judgment in behalf of the oppressed, v. 6. He is always on the side of the oppressed. God undertakes for his own, and sooner or later He will mete out justice to all. There is a reckoning day for the world coming. Those who have done evil shall suffer loss; those who have done good shall be rewarded.

III. Attributes of God for Which He Should Be Praised, vv. 7-18. These attributes have been displayed in God's dealings with his chosen people.

(1) Merciful and gracious, v. 8. He is slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. An example of his mercy is seen in the father of the prodigal son running to meet his son and kissing him. A very little thought will make very evident how God withholds his anger and waits patiently for an opportunity to extend his mercy.

(2) He will not always "chide," vv. 8-12. When God forgives he forgives forever. Men say they forgive, but how often they "chide" and "keep anger." God has not dealt with us according to our sins, for, as the heavens are high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that they fear him. So really has God forgiven us that our transgressions are as far removed from us as the East is from the West, an incalculable distance.

(3) He is compassionate and tender, vv. 13-14. This reveals God's fatherly heart. He fully knows our weakness. He does not deal with us as though we were strong. He knows how weak and fallible we are through the fall. It is consoling to know that God considers our "frame"; He knows that we are "dust."

(4) His mercy is everlasting, eternal, vv. 15-17. Man is at best transitory, but God is eternal. The one who rests his hopes in God is eternally safe. This should encourage us to lean not upon man but upon God.

(5) God is gracious to those who are in covenant relationship, v. 18. If we would enjoy these blessings revealed in God's attributes we must be God's children. His mercies are restrictive, only bestowed upon his own children.

IV. A Call to All the Universe to Praise the Lord, vv. 19-22. Since God is such a wonderful Being, He should have universal praise. His kingdom is over all; his Lordship should have recognition.

The true conquerors are often those whom the world calls the vanquished. —Max Muller.

Royal Baking Powder saves eggs in baking

In many recipes only half as many eggs are required, in some none at all, if an additional quantity of Royal Baking Powder is used, about a teaspoon, in place of each egg omitted.

Try the following recipes which also conserve white flour as urged by the government.

Corn Meal Griddle Cakes

1½ cups corn meal
1½ cups boiling water
½ cup milk
1 tablespoon shortening
1 tablespoon molasses
½ cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
NO EGGS

Scald corn meal in bowl with boiling water; add milk, melted shortening and molasses; add flour, salt and baking powder which have been sifted together; mix well. Bake on hot greased griddle until brown.

(The Old Method called for 2 eggs)

Eggless, Milkless, Butterless Cake

1 cup brown sugar
1¼ cups water
1 cup seeded raisins
2 ounces citron, cut fine
⅓ cup shortening
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup flour
1 cup rye flour
5 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder

Boil sugar, water, fruit, shortening, salt and spices together in saucepan 3 minutes. When cool, add flour and baking powder which have been sifted together. Mix well; bake in loaf pan in moderate oven about 45 minutes.

(The Old Method [Fruit Cake] called for 2 eggs)

Least of Two Evils.

An employee in the office of a noisy munition plant was absent from work one morning. After luncheon, however, he presented himself. He looked pretty bad, but he claimed that he was ready for work.

"Why, what are you doing down here?" cried the boss. "Your wife telephoned that you probably wouldn't be able to work for several days. She said you were on the verge of nervous prostration, and that the least noise was bad for you. Why didn't you stay at home?"

"Well," answered the wage slave, raising his voice to be heard above the distracting din. "I did get through with the morning at home. But my wife had a bridge party this afternoon, so I thought I'd be better off down here."

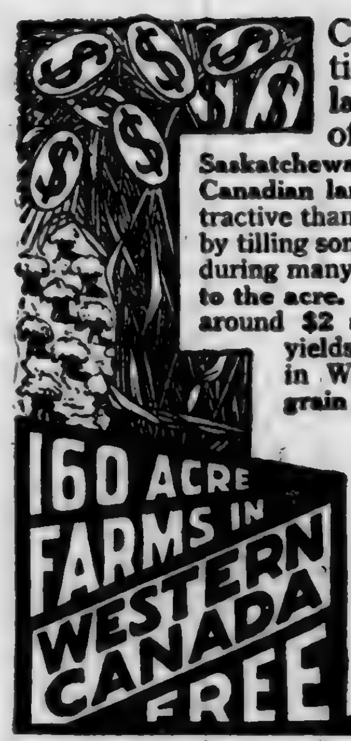
Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil



160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. Thanksgiving Family Party

by Donald Chamberlin

THE most delightful part of my life was that age when boys and girls freely mingle with each other as friends, half boy and girl, half man and woman.

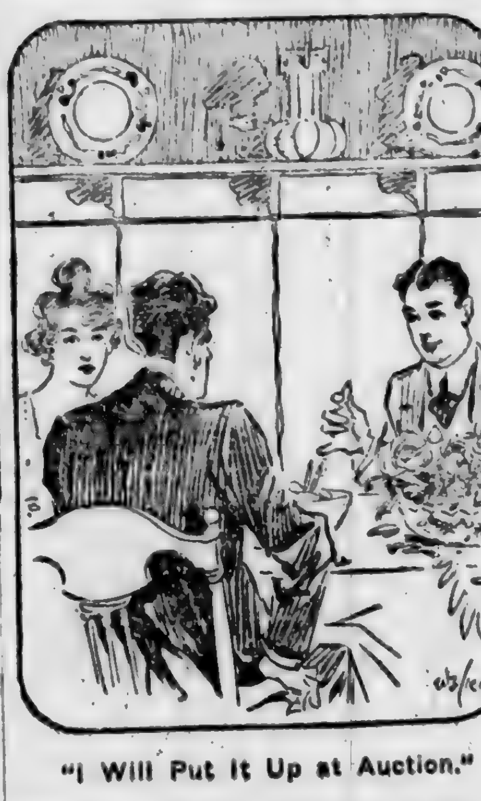
There was one Thanksgiving when the head of our large family invited every member that could be reached to spend a week in his large country house, including Thanksgiving day.

Those of us of my generation went in for a good time together. The girls were of that age when a taste for mischief predominates. One night when I was getting ready for bed I found the legs of my pajamas sewed up. When I had ripped the sewing, got them on and tumbled into bed I found the sheets scratched. I had turned off the light, so, springing out of bed, I tiptoed hastily to the door, opened it and was in time to grab the last of a bevy of girls who ran away in the darkness.

Throwing my arms around my captive, I gave her a smack, she struggling to be free, then let her go. Slipping back into my room, I turned on a light, and there, sticking onto the breast of my pajamas, was an elongated pin of chased gold set in the center with a single sapphire.

The problem was to identify the girl I had kissed by discovering the owner of the pin. I consulted with my men cousins, and it was decided that I should put the article up at auction at the Thanksgiving dinner, bids to be accepted only from the men.

Accordingly when the nuts and coffee came on I took the pin out of my vest pocket and, holding it up before the company, said: "I found this article recently and would be happy to return it to the owner if he will claim it and prove ownership."



"I Will Put It Up at Auction."

I swept the board with my glance, but saw no sight of a give-away on any girl's face. Then I continued:

"Since there is no claimant for the article, I will put it up at auction, reserving the right to bid to the men present of my own generation, the proceeds of the sale to go to charity."

I called for bids, and one of my cousins, Jack Somers, bid 25 cents. There was an exclamation of disapprobation for such an offer, and when another of my confederates bid 50 cents it was repeated. The gem alone could not have been worth less than $25. When every man who was permitted to bid had done so, $2.75 was the highest offer received.

I knocked the article down to the successful man, Jim Atwood, and he handed me the money. "What luck!" he exclaimed, holding the pin before him admiringly. "I've wanted something like this for a gift to my fiancee, and now I have found it."

The fact of another girl possessing her jewelry was too much for its owner. Becky Aldrich showed by her expression that she was at least to be suspected. I took the pin from Jim and tossed it to her. A telltale blush confirmed my suspicion, and, the eyes of all the company being concentrated on Becky, it deepened into scarlet. Then there was a burst of laughter, in which everyone joined heartily but Becky.

Becky pretended to be very much offended with me for the course I had taken. This caused me to feel uncomfortable, and I endeavored to placate her. Becky for a long while refused to be appeased.

To make a long story short, Becky played me as an angler would play a trout till I was madly in love with her. Having refused me, she seemed to be satisfied and thereafter treated me so considerately that I tried again and was successful. Naturally, the anniversary of Thanksgiving brings to me interesting memories.

Message of Cheer.

The holiday season is here and with it comes a message of cheer and a quickening of the benevolent impulses of the heart. Thanksgiving day—a festival for giving thanks for the mercies of the closing year—is one of the oldest institutions in America. The Pilgrim Fathers held their first harvest thanksgiving festival in 1621.

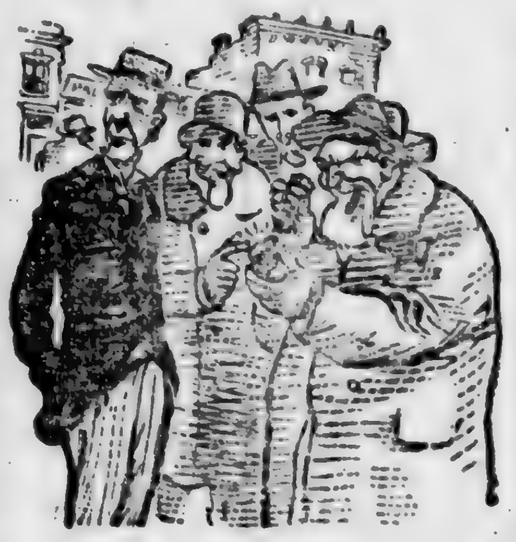
IN COUNTRY TOWN

Reasons Why Thanksgiving Is Always Interesting There.

THANKSGIVIN' day in a country town is allus interestin' on account o' th' folks that come back homes. Some o' us kin git by th' Fourth o' July or fair week or even Christmas an' New Years, but somehow ther's somethin' 'bout Thanksgivin' day that kind o' makes us want t' be back home. Then, too, one nice long dull Thanksgivin' afternoon in a B flat town is enough t' make us all satisfied t' stay away fer another whole year.

Our town looks real cosmopolitan like t'day, as Tell Binkley would say. On ever' corner you kin see little clumps o' fellers that haint met in years holdin' reunions an' talkin' about ole times. Some o' 'em look like they had lots t' be thankful fer an' some o' 'em look like th' place they come from ought t' be thankful, while still others look like our town ought t' be thankful that Thanksgivin' only comes once a year.

Sam Bud, who traded his farm here fer a Floridy orange grove some years ago came in from th' north this mornin'. He says this is th' first time that he's ever had clothes an' money enough at th' same time t' git back.



Laurel Spray, From the West, Is in Town Wearing a Straw Hat.

Hallie Mopps, who's been gone about ten years, is home from Coshocton, Ohio. He says he's lied so long about th' size o' his father's farm here that he hardly recognized it when he got back.

Grayson Mapes wuz about th' first feller that showed up fer Thanksgivin'. His folks have been dead fer thirty years an' he never knowed it. 'Bout th' last thing anybuddy ever heerd o' him wuz in 1876, when he sent his mother a Centennial edition o' th' Philadelphy Ledger. He come over from Jeffersonville on parole but nobody knowed him.

Joe Apple is back in town shakin' hands, too. His whiskers have been driven back an' his step haint quite as springy as it wuz before he traded his hardware store fer some rice land in Arkansas. He's jist a plain shoveler now somewhere's in Michigan. He says that while th' work is a little harder than bein' in business, ther haint no books t' keep an' ther haint nothin' invested an' you kin lay off when it rains.

Laurel Spray, who sold his farm here two years ago an' invested in a gold mine out West, is in town wearin' a straw hat. He says he's been so busy gittin' home that th' weather never occurred t' him. He may stay here an' go back in th' band if he kin trade his minin' stock fer a clarinet.

But ups an' downs er no ups an' downs, a feller is still purty rich that's got a good mother an' father t' go back to. Ther haint no mashed p'tatoes an' roast turkey an' minced pie anywhere else on earth that kin touch your mother's. Her coffee is generally purty bad, but we won't say anything about that. I don't care how any feller is gittin' along, whether he's single or tied down, he feels a whole lot better if he knows he's got an ole home t' go back to. O' course your father haint as gushy as mother—but even if you did leave th' farm jest at a time when he needed you th' most, he's proud o' you. Jest as long as you don't ask father fer any money, either directly er thro' mother, he's proud o' you.

But mother is th' one. She believes ever'thing you tell her. She knows you have t' hurry away an' that where you've been workin' has had t' close down till you git back. You're her boy an' things can't git along without you.

Universal Thanksgiving.

Some call November the dreary month of the year, the black sheep of the 12; and yet it is the month of thankfulness, the completion of the fruitage of the year. In the woods the squirrels are industriously at work among their last gleanings before cold weather sets in, their happy "cheecheeree" joining with the calls of the blue jays and crows and smaller birds in the universal paean of thanksgiving. In the underbrush and in the meadows the mice, too, are harvesting, with their hearts full of gladness. Bees are buzzing over goldenrod and wild asters and other late flowers; the quail that have escaped the hunter are, like Ruth, gathering the last grains in the farmer's fields; while the farmer himself and his boys are loading the golden pumpkins into the big farm wagons to carry away for winter storage for use by both the family and the cattle.

His umbrella is gone but his feet are dry. Take care of your health. Don't let them say when the doctor calls "Wet feet did it." Rubber footwear is cheap and good men are scarce.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

James K. Ricketts was born to Riley and Aseneth Ricketts, at Spencerville, Indiana, on the 16th day of October, 1847, and departed this life at his home in Wilmington township, Oct. 28, 1917. Aged 70 years and 12 days. His younger days were spent in the vicinity of Spencerville, and he was united in marriage to Louisa Bailey, Feb. 6, 1869. To this union were born three sons and one daughter. The sons died in their youth, but the daughter, now Mrs. Harriet Draggoo, of Concord, survives. The mother died Dec. 31, 1878. On October 5, 1882, he was joined in wedlock to Anna Wasson. One son, M. J Ricketts, and two daughters, Isa Shearer and Geraldine Ricketts, were born to this union. They, with the widow, are today sorrowing for the departed. Two brothers, Thomas and Sherman, and three grandchildren are also left to mourn.

Mr. Ricketts grew to manhood and spent his life in this part of DeKalb county. During all of these years he has been a good citizen and as a friend and neighbor, we venture the assertion there were none better. He was here during the construction period of our now prosperous country and he bore his full share of the hardships of a new country.

To his wife and children he was devoted and as a loving and indulgent father will be greatly missed. He had been in failing health for several years, but he bore his burden with fortitude and was even cheerful in spite of his affliction. Only a few weeks ago his neighbors helped him celebrate his 70th. birthday anniversary. He was only confined to his bed a few days until death relieved him. A loyal citizen, an exceptionally kind father and husband and good neighbor is gone. Long may we remember and emulate his good qualities.

Funeral services were held from his home, 1 mile west of Newville, on Wednesday, Oct. 31, at 2 o'clock. Rev. Hively, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Interment in White City cemetery, at Spencerville.

To be Dealt With Firmly.

Whereas, the work of the Red Cross in DeKalb County has been embarrassed and interferred with by the circulation of false and malicious stories concerning the purposes and management of the Red Cross.

Therefore, It is hereby ordered that all officers of the Red Cross and its branches in DeKalb County promptly report the names of all persons circulating such false and malicious stories to the Chairman of the County Council of Defense, Mayor J. Y. W. McClellan of Auburn, or some member thereof, for investigation and prosecution.

Passed by the Executive Committee, DeKalb County Chapter, Red Cross, Oct. 27, 1917.

Obituary

Mary Elizabeth Dilley was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, February 16, 1847, and died at her home in Guthrie Center, Iowa, September 29, 1917, at the age of 70 years, 9 months, and 29 days.

She was united in marriage to John H. Jenkins, of DeKalb county, Indiana, during the year 1865. Eleven children were born to this union, four sons and seven daughters. The husband, one son, and three daughters have preceded her to the Glory World.

She was converted at the early age of eleven years and united with the Lutheran church. After coming to Iowa she united with the Wesleyan Methodist church in which she served as a faithful and esteemed member until death. She lived a devout life, full of faith, and full of the Holy Ghost, and died triumphant.

The deceased was a faithful wife, a loving mother, and a kind neighbor. To know her was to love her. Her children arise and call her blessed, while her friends and neighbors bow their heads in grief at their loss.

She leaves two younger sisters, Mrs. Ella Horn, and Mrs. Margaret Cummings, both of Indiana. The surviving children are W. E. and E. L. Jenkins, of Dennison, Iowa, Sherman Jenkins of Wichita, Iowa, Mrs. Metta Roberts, Margaret, Bertha, and Beula Jenkins of Guthrie Center. Also two little grand daughters, Helen and Hazel Roberts.

The funeral services were held in the Wesleyan Methodist church, conducted by Rev. W. R Emerson assisted by Rev. Albert Johnson and Rev. D. F. Smith. Luke 10:42, the text of her choice, with Revelations 14:13, was used, and the remains of her frail body were laid away in the Union cemetery awaiting the final glorious resurrection of the body.

PRESIDENT'S WAR MESSAGE GARBLED

Full Text Withheld From People of Germany by Kaiser's Government.

PASSAGES WERE SUPPRESSED

Report of Wolff Telegraph Bureau, Unofficial Mouthpiece of Kaiser, Show's Wilson's Address Distorted.

The German people never had an opportunity to read the full text of the address delivered by President Wilson before congress on April 2, 1917, in which the president called upon congress to declare the existence of the state of war then being waged upon the United States by Germany. In the copies of this address which were permitted to be published in Germany, many passages were suppressed, according to the committee on public information of the United States government. The passages suppressed included those in which the president told why the United States had been forced to enter into the war against Germany in protection of its rights and in order to make the world safe for democracy.

The committee on public information has issued a copy of the president's address, showing the passages which were suppressed by the Wolff Telegraph bureau, which is under government censorship and has been consistently employed by the German government for the promulgation of its official opinions. The following is an official copy of the president's address with the passages suppressed by the Wolff Telegraph bureau shown in boldfaced type:

Gentlemen of the Congress:

I have called the congress into extraordinary session because there are serious, very serious, choices of policy to be made, and made immediately, which it is neither right nor constitutionally permissible that I should assume the responsibility of making.

On the 3d of February last I officially laid before you the extraordinary announcement of the Imperial German government that on and after the 1st day of February it was its purpose to put aside all restraints of law or of humanity and use its submarines to sink every vessel that sought to approach either the ports of Great Britain and Ireland or the western coasts of Europe or any of the ports controlled by the enemies of Germany within the Mediterranean. That had seemed to be the object of the German submarine warfare earlier in the war, but since April of last year the Imperial government had somewhat restrained the commanders of its undersea craft, in conformity with its promise, then given to us, that passenger boats should not be sunk, and that due warning would be given to all other vessels which its submarines might seek to destroy, when no resistance was offered or escape attempted, and care taken that their crews were given at least a fair chance to save their lives in their open boats. The precautions taken were meager and haphazard enough, as was proved in distressing instance after instance in the progress of the cruel and unmanly business, but a certain degree of restraint was observed.

The new policy has swept every restriction aside. Vessels of every kind, whatever their flag, their character their cargo, their destination, their errand, have been ruthlessly sent to the bottom without warning and without thought of help or mercy for those on board, the vessels of friendly neutrals along with those of belligerents. Even hospital ships and ships carrying relief to the sorely bereaved and stricken people of Belgium, though the latter were provided with safe conduct through the proscribed areas by the German government itself and were distinguished by unmistakable marks of identity, have been sunk with the same reckless lack of compassion or of principle.

I was for a little while unable to believe that such things would in fact be done by any government that had hitherto subscribed to the humane practices of civilized nations. International law had its origin in the attempt to set up some law which would be respected and observed upon the seas, where no nation had right of dominion and where lay the free highways of the world. By painful stage after stage has that law been built up with meager enough results, indeed, after all was accomplished that could be accomplished, but always with a clear view, at least, of what the heart and conscience of mankind demanded.

This minimum of right the German government has swept aside under the plea of retaliation and necessity and because it had no weapons which it could use at sea except these, which it is impossible to employ as it is employing them, without throwing to the wind all scruples of humanity or of respect for the understandings that were supposed to underlie the intercourse of the world.

I am not now thinking of the loss of property involved, immense and serious as that is, but only of the wanton and wholesale destruction of the lives of non-combatants, men, women, and children, engaged in pursuits which have always, even in the darkest periods of modern history, been deemed innocent and legitimate. Property can be paid for; the lives of peaceful and innocent people cannot be. The present German submarine warfare against commerce is a warfare against mankind.

It is a war against all nations. American ships have been sunk, American lives taken, in ways which it has stirred us very deeply to learn of, but the ships and people of other neutral and friendly nations have been sunk and overwhelmed in the waters in the same way. There has been no discrimination.

The challenge is to all mankind. Each nation must decide for itself how it will meet it. The choice we make for ourselves must be made with a moderation of counsel and a temperateness of judgment befitting our character and our motives as a nation. We must put excited feelings away. Our motive will not be revenge or the victorious assertion of the physical might of the nation, but only the vindication of right, of human right, of which we are only a single champion.

When I addressed the congress on the 26th of February last I thought it would suffice to assert our neutral rights with arms, our right to use the seas against unlawful interference, our right to keep our people safe against unlawful violence. But armed neutrality, it now appears, is impracticable. Because submarines are in effect outlaws, when use as the German submarines have been used against merchant shipping, it is impossible to defend ships against their attacks, as the law of nations has assumed that merchantmen would defend themselves against privateers or cruisers, visible craft giving chase upon the open sea. It is common prudence in such circumstances, grim necessity indeed, to endeavor to destroy them before they have shown their own intention. They must be dealt with upon sight, if dealt with at all.

The German government denies the right of neutrals to use arms at all within the areas of the sea which it has proscribed even in the defense of rights which no modern publicist has ever before questioned their right to defend. The intimation is conveyed that the armed guards which we have placed on our merchant ships will be treated as beyond the pale of law and subject to be dealt with as pirates would be. Armed neutrality is ineffectual enough at best; in such circumstances and in the face of such pretensions it is worse than ineffectual; it is likely only to produce what it was meant to prevent; it is practically certain to draw us into war without either the rights or the effectiveness of the belligerents. There is one choice we cannot make, we are incapable of making: We will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our nation and our people to be ignored or violated. The wrongs against which we now array ourselves are no common wrongs; they cut to the very roots of human life.

With a profound sense of the solemn and even tragical character of the step I am taking and of the grave responsibilities which it involves, but in unhesitating obedience to what I deem my constitutional duty, I advise that the congress declare the recent course of the Imperial German government to be in fact nothing less than war against the government and people of the United States; that it formally accept the status of belligerent which has thus been thrust upon it; and that it take immediate steps not only to put the country in a more thorough state of defense, but also to exert all its power and employ all its resources to bring the government of the German empire to terms and end the war.

What this will involve is clear. It will involve the utmost practicable cooperation in counsel and action with the governments now at war with Germany, and as incident to that, the extension to those governments of the most liberal financial credits, in order that our resources may so far as possible be added to theirs.

It will involve the organization and mobilization of all the material resources of the country to supply the materials of war and serve the incidental needs of the nation in the most abundant and yet the most economical and efficient way possible.

It will involve the immediate full equipment of the navy in all respects, but particularly in supplying it with the best means of dealing with the enemy's submarines.

It will involve the immediate addition to the armed forces of the United States, already provided for by law in case of war, of at least 500,000 men, who should, in my opinion, be chosen upon the principle of universal liability to service, and also the authorization of subsequent additional increments of equal force so soon as they may be needed and can be handled in training.

It will involve also, of course, the granting of adequate credits to the government, sustained, I hope, so far as they can equitably be sustained by the present generation, by well-conceived taxation.

I say sustained so far as may be equitable by taxation, because it seems to me that it would be most unwise to base the credits, which will now be necessary, entirely on money borrowed. It is our duty, I most respectfully urge, to protect our people, so far as we may, against the very serious hardships and evils which would be likely to arise out of the inflation which would be produced by vast loans.

In carrying out the measures by which these things are to be accomplished we should keep constantly in mind the wisdom of interfering as little as possible in our own preparation and in the equipment of our own military forces with the duty—for it will be a very practical duty—of supplying the nations already at war with Germany with the materials which they can obtain only from us or by our assistance. They are in the field, and we should help them in every way to be effective there.

I shall take the liberty of suggesting, through the several executive departments of the government, for the consideration of your committees, measures for the accomplishment of the several objects I have mentioned. I hope that it will be your pleasure to deal with them as having been framed after very careful thought by the branch of the government upon whom the responsibility of conducting the war and safeguarding the nation will most directly fall.

While we do these things, these deeply momentous things, let us be very clear, and make very clear to all the world, what our motives and our objects are. My own thought has not been driven from its habitual and normal course by the unhappy events of the last two months, and I do not believe that the thought of the nation has been altered or clouded by them. I have exactly the same things in mind now that I had in mind when I addressed the senate on the 22d of January last; the same that I had in mind when I addressed congress on the 3d of February and on the 26th of February. Our object now, as then, is to vindicate the principles of peace and justice in the life of the world as against selfish and autocratic power, and to set up among the really free and self-governed peoples of the world such a concert of purpose and of action as will henceforth insure the observance of those principles.

Neutrality is no longer feasible or desirable where the peace of the world is involved and the freedom of its peoples, and the menace to that peace and freedom lies in the existence of autocratic governments, backed by organized force which is controlled wholly by their will, not by the will of their people. We have seen the last of neutrality in such circumstances. We are at the beginning of an age in which it will be insisted that the same standards of conduct and of responsibility for wrong done shall be observed among nations and their governments that are observed among the individual citizens of civilized states.

We have no quarrel with the German people. We have no feeling toward them but one of sympathy and friendship. It was not upon their impulse that their government acted in entering the war. It was not with their previous knowledge or approval. It was a war determined upon as wars used to be determined upon in the old unhappy days, when peoples were nowhere consulted by their rulers and wars were provoked and waged in the interest of dynasties or of little groups of ambitious men who were accustomed to use their fellow men as pawns and tools.

Self-governed nations do not fill their neighbor states with spies or set the course of intrigue to bring about some critical posture of affairs which will give them an opportunity to strike and make conquest. Such designs can be successfully worked out only under cover and where no one has the right to ask questions. Cunningly contrived plans of deception or aggression, carried, it may be from generation to generation, can be worked out and kept from the light only within the privacy of courts or behind the carefully guarded confidences of a narrow and privileged class. They are happily impossible where public opinion commands and insists upon full information concerning all the nation's affairs.

A steadfast concert for peace can never be maintained except by a partnership of democratic nations. No autocratic government could be trusted to keep faith within it or observe its covenants. It must be a league of honor, a partnership of opinion. Intrigue would eat its vitals away; the plottings of inner circles who could plan what they would, and render account to no one, would be a corruption seated at its very heart. Only free people can hold their purpose and their honor steady to a common end, and prefer the interest of mankind to any narrow interest of their own.

Does not every American feel that assurance has been added to our hope for the future peace of the world by the wonderful and heartening things that have been happening within the last few weeks in Russia? Russia was known by those who knew her best to have been always in fact democratic at heart in all vital habits of her thought, in all the intimate relationships of her people that spoke their natural instinct, their habitual attitude toward life. The autocracy that crowned the summit of her political structure, long as it had stood and terrible as was the reality of its power, was not in fact Russian in origin, character, or purpose, and now it has been shaken off and the great generous Russian people have been added, in all their native majesty and might, to the forces that are fighting for freedom in the world, for justice, and for peace. Here is a fit partner for a league of honor.

One of the things that have served to convince us that the Prussian autocracy was not and could never be our friend is that from the very outset of the present war it has filled our unsuspecting communities, and even our offices of government, with spies and set criminal intrigues everywhere afoot against our national unity of counsel, our peace within and without, our industries, and our commerce. Indeed it is now evident that its spies were here even before the war began and it is unhappily not a matter of conjecture, but a fact proven in our courts of justice, that the intrigues which have more than once come perilously near to disturbing the peace and dislocating the industries of the country, have been carried on at the instigation, with the support, and even under the personal directions of official agents of the Imperial government accredited to the government of the United States.

Even in checking these things and trying to extirpate them we have sought to put the most generous interpretation possible upon them, because we knew that their source lay not in any hostile feeling or purpose of the German people toward us (who were, no doubt, as ignorant of them as we ourselves were), but only in the selfish designs of a government that did what it pleased and told its people nothing. But they have played their part in serving to convince us at last that that government entertains no real friendship for us and means to act against our peace and security at its convenience. That it means to stir up enemies against us at our very doors, the intercepted note to the German minister at Mexico City is eloquent evidence.

We are accepting this challenge of hostile purpose because we know that in such a government, following such methods, we can never have a friend, and that in the presence of its organized power, always lying in wait to accomplish we know not what purpose, there can be no assured security for the democratic governments of the world. We are now about to accept the gage of battle with the natural foe to liberty, and shall, if necessary, spend the whole force of the nation to check and nullify its pretensions and its power. We are glad now that we see the facts with no veil of false pretense about them, to fight thus for the ultimate peace of the world and for the liberation of its peoples, the German peoples included; for the rights of nations, great and small, and the privilege of men everywhere to choose their way of life and of obedience.

The world must be made safe for democracy. Its peace must be planted upon the tested foundations of political liberty. We have no selfish ends to serve. We desire no conquests, no dominion. We seek no indemnities for ourselves, no material compensation for the sacrifices we shall freely make. We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind. We shall be satisfied when those rights have been made as secure as the faith and the freedom of nations can make them.

Just because we fight without rancor and without selfish object, seeking nothing for ourselves but what we shall wish to share with all free people, we shall, I feel confident, conduct our operations as belligerents without passion and ourselves observe with proud punctilio the principles of right and of fair play we profess to be fighting for.

I have said nothing of the governments allied with the Imperial government of Germany because they have not made war upon us or challenged us to defend our right and our honor. The Austro-Hungarian government has, indeed, avowed its unqualified indorsement and acceptance of the reckless and lawless submarine warfare, adopted now without disguise by the Imperial German government, and it has therefore not been possible for this government to receive Count Tarnowski, the ambassador recently accredited to this government by the Imperial and Royal government of Austria-Hungary; but that government has not actually engaged in warfare against citizens of the United States on the seas, and I take the liberty, for the present at least, of postponing a discussion of our relations with the authorities at Vienna. We enter this war only where we are clearly forced into it because there are no other means of defending our rights.

It will be all the easier for us to conduct ourselves as belligerents in a high spirit of right and fairness because we act without animus, not with enmity toward a people or with the desire to bring any injury or disadvantage upon them, but only in armed opposition to an irresponsible government which has thrown aside all considerations of humanity and of right and is running amuck.

We are, let me say again, the sincere friends of the German people, and shall desire nothing so much as the early re-establishment of intimate relations of mutual advantage between us, however hard it may be for them for the time being to believe that this is spoken from our hearts. We have borne with their present government through all these bitter months because of that friendship, exercising a patience and forbearance which would otherwise have been impossible.

We shall happily still have an opportunity to prove that friendship in our daily attitude and actions toward the millions of men and women of German birth and native sympathy who live among us and share our life, and we shall be proud to prove it toward all who are in fact loyal to their neighbors and to the government in the hour of test. They are most of them as true and loyal Americans as if they had never known any other fealty or allegiance. They will be prompt to stand with us in rebuking and restraining the few who may be of a different mind and purpose. If there should be disloyalty, it will be dealt with with a firm hand of stern repression; but if it lifts its head at all, it will lift it only here and there and without countenance except from a lawless and malignant few.

It is a distressing and oppressive duty, gentlemen of the congress, which I have performed in thus addressing you. There are, it may be, many months of fiery trial and sacrifice ahead of us. It is a fearful thing to lead this great, peaceful people into war, into the most terrible and disastrous of all wars, civilization itself seeming to be in the balance.

But the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments, for the rights and liberties of small nations, for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free.

To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured.

God helping her, she can do no other.

University Functions.

What is the matter with our universities is that all the students are schoolboys, whereas it is of the very essence of university education that they should be men, writes George Bernard Shaw. The function of a university is not to teach things that can now be taught as well or better by university extension lecturers or by private tutors or modern correspondence classes with gramophones. We go to them to be socialized; to acquire the hall mark of communal training; to become citizens of the world instead of inmates of the enlarged rabbit hutches we call homes; to learn manners and become unchallengeable ladies and gentlemen. The social pressure which effects these changes should be that of persons who have faced the full responsibilities of adults as working members of the general community, not that of barbarous rabble of half emancipated schoolboys and unemancipatable pedants.

Growing a Character.

Character is what you are. Reputation is what folks think you are. Sometimes they are so well balanced that you can't tell one from the other, says Grit. But more often the one is a libel on the other. Folks exalt virtues that do not exist and condemn follies that are purely subjective and personal. Much depends on who reports you. Friends are always charitable and interpret our lives to best advantage. Enemies can see no good in us and report as they see. So reputation may flatter or condemn. Not so with character. This is something beyond external observation. It is the life itself as lived amidst its motives and obstacles. Few people can know its real value, for even you do not always know just what you are capable of being until the emergency demands display your worth. What you are in the face of severe testing is character.

Indian Summer.

The term "Indian summer" is applied to a period of mild, open weather that comes in the fall, embracing the most of October and sometimes extending into November, and characterized by a sort of dry mist or haziness that differentiates it from other seasons of the year. What causes the distinctive features of the season, especially the hazy atmosphere, is unknown, and the origin of the term equally so. Different explanations have been given of both, but they seem to be largely fanciful.

EVERYONE PAYING TO CRUSH ENEMY

New War Tax Squeezes Purse of Wage Earner, but All Must Help.

KAISER TO BLAME FOR COST

Mad Prussia Must Be Broken Before Conflict Can End—Good Patriots Steel Selves for Sacrifice and Then Victory.

Postage.—Three cents an ounce or fraction thereof on letters for other than local delivery; two cents on all postal cards.

Admissions—Ten per cent tax on tickets to theaters, cabarets, and other amusement places.

Dues—Ten per cent tax on dues of clubs exceeding $12 a year.

Tobacco—Graduated taxes on cigars, tobacco, cigarettes, cigarette papers and snuff.

Express—Five per cent tax on amounts paid for express transportation.

Passengers—Eight per cent of the cost of railroad tickets, except local.

Berths—Ten per cent of the cost of berths, staterooms, and parlor car seats.

Oil—Five per cent tax on amounts paid for transportation of oil by pipe lines.

Messages—Five cents tax on each telegraph, telephone, or radio message costing 15 cents or more.

Insurance—Eight cents tax on each $100 or fractional part thereof of each life insurance policy; one per cent of the premium on fire, marine, inland, and casualty insurance policies.

Washington.—Uncle Sam is rather pleasantly surprised at the way the nation is standing the war tax gaff. The grouching, such as there is, has been growled in a minor key, and most of it comes from the trouble-makers, the whining pacifists, those of a sickly cast of loyalty.

Nobody really enjoys paying excess taxes, such as three cents postage for letters, extra charge for freight, express and passenger transportation, telephone and telegraph messages and amusements. But all true Americans who realize that the kaiser is to blame for the trouble, stand ready and willing to pay their share of the cost of exterminating the world's greatest menace.

By the way, do you know that if you are single and earn more than $1,000 yearly, you must pay two per cent tax on what you make over $1,000. And if you are married, you must pay two per cent on what you make over $2,000. The tax for all of 1917 must be paid by June 1, 1918.

All of the new taxes fall upon the average man. They have nothing to do with the "conscription of wealth." They are a part of the program of taxation to make each man, woman and child in the United States feel a direct personal part in the war. They apply to freight, passenger and express transportation, pipe lines, Pullman seats and berths, telegraph and telephone messages, insurance policies, admissions to theaters and "movies" and to club dues. The effect of most of them is felt, therefore, in a slight rise in the high cost of living.

The taxes are expected to net the federal government the following revenues:

Freight transportation	$77,500,000
Express transportation	10,000,000
Passenger transportation	60,000,000
Pipe lines	4,500,000
Seats and berths	4,000,000
Telegraph and telephone messages	7,000,000
Insurance policies	5,000,000
Club dues	1,500,000
Admissions	50,000,000

The war tax on facilities furnished by public utilities is now levied as follows:

Three per cent of the amount paid for transportation by rail or water or by any form of mechanical motor power in competition with carriers by rail or water, on freight consigned from one point in the United States to another.

One cent for each twenty cents or fraction charged by express companies for transportation from one point in the United States to another.

Eight per cent of the amount paid for the transportation of persons by rail or water or by any form of mechanical motor power on a regular established line in competition with common carriers, from one point in the United States to any point in the United States, Canada or Mexico where the ticket is issued in the United States. No tax is imposed on commutation or season tickets for trips less than 30 miles, or in cases where the fare does not exceed 35 cents.

Ten per cent of the amount paid for seats, berths or staterooms.

If a mileage book used for transportation or accommodation was purchased prior to November 1, 1917, or if cash fare is paid, the conductor or agent collecting the fare is required to collect the tax.

Five per cent on the amount paid for the transportation of oil by pipe line.

Five cents for each telegraph, telephone or radio dispatch originating in the United States where the charge is 15 cents or more.

The foregoing taxes are paid by the persons paying for the services or facilities rendered. A carrier making no charge for transporting a commodity because of its ownership thereof, or for any other reason, is required to pay a tax equivalent to the amount which would be imposed if it received payment, except in the case of commodities which are necessary for its use in the conduct of its business or the business of another line constituting a part of the same railroad system. Service rendered to the federal and state governments is exempt from taxation. Persons collecting these taxes are required to make monthly returns and monthly payments to the federal government.

The new levies upon insurance take effect in the following manner:

On life insurance, eight cents on each $100 or fraction of the amount of the policy, except industrial insurance policies not in excess of $500 issued on the weekly payment plan, in which case the tax is 40 per cent of the first weekly premium. Policies of re-insurance are exempt.

On marine, inland and fire insurance, one cent on each dollar or fraction of the premium charged under each policy including renewals, but not including policies of re-insurance.

Casualty insurance, one cent on each dollar or fraction of the premium charged under each policy (except indemnity and surety bonds, which are taxable under another title of the bill) including renewals, but not including re-insurance policies.

Policies issued by any corporation exempt from the income tax are exempt from this tax.

The person, partnership or association issuing such policies of insurance is required to make monthly returns and monthly payments to the government.

For every ten cents or fraction thereof you spend on the movies you must turn over to the government one cent. Of course, the movie proprietors may save you the inconvenience of handling pennies by raising his admission price a nickel, as many other persons selling goods affected by the war tax have already done.

Here is the way admission tax and the club dues levies will fall upon the public:

One cent on each ten cents or fraction of the amount paid for admission to any place including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission, except in the case of children under twelve, where the tax in every case is one cent. Persons admitted free pay the tax on the basis of the charge made to other persons of the same class, except employees, municipal officers on official business and children under twelve. Where the charge for admission to a cabaret or similar entertainment is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service or merchandise, the amount paid is to be computed under regulations to be prescribed by the treasury department.

In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats, or a lease thereon, the tax is equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for the performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder.

These taxes are not to be imposed in the case of a place where the maximum charge for admission is five cents or for shows, rides or other amusements in outdoor general amusement parks where the admission is ten cents or in the case of shows, rides or other amusements (the maximum charge for admission to which is ten cents) within outdoor general amusement parks, or in the case of admissions to such parks. Where the proceeds inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational or charitable societies or organizations, and in the case of admissions to agricultural fairs, no tax shall be levied, provided none of the proceeds are distributed to stockholders or members of the association.

A tax of 10 per cent is imposed on the amount paid as dues or membership fees, including initiation fees, to any social, athletic, or sporting club where such dues or fees are in excess of $12 per year, such tax to be paid by the person paying the dues or fees. Dues or fees paid to fraternal or beneficiary societies, orders or associations operated on the lodge system are exempt.

Those collecting admission dues or fees are required to collect the tax and make monthly returns and payments to the government.

Greatest Thing in the World.

Love has been called the greatest thing in the world, but the greatest thing in the world is not a thing at all; the greatest thing is a person. Personality is the greatest thing in the world. The greatest thing in personality is not strength of body nor strength of mind. It is strength of heart. "Clever people are as common as blackberries, the rare things to find a good one." It is not Daniel Webster's brain, but Lincoln's heart, that wins a nation's love.—Exchange.

Gained Fame While Dying.

Antoine Watteau, one of France's foremost artists, painted his celebrated decorative panels while dying of the white man's scourge. He sprang from humble and poverty-stricken surroundings, and was forced to work on the brink of starvation for the greater part of his thirty-seven years. Just as his fame rose to national proportions his tubercular condition became worse and he worked desperately during his last few years to complete as much work as possible before he died.

Foreign

The keeping of markets in Argentina open to Germany, the separation of the province of Rio Grande de Sul from Brazil and the cultivation of friendly relations with Chile, were the amazing aims of Germany in South America. Count Luxburg, Germany's disgraced minister to Buenos Aires, believed as late as August 4 that he could attain these aims. To do so he wanted a submarine squadron at his disposal. The notes were made public at Washington.

WAR DIET HOLDS SWAY IN STATE

Movement Started for Meatless Tuesday and Wheatless Wednesday.

IDEA SUPPORTED BY HOTELS

People of the State Urged by H. E. Barnard, State Food Administrator, to Do Their Patriotic Duty

Indianapolis.—Indiana has gone on a war diet. Rules have gone into effect. Cornmeal will fly thick and fast. Wheat will wonder what has happened. From now on, Tuesday will be meatless Tuesday in homes, hotels and retaurants. Wednesday of each week will be wheatless Wednesday. And for families who want to do more than their share, Friday will be another meatless day.

Thousands of Indiana homes have started on one wheatless meal a day, as requested by the federal food administration. "Food Conservation" week marked the start of a serious food conservation effort on the part of the people of the state.

The food administration is seeking four definite things: It wants people to: (1) use something else in place of meat, (2) use something else in place of beef, pork and mutton, (3) use less sugar, (4) use less animal fats.

The government is really advising food substitution now, rather than food-saving. It is more important that Americans use something else in place of the foods that are needed than that they worry too much about personal economy. For instance, food-administration officials say that it is patriotic to eat chicken, these days, in place of beef, pork or mutton—even if it comes higher.

Hotel and restaurant men over the state have already agreed almost unanimously to have a "Meatless Tuesday" and a "Wheatless Wednesday," and it is thought that their action will help make housewives realize the gravity of the food situation, and lead thousands of Indiana homes to institute "Meatless Tuesday" and "Wheatless Wednesday." Many homes already are "practicing" wheatless dinners.

Get the Spirit of the Movement.

"It is hoped that the people will get the spirit of this movement," said H. E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana. "It will do no good for people to have meatless Tuesdays if they already are in the habit of having them. What is really meant is that each family shall cut down its meat consumption at least one-seventh. And the same thing applies to wheatless Wednesdays and wheatless wheatless Wednesdays and wheatless dinners."

Mr. Barnard said that the food administration is asking something very easy of the people. It is asking them not to deprive themselves of anything necessary, but to get the conservation idea into their heads, and to make some very easy substitutions in their diet.

Seeks to Insure Food Regulation.

The state council of defense has moved to have each county council name a man to work with H. E. Barnard, state food administrator, in the enforcement of the president's proclamation putting many food commodities under license, which was effective November 1. These men will work under the direction of Doctor Barnard as agent for Herbert Hoover, federal food administrator, and they will be charged with the duty of seeing that dealers do not make excess profits and that commodities keep moving and with many other duties of a similar war service nature. Also the deputy food inspectors of the state will have a part in the work.

The council approved a resolution calling on the state board of accounts to permit county clerks to invest certain trust funds in their keeping in Liberty bonds. The money lies now in banks or trust companies and belongs to such accounts as uncalled-for heirs' money and the like.

Some of the county clerks have as much as $30,000 of such funds, according to Bert Hendren of the board of accounts.

Governor at His Office.

Gov. James P. Goodrich returned to his office for the first time since he was stricken with typhoid fever over three months ago. The governor remained at his office an hour, but escaped from a long list of visitors through a side door. He was weak and had to be helped in an automobile. He expects to be at his office two or three times a week until he has fully recovered his strength.

To Divide War Burdens.

The public service commission has decided upon a policy of dividing war burdens between public utilities and the consumers, rather than allowing all of the burden to be transferred to the consumer, it was announced. The commission denied a temporary surcharge on electric bills to the Noblesville company, finding the company is in a healthy condition. The city of South Bend was authorized to put its municipal water system on a metered basis and to issue $40,000 to pay back borrowed money.

Coal on War Rations Likely.

Coal on a war ration basis seems an ultimate possibility in Indiana, judging from the appeals and reports that are flooding the office of Evans Woollen, state fuel administrator. Although no official announcement of this possibility is obtainable from the administrator's office, the reports received there tend to indicate the possibility of such a plan.

Obviously, no such plan can be followed out until after the completion of the state-wide machinery—the organization of the county fuel administrators—for community welfare must be looked after by these officers and their assistants.

Situation in Indiana Grave.

Daily reports, however, indicate the coal situation in Indiana is grave. Less than one-fourth of the people of the state, who at this time of year are usually supplied with their winter's fuel, are so fortunately situated this year. Not only the consumers, but the dealers in many places are short. Unlimited relief to all cannot be given immediately.

With this situation existing, the fuel administrators must meet the problem of supplying all persons from the limited supply. This would likely be accomplished on the war ration basis: The pooling of a county's coal, with the local administrator being the sole authority for delivery of any to any one consumer.

The state administrator's office urged well-to-do citizens to buy the high-priced coal now in stock in some cities. With the use of this high-priced coal, Indiana coal would be released to those who cannot so well afford to buy the more expensive grades.

Fuel Heads in All Counties.

Indiana's state-wide machinery for handling the fuel situation—the appointment of county fuel administrators as aids to Evans Woollen, state director—is moving forward rapidly, according to reports received at Mr. Woollen's headquarters in the Federal building, Indianapolis.

This work of organization is in the charge of J. E. Northway of Columbus, who asked county councils of defense and commercial clubs or chambers of commerce to agree in the recommendation of men as the county administrators. Fifteen county fuel administrators had been nominated as follows:

Howard county, William H. Turner, Kokomo; Benton county, Charles N. Snyder, Fowler; Vigo county, Samuel H. McClary, Terre Haute; Randolph county, George H. Clark, Winchester; Jennings county, Harry H. Dowd, North Vernon; Adams county, Clarence E. Bell, Decatur; Wayne county, F. S. Bates, Richmond; Boone county, C. F. S. Neal, Lebanon; Fayette county, E. P. Hawkins, Connersville; Lawrence county, Vincent H. Lodde, Bedford; Lagrange county, Leroy R. Wade, Lagrange; Carroll county, William H. Bradshaw, Delphi; Shelby county, Elmer F. Bassett, Shelbyville; Wells county, James A. Crosbie, Bluffton, and Floyd county, Anderson G. Moore, New Albany.

While the county unit organization will greatly aid the coal administrator in expediting work, his office force is not idle in seeking to relieve the coal shortage in many Indiana cities. Twenty-eight cars of coal for twenty-four cities were ordered forwarded by the administrator.

To Have Own Investigators.

The state administrator's office soon will have its own investigators, it was indicated by a message from the federal trade commission at Washington, advising that W. J. Hoover, an experienced investigator in the coal industry, would be sent to Indiana to cooperate with the state administrator in handling the Indiana situation.

A circular of recent rulings of the federal administrator relating to coal prices, and governing the sale, shipment and distribution of coal, was mailed to all Indiana dealers.

Mr. Northway, in his letter to the county councils of defense and the commercial organizations, called attention to an excerpt from a letter issued by the national fuel administrator, in which the duties of the local fuel committees, which are to aid the county administrator, are set forth as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the local committees (1) to gather information regarding the supply of fuel in their several communities; (2) to ascertain the fuel needs of the communities, with special regard to the points of immediate need; (3) to investigate carefully and report at once on prices at which each size and quality of coal is sold in the community, and continue to so report weekly; (4) to ascertain at once and report to the state administrator the gross margin which is being charged by each dealer in each community for every size and quality of coal and whether such margin is excessive; and (5) to investigate the status of contracts between jobbers or operators and the industrial plants of the community, especially where such contracts call for delivery at prices below the president's price, with a view to insuring prompt deliveries under these contracts."

Asks Ruling Be Set Aside.

To stop a general move of Indiana railroads, especially those in receiverships, to have the two-cent fare law and the power of the public service commission to fix rates nullified, Attorney General Stansbury has filed a petition in the federal court asking Judge Anderson to set aside his order allowing William Kappes, receiver for the Evansville & Indiana railroad, to make indeterminate increases in rates. The public service commission has refused to allow Kappes to charge 5½ cents a mile per passenger.

SHIPBUILDERS GET NEW WAGE SCALE

GOVERNMENT LABOR ADJUSTING BOARD ANNOUNCES INCREASE.

LABORING MEN NOT SATISFIED

President of Shipbuilders' Union Says An Appeal to President Wilson Will Be Made—In Many Instances Men Will Not Receive an Increase.

San Francisco, Cal., Nov. 5.—A uniform minimum wage scale for the Pacific coast shipbuilding yards was announced yesterday by the United States shipbuilding labor adjustment board. The decision effects an increase of from 10 to 30 per cent over the old scale here, although its uniformity makes it lower in some localities than the temporary scale now in force.

The scales are a guide for all shipyards in the country. This decision, the first to be handed down by the boards, declares that employes' "discrimination, interfering with the defense of the nation in time of war against so-called 'unfair' materials would be intolerable."

"There won't be many ships built under this scale," declared M. J. MaGuire, a union conferee representing the metal trades craftsmen of the Bay district. "I believe the entire shipbuilding crafts of the Pacific coast will appeal to Wilson against the decision."

The scales are based on the increase in the cost of living since the beginning of the war, it was stated. Seventy-five thousand men must be employed in the Pacific coast ship yards to carry out the government's program, the board decided. That means 30,000 skilled mechanics more than are employed now.

Summarizing the decision, Secretary Henry Seager, of the board, said: "The board did not feel justified in forcing on the tax payers of the country, who henceforth must pay for the ships built, the higher wage that the consideration of merely local aspects of the situation might have warranted. It urges employers and employes to accept the decision in the spirit of loyal co-operation and do their utmost to help the government win the war by turning out the ships so urgently required."

Representatives of the craftsmen met in secret conference discussing the decision. The decision of the board was reported to be unfavorable to them.

MaGuire, adding to his declaration that an appeal to the president would be made, said: "I do not believe the men will leave their jobs. I believe organized labor will be found patriotic enough to hold its ranks to the work until the president has ample time to decide its appeal. The scale means an increase for the majority of workers over their old scale, but in Seattle there are 6,000 men who will receive less than this scale than they are getting now. To others the increase is very slight. The board found living costs had increased 36 per cent. The men want enough to meet this."

The scale rates are retroactive, going back in the Puget sound district to August. They must be put into effect on or before Monday, November 12.

SIX KILLED WHEN INTERURBAN HITS AUTO.

Tipton.—Mrs. Claude Perry fell down stairs and broke her wrist.

Crown Point.—The usual number of indictments have been returned against the Cedar Lake resorts.

Wabash. — Rev. Charles Little preached his forty-fifth anniversary sermon as pastor of the Presbyterian church, the only pastorate he has ever held.

Rochester.—The new Methodist church here, which cost $41,000, was dedicated by Rev. George R. Grose, president of DePauw university. Twenty thousand dollars was raised at the dedication, which leaves the church free of debt.

Greenfield.—Dr. E. B. Howard, a dentist, has bought a one-seventh interest of the Gooding block here for $1,546 from the estate of the late Lemuel Gooding. It was an old landmark and was used in the early days as a tavern. Stage coaches en route over the National road from Richmond to Indianapolis made the tavern their over-night stopping place.

Hammond.—Richard Talbott, sixty-six years old, was run down and killed by an automobile bearing an Illinois license. The driver did not stop and officers were unable to learn his name.

Shelbyville.—Dr. George L. Inlow, county coroner, has filed his verdict in the case of E. H. Burks of Dewey avenue, Indianapolis, who was killed here recently by a Big Four passenger train. The coroner holds the crew of the train blameless for the accident.

Rushville.—Mrs. James Hinchman, age eighty, fell on the back steps of her home. Her hip was broken. She may not recover.

Rushville.—Russell Murphy, age twenty, fell from the porch of Little Fatrock church while scuffling with a friend and his collarbone was broken. He was attending a church reception.

Bicknell.—An automobile in which Melvin Dalton and George Beasley, both of Linton, were riding, struck a pile of sand and upset. Dalton was thrown out, and his collarbone was broken. Beasley escaped injury.

Princeton.—Eleven of the Southern Indiana Telephone company's operators struck because the company refused to consider a demand for recognition of their union, and an increase in pay. Operators from Evansville took their places. An effort is being made to unionize all woman workers in the city.

Washington.—A strange sickness, believed to be due to some kind of poisoning, not only killed several head of live stock on the farm of Clifford Farris, trustee of Elmore township, but also caused Mr. and Mrs. Farris to become seriously ill. Mr. Farris has recovered, but Mrs. Farris is not yet out of danger.

Mooresville.—Erastus Dill, eighty-seven years old, hanged himself in a barn. His wife died several years ago, and he has lived since with his daughter, Mrs. C. E. Hubbard, and his son, Howard Dill, having divided his farm between them. He had lived on the same farm thirty-six years. He had been despondent since his wife's death.

Lafayette.—Peter Mataxas, a Greek, died in a local hospital of injuries received when he was shot four times, beaten over the head with a monkey wrench and plunged over a cliff into a ravine 30 feet below. It was said he attacked two girls who were on a taxi ride with him. The taxi driver, Claude Horn, according to his statement to the police, inflicted the wounds responsible for the death of Mataxas. Mataxas threatened to kill Horn and the two girls, Horn says, and advanced on them with a knife.

Kokomo.—Mr. and Mrs. John B. Butcher celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

Princeton.—The Gibson county draft board has made its report on the last 100 men called up for examination, those between order Nos. 600 and 700. Of the 100, 20 were passed for service, 16 of these claiming no exemption and four claims being overruled; 26 were repected on physical grounds; 47 exemption claims were allowed; two failed to report for examination; two were already in service and three examinations had been transferred. Exemptions were granted all married men.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

February 19.

This date we would have every farmer in Spencer, Newville and Concord townships keep in mind, because it is then that the Tri-Township Institute will be held, and if the proper interest is shown, February 20 will also be taken up with the work. Our institute has for years been the best in the county and we want to keep it so.

This year above all others, when the farmer is called upon for an increased production, should be one of advancement along agricultural lines. L. O. Casey, of Marion, a practical farmer, will be here to talk to us and help us in every possible way. The lady helper is Mrs. Lewie Taylor, of Newburgh, Warrick County. She is the wife of an active farmer and will tell the ladies how best to feed the family and still observe the food conservation demands. Begin to plan for Feb. 19th.

The Ladies Literary Club was entertained Wednesday night by the first section, the place of meeting to be searched for. It was at first thought that the G. M. Barney residence was the place of meeting but all they found there was the "Old Witch" who lived in the cellar; then they decided that the S. W. Tustison home was the place, but there was found no one except a "fortune teller". They finally went to the H. L. Dunkle home and judged by the decorations which were in keeping with the night—Hallowe'en—that they had at last found the right place. The lunch served was also in keeping with the occasion-Apple butter sandwiches, Waldorf salad, pumpkin pie and sweet cider. The guests present were Mesdames Lora Leighty, Jennie Sechler, Grace Dilley, Iva Yeiser and Retta Hathaway, and the Misses Ella Brown and DeVeta Bayman.

Only A Volunteer.

Why didn't I wait to be drafted,
And be led to a train by a band
And put in my claim for exemption.
O, why didn't I wait to be cheered?
For the drafted men get all the credit
While I merely volunteered.

And nobody gave me a banquet,
Nobody said a kind word
The puff of the engine, the grind of the wheel,
Was all the good-by that I heard.
There off to the training camp hustled
To be trained for the next half a year
And in the shuffle, forgotten,
I was only a volunteer.

And perhaps some day in the future
When my little boy sits on my knee.
And asks what I did in this great war
And his eyes look at me,
I will have to look back in those eyes
That at me so trustingly peer,
And tell him I wasn't drafted;
I was only a volunteer.

The Revival Meetings at the Christian church in St. Joe, began on Monday night as announced in last week's NEWS. The attendance and interest started out well. The sermons by Evangelist A. L. Martin are impressive well-thought-out sermons. They are being highly commended. There is good food thought in them for all. Only those who attend, know how much they loose, who have not yet begun attendance. The meetings will continue seven nights per week until further notice. The weather is beautiful for assemblages, and it is hoped all will improve it in helping the Lord onward with his kingdom work. L. W. Spayd.

Says He Is Not Guilty

An affidavit filed by J. F. Baltz, of Spencerville, as trustee of the Lutheran Church, calling for the arrest of Raymond Bowser, on the charge of malicious destruction of property, was filed last week, and upon being given a preliminary hearing he entered a plea of not guilty and gave his bond of $200 for his appearance at a later date.

Rev. A. K. Mumma and some of his parishoners of Spencerville made the complaint and stated that Mr. Bowser, in moving his barn from down town, to his lot near his residence, on October 8, went through the streets, and in so doing he cut down certain shade trees in front of the church property without any authority from any officials, and over the protests of the church people.

The matter will be given a final hearing shortly before Judge Link.

Auto Hits Small Child

Little Priscilla Long, the four year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Long of Center St, of Auburn, was knocked down and run over by an automobile driven by Tib Muhn, owner of the car, shortly after 11:30 Saturday morning on East Ninth street.

The little miss suffered several bruises, but an examination failed to show that any bones were broken. The front and rear wheels passed over her body, diagonally, from the right shoulder.

Mr. Muhn sounded his horn for the child, who was returning home from the East Side grocery. She started to run across the street and when she saw the car approaching she hesitated and turned back and then started back across the street.

The driver of the car tried to avoid hitting the child and drove the machine up on the curbing. It seemed like one of those apparently unavoidable accidents.

Late Saturday afternoon the child was resting easy and it is thought that the little girl has no more serious injuries than several bruises.

A. D. Perry and wife, and Mrs. Hazel Herrick and children were at Ft. Wayne, last week one afternoon.

Revenue Stamps Again

The new war tax law provides for a tax on deeds of fifty cents for each $500 or fraction thereof. A penalty of $1,000 fine is provided for failure to state the exact consideration in the transfer of property.

The stamps are to be cancelled with the initials of the grantor of the property. The stamps are to be sold by postoffices.

A tax of five cents per $100 for notes is also provided by the new law.

The above becomes effective December 1, and will make an aggregate amount of about $200 out of the recorder's office, per month.

May Secure Feeders.

"Owing to the severe drouth in West Texas and a part of New Mexico a large number of our best range cattle are being broken up and herds being forced on the market where many of them are going for canners. In an effort to save as many as possible of the good breeding females the U. S. Department of Agriculture together with the Extension Departments of the Agricultural Colleges of the various southern states put on a campaign to urge the farmers of that section to buy as many of these cows as possible. This campaign was very successful in that thousands of good cattle were moved into those states where they otherwise would have gone to the packers. The authorities say that they believe that the man who cares for a good breeding female during this time will be doing one of the greatest patriotic services he can, for our beef supply must be maintained at all costs. Information comes to this office that 22,000 Lincoln Rambouillet and Shropshire Rambouillet ewes, one year old, weighing 95 to 110 pounds, can be had for $17 each, delivered in car lots, about 210 in a car. Should any farmers in this county care to take the matter up with Co. Agent Arehart, he will assist in giving the information.

Some Make Decisions.

Decision Day was observed Sunday at the Christian Bible School, which resulted in three uniting with the church by statement and letter. There were 103 present during the lesson period, with a splendid offering of $5.12. Evangelist A. L. Martin preached the morning sermon immediately after communion. Rev. J. C. Coons, pastor of the M. P. Church, dismissed his morning service and he and his people attended in a body. The evening services were doubly interesting from the fact that two excellent sermons were given to a crowded house. Rev. A. K. Mumma dismissed his services at the Lutheran Church in the evening and they like the M. P. congregation in the morning attended in a body. Rev. Martin spoke first on the subject "Hypocrites, a new Kind," which was followed by Rev. Bourn, of the Presbyterian church, at Auburn, who made a splendid plea for the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. Rev. Bourn was accompanied by Willis Rhoades, of the same place. Rev. Martin is giving some excellent sermons each evening and so far very good audiences have been present.

Games Scheduled.

Two basket ball games are scheduled this week, at the Spencerville hall, Friday eve, Nov. 16, Spencer High School vs. Leo High School; and Saturday eve, Nov. 17 Spencer vs Harlan-Antwerp.

Strife of War.

The following lines are from the pen of Mrs. Estelle Richwine Baker, of Wabash, Indiana, wife of Meade Baker, of St. Joe.

A flash of red gleams overhead,
A rift of white between,
A color true from heaven's own blue,
With stars of silvery sheen.

Old Glory's folds, new grandeur holds,
A Nation's pulse beats high,
Thro' War's dark blight, a Nation's right,
Will dare to do or die.

War's smoky cloud, a dusky shroud,
Like in a troubled dream:
'Mid cannon glare and trumpet blare,
The lights of battle gleam.

A din of hell, the screaming shell—
Yet hearts with war aflame,
Thro' seethinfi fire of battle, dire,
Uphold a Country's name.

Each soldier lad, in khaki clad,
Is hero-crowned today,
For offering life in sacrifice,
Tho' ocean leagues away.

Prayer's incense burn, for safe return,
For carnal War to cease,
To bring once more, to homeland shore
Eternal bonds of peace.

Taking the Census.

Miss Ida Widney began last Friday morning to take a religious census of Auburn, such work being authorized by the Ministerial Association of Auburn.

She will visit each home in the city for the purpose of obtaining answers to the following questions: Name of family? Father's name? Mother's name? Names of children at home? Is family member of any church in the city? If out of the city, where is the church membership? Where do the children attend Sunday school? Church preference of family?

America to Feed World

Among the obligations now laid on farmers none is more inexorable than that to increase the supply of fats and meats. Grain supply abroad is merely a matter of shipping. If the ocean were freed of menace we could not supply the required quantity of fats and meats. It means breeding and feeding. The opening of the seas would flood markets with grain. Only the persistence and skill of farm breeders of meat stocks will feed the starving world with the essentials of subsistence. It can not come in a day, in a year, but wide-spread, determined, united effort must be immediately set in motion. The food administration has designated the International Live Stock Exposition a "food training camp." It is well named. The farmer can there study breeding and feeding. Never was it so wasteful to feed high-priced grain to ill-bred stock. Lessons of breed improvement, of grading up common stock, and of economical feeding can be learned at the "International" as in no other place. The American farmer has heard the call of the nation, of the world. He will heed. The instinct for live stock embraces sympathy for humanity. The significance of the food administration's recognition of the International as an educational agency should sink deep into the mind of the farmer. It should bring him to Chicago the first week in December to study meat production.

Surveyors Give Up Work

Two More of St. Joe's Patriotic Young Men Respond to Assist Unle Sam—Clark Scholes and Calvin Kain Assigned to the U. S. Engineer Corps.

Clark F. Scholes and his deputy, Calvin C. Kain, have given up their work in the office of County Surveyor and the work of the office will be turned over to Frank Scholes, of St. Joe.

The boys left Monday morning to join the colors and they went to Indianapolis to undergo the examination for service in the United States engineers corps, and have asked to be assigned to the 25th. regiment of engineers now in training at Ayr, Mass.

Mr. Scholes has appointed his father, Frank Scholes, as deputy surveyor and he will be in full charge of the work. Frank Scholes is a civil engineer of many years experience and will no doubt perform his son's duties with satisfaction.

Clark F. Scholes is twenty-three years old and graduated in the spring of 1916 from the engineering department of Tri-State college at Angola. Mr. Kain is twenty-eight years of age and also received his training at the Angola college.

Messrs. Scholes and Kain both served for fifteen months as government engineers on the Lake Erie and Lake Michigan canal, being furloughed two years ago upon the completion of the canal survey. They have decided that their training and experience would be of benefit to Uncle Sam in the great war. Mr. Kain is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Kain of Newville township. Mr. Scholes was elected county surveyor in November, 1916 and when he took the office in January 1, Mr. Kain became his deputy. Mr. Scholes may resign later and in that event the county commissioners would elect his successor, to serve until the expiration of the term on December 31, 1918.

Wants A New Trial

Josephus R. Shilling of St. Joe, has filed a motion for a new trial in the case of Cleveland Washler versus Chas. T. Bayman and Mr. Shilling. The suit was tried in the October term of the court and the plaintiff was rendered a judgement against both the defendants. The suit involved some $200.

The case was heard before a jury.

A Second Suit.

The collection of $165 is asked in a suit filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Charles Freeburn against Charles T. Bayman and Josephus Shilling.

Mr. Freeburn says Mr. Bayman sold the St. Joe mill to Mr. Shilling last February and all the obligations of Mr. Bayman in connection with the business; that Mr. Bayman was indebted to Mr. Freeburn $149.49 at that time and that payment has not been made by Mr. Shilling. Interest of $15 is added in the suit.

Mr. Freeburn complains that Mr. Bayman did not make a sworn statement to Mr. Shilling of the list of creditors and the amount due them five days prior to the sale. Therefore the court is asked to appoint Mr. Shilling receiver of the property and to make him responsible for the debt. J. Maxwell Life is attorney for the plaintiff.

HORSE AND CATTLE BARN ON NEW PLAN

Well-Designed, Handsome and Practical Farm Building, Good Investment.

IS CONVENIENT AND SANITARY

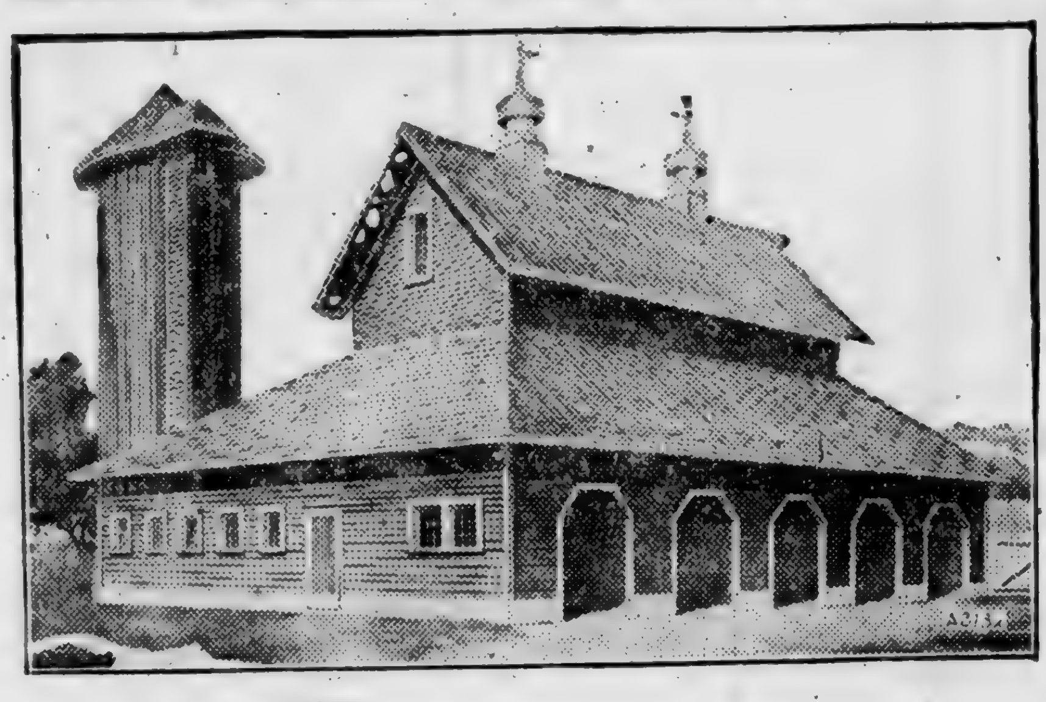
Beware Useless Wall Area and Floor Space—Don't Skimp Material—Plan to Save Labor—Be Sure There's Sunlight Aplenty.

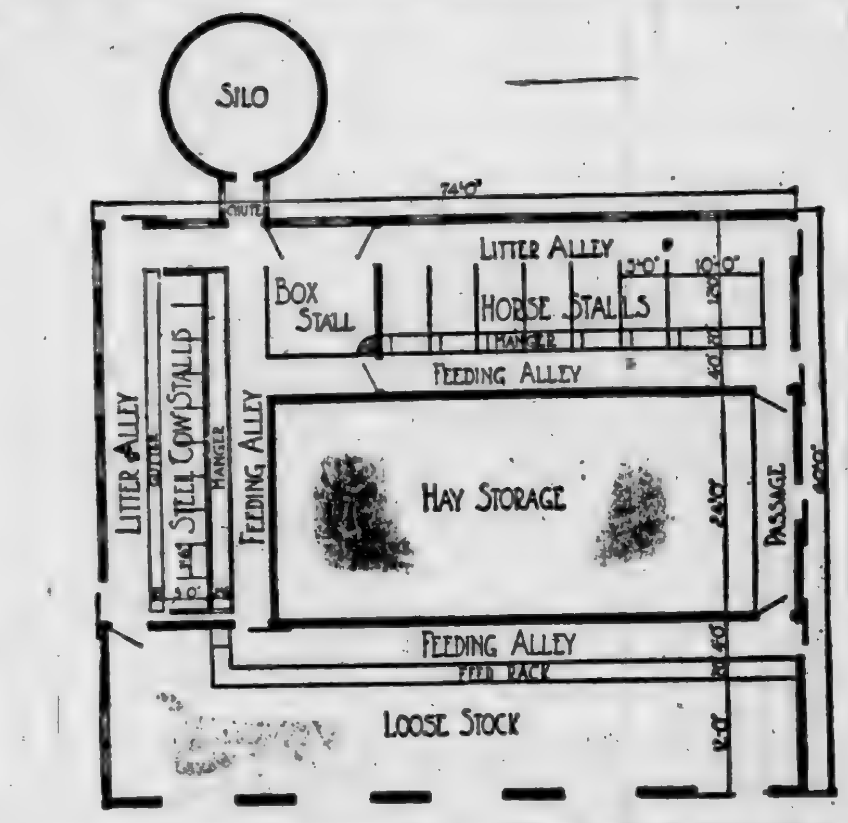
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

The farmer who is in the habit of getting his money's worth in an investment, considers five things before he accepts the design of a barn. These things are appearance, economy, practicability, convenience and sanitation.

A well-lighted, handsome appearing, practical building on the farm is a good investment because it gives added value to the property in the eyes of a prospective buyer. Correct design is of utmost importance in obtaining the desired quality of good appearance, although the exterior finish and relation of the building to other buildings of the group must be given consideration in this connection. The roof of the building is largely responsible for the appearance and it should be proportioned with this idea in mind, but the storage capacity is very often of greater importance than the appearance. Properly designed dormers can often be used to obtain a pleasing appearance, where the roof surface is large. One of the easiest ways to obtain attractive appearance is to mount a good type of modern ventilator on the roof, at as many points as there is need for them; and in addition to the appearance, this equipment is considered absolutely necessary from the standpoint of healthy stock, among the farmers "who know."





Economy consists in using the least wall area, a minimum of non-useful floor space, saving of building materials wherever possible, reduction of heat loss through the walls, all resulting in a saving of money both in construction of the building and in its subsequent use. Sometimes there is too little money invested in farm buildings, in which case the labor cost of maintaining the stock is excessive. There should be a balance struck between the labor cost of doing the farm work and the interest on the money invested in buildings constructed for the purpose of reducing this labor cost.

Practicability consists in proper dimensions of stalls, passages, doors, gutters, hay-racks, posts, beams, bracing and other parts. This consideration is that which makes it advisable to consider each building for the particular conditions under which it is to be used. The buildings should be large enough to accommodate a bumper crop and as much stock as the farm will profitably maintain. Remember that it is far more expensive to add to a building than it is to make it large enough in the first place.

There is a great difference in the convenience of barns. Such things as the arrangement for feeding, layout of feed and litter passages, facing of animals, location of feed rooms, silo, doors, and hay chutes, all mean ease or extra work as the case may be. Arrangement for cleaning, location of litter carrier and feed carrier tracks, placing of doors and harness rooms, methods of storing hay, provision for installing hay forks, are all matters which should be very carefully considered.

By sanitation is meant the effect obtained by location of windows for distribution of light, doing away with obstruction to light, providing proper height of windows from floor, giving proper slope to stalls, passages and gutters for good drainage, arrangement for a constant circulation of fresh, pure air, making the stable floor impervious to moisture and easily flushed out and finishing off ceilings and side walls to be dust free. Too much sunlight cannot be given to the stock. If a healthy herd is desired, sunlight must get into every nook and corner of the building at least once a day. Sun is nature's disinfectant and cleans a stable of disease germs.

A farm barn for the stabling of dairy cows, horses and beef cattle, is shown in the accompanying illustrations. It is 60 feet by 74 feet in size, and is of the monitor roof type of barn so often seen in Indiana and Illinois.

The dairy stable end of the barn is partitioned across opposite the silo. The steel cow stalls are set in the concrete floor in the usual way, and there is an alley behind the cows wide enough for a good passage through.

The horses are in one wing and the loose stock runs in a covered barnyard or partially enclosed shed in the other wing.

Hay storage reaches from the ground to the peak in the center of the barn. The wings also are floored over the stables and the cattle shed, so the whole size of the barn is made into storage from this floor up. Usually straw is blown into the wings at threshing time and the center of the barn is filled with hay.

There are feed racks running the whole length of the stock shed. Over these feed racks are chutes to let the hay or other roughage down from the big mow so that the racks are easily filled at feeding time. At the same time hay is let down in the feeding alley on the side of the barn for the dairy cows. It is better not to have any direct connection between the cow stable and the overhead storage. Hay for the horses and straw for horse bedding is put down another chute in the horse wing.

Placing the silo at one corner of the barn makes it easy to feed silage to all of the live stock, because of the manner in which the different alleys branch off and extend in different directions to reach the mangers.

It would be difficult to build a better farm barn where accommodation is wanted for horses and dairy cows and young stock or beef cattle in one building. It is what might be called a general farm stock barn. It holds a great amount of rough fodder, because of the depth of the hay bay. When hay is put into such a storage mow in the summer time and refilled later, the height is sufficient to settle the hay very solid in the bottom, so that the space between the ground and the roof in the center part of this building will hold a large quantity of hay.

Considering the size of the barn, 60 by 74 feet, it is a cheap barn to build. The construction is very simple. The center part is built with uprights which reach to the plate and the wings are added like sheds, with the exception that a solid concrete foundation reaches all the way around, which makes the barn permanent. Such a foundation adds a great deal to the value of the building, both in service and looks.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

FOX TERRIERS.

"A little girl named Kate," said Daddy, "once owned a tiny fox terrier puppy. He was so cunning and playful, though, like all puppies, at times he was naughty.

"'You must have his tail cut,' her friends all said.

"'Won't it hurt him?' asked Kate. She couldn't quite imagine such a thing happening without it hurting frightfully. What if someone said her arm had to be cut off, or her foot, wouldn't it hurt?

"'It won't hurt so much if you have it cut when he is still a puppy. Usually these puppies have their tails cut off before they are sold. A fox terrier would look very queer with a long tail. Everyone would think he was nothing but an ordinary dog, and you have a fine, well-bred puppy.' And so her friends talked on.

"Kate felt very badly about it, but still if her dog looked queerly, what was she to do? And they told her it was better to have it done when the dog was little.

"She saw the dog doctor and he said he would call for the dog and take him home for a week.

"'Why do you need him for such a long time?' asked Kate.

"'Well, he won't feel so very well for a few days,' said the dog doctor. 'But he will be all right soon and he'll be a fine-looking little dog when I bring him back.'

"Kate had been told she must do this by her friends and she was letting her little dog go against her better wishes. She kissed one of his soft brown ears and he looked at her out of his brown eyes as though to say, 'Little mistress, do you care more for fashions than you do for me?' For though he did not know what was going to happen, he knew that something was and that it would not be nice. He could tell that Kate was worried and he was unhappy about that.

"Three days passed and Kate could stand it no longer. She went to the dog doctor and asked for her dog Billy.

"'I want to take him home with me,' she said.

"The dog doctor brought Billy out. His tail was done up in a bandage and in his eyes she could see that he had suffered.

"'My little Billy,' she said. And shivering, trembling, still feeling the effects of having his tail partly taken off, but glad to see his mistress, and quite, quite forgiving, Billy gave a little bark.

"'You forgive me, Billy, you are finer than a person. I'd never forgive anyone if they did such a thing to me. And I let you suffer for fashion, for foolish, absurd fashion, which has been made by men and women—and against little dogs.'

"Kate had left the doctor's house and was carrying Billy in her arms. She knew that he must have been suffering a great deal more the few days before and how dreadfully she did feel that she had let him go.

Forgiving Billy Nestled in Her Arms.

"'I just gave in,' said Kate, 'and did what people told me to do. I felt it would be painful, no matter what they said, and I was right in that, but I was wrong, so cruel and wrong to let him go.'

"But Billy, the patient, forgiving Billy nestled in her arms, licked her hands, and said, with those same lovely brown eyes.

"'Never mind, little mistress. Don't be sad! I'll be well soon, and I forgive you, for you didn't understand and you do love me so much.'

"Billy grew to be a fine dog and of course he was a fashionable dog with a short tail, the rule having been made by people, not by the dogs! It's always so easy to be brave about other creatures' sufferings!

"Kate was always ashamed that Billy was fashionable. And later on she got another fox terrier and his tail was kept long, I can assure you!"

"Oh, Daddy," said Nancy, "I'm so glad you have told us this story."

"So am I," said Nick.

"We were going to have our fox terrier puppy's tail cut tomorrow because we were told it would not hurt much and it was the correct thing to do," said Nancy. "And now we know."

"I told you the story because I knew you didn't understand, and it's a true story too," said Daddy. "But it makes me happy indeed to think we will not have a 'fashionable' dog, for we will know that we never made him suffer for such a reason!"

HELPS FURNITURE BUSINESS.

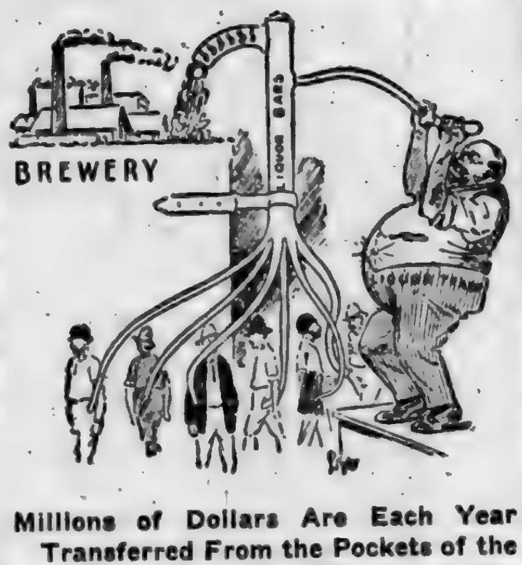
The News-Leader of Richmond, Va., testifying to the benefits of prohibition, quotes furniture dealers of that city:

"For the seven months before prohibition went into effect we averaged eighteen cases a month where we had to take back furniture on which people could not pay the installments due," said one furniture dealer. "Since prohibition became law, we have had only twenty-one returns, three a month. In other words, we had six times as many returns before prohibition as since the saloons were closed."

A second man in the same business said: "My books are open to inspection. They will show that since prohibition went into effect, my collections have averaged 60 per cent more a month than they did before November 1, 1916."

"Who can measure the happiness, the creature comforts and the improvement in home life these two statements disclose?" queries the News-Leader. "Who can guage the waste prevented and the thrift encouraged? Who can reckon the children clothed, the homes made bright, the wives made happy, the burdens lifted?"

THE VACUUM POCKET CLEANER.



Millions of Dollars Are Each Year Transferred From the Pockets of the Laboring Men to Those of the Wealthy Brewers!

In proportion as the liquor traffic empties the pockets of the wage-earner is there less money for the grocer, the dry goods merchant, the landlord and every other legitimate business.

WANTED—NEW RECRUITS.

The most dangerous principle upon which the saloon is built is this: It is not fashioned to supply the demands of men whose passion for liquor has been developed, but, with the cunning which only the lust for money can inspire, it is fashioned to teach a new generation to drink. Under the law of life, the men already enlisted in the army of drink will be dead within the limit of twenty years. The slogan of the saloon is, "New recruits! New recruits!" As a hundred thousand men drop out of the ranks, a hundred thousand new recruits are made. Never a maimed and bruised and dying man falls out of the ranks, that the saloon is not ready with a new recruit, and from this vast, ever-increasing army, the masters of the liquor interests are yearly drawing millions of dollars in toll.—Seaborn Wright.

FROM A NEW ANGLE.

A Spokane (Wash.) paper tells this story:

"A man went out to buy a hammer in a second-hand store. He couldn't find what he wanted, so visited one pawnshop after another, and still failed to make a purchase. His curiosity was aroused, as he had been accustomed to pick up valuable mechanic's tools in this way for a mere song. So he said to one pawnbroker, "Let me see your entire stock of tools; I may find something that I want."

The man replied, "I have very few now."

"What do you mean? Don't working men come in to pledge their kits for money to tide them over?"

"Not since the state went dry. Men mostly are sober, and have good jobs, and want to hold onto their tools."

A WITLESS POLICY.

Representative Charles H. Randall of California, addressing congress in opposition to the amendment to the revenue bill placing a higher tax on liquors, used this telling illustration: "The witless heathen who on the Ganges covered his black limbs with leeches and ate them when they had fattened on his blood was wise. He took back into his body all they had taken from it. We fasten on the lank limbs of our body politic the lecherous traffic, and give fawning thanks when it returns one drop of poisoned blood from seven it had sucked from our wholesome civic veins."

THE COCONUT WON.

The Porto Ricans are the first Latin people to outlaw the drink traffic through a referendum, and they did so at the first election at which they voted as American citizens, July 16. With a population of 1,200,000 (about a quarter of a million voters) Porto Rico went dry by a vote of 99,775 for prohibition to 61,295 against. Because of the large proportion of illiteracy in the island each side chose a symbol for the voter's guidance. On the dry ballots a coconut was depicted, on the wet a rum bottle.

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 18

NEHEMIAH'S PRAYER ANSWERED

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 2:1-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—Ask and it shall be given unto you.—Matthew 7:7.

It was four months after Nehemiah learned of the desolation of Jerusalem that he had the opportunity to make known his request to the king. Just why he did not test the king's attitude toward him and his project earlier, we have no information. Perhaps there was no great function at which he was called upon to minister in this interval, or his turn of service had not arrived, or his duties were so exacting that no opportunity was afforded for him to unbosom his grief to the king.

I. Nehemiah's Request to the King (vv. 1-8). (1) Its occasion, v. 1. As cup-bearer he was ministering before the king. The cup-bearer was more than a mere valet. He entered very closely into the life's interests of the king, so that the inner life and spirit of the cup-bearer was known. It was expected of such servants that they manifest perfect happiness while in the presence of the king. To appear in his presence otherwise would likely be to the displeasure of the king. Nehemiah's sad countenance while thus serving awakened the king's suspicion. The matter was serious for Nehemiah was afraid under the circumstances.

(2) The king's inquiry, v. 2. The king perceived that Nehemiah's countenance was sad, though he was not sick, and he knew that something extraordinary had come into the life of his cup-bearer.

(3) The effect upon Nehemiah, v. 2. His heart was filled with fear. He did not know but what this impropriety was so great as to cause his dismissal. His fear was more than that of losing his position; to be dismissed from being cup-bearer would mean the loss of an opportunity to present his request to the king; and, without the king's sanction and aid, his enterprise would fail.

(4) Nehemiah's tactful reply, v. 3. He seeks to conciliate the king by expressing a deep interest in the royal life and person. He says: "May the king live forever," and then tells that the cause of his grief was the desolation of the city where his fathers were buried.

(5) The contents of Nehemiah's request, vv. 5-8. (a) To be sent to Judah to build the walls of Jerusalem, vv. 5, 6. This request virtually meant to be granted a leave of absence from the Persian court and to be appointed military governor of that part of the kingdom of Artaxerxes. The king, doubtless, saw that such a move would be of particular benefit to his kingdom politically, owing to the strategic position of Jerusalem, between Babylon and Egypt. In the case of the breaking out of hostilities between these powers, to have a fortified city in Palestine would be of immense importance. At the king's request, a definite time was set for this leave of absence, v. 6. He remained in Jerusalem for twelve years. A side light on the king's gracious attitude toward Nehemiah is given in this: "The queen also sitting by him." She is not named, but in all probability it was Esther.

(b) For letters to the governors beyond the river, v. 6. Doubtless the path of his journey was a dangerous one, and the travelers' safety depended upon having credentials from the king. These letters were more than mere credentials. They were orders for actually conveying him and his party to Judah. Ezra, years before, had desisted from asking a band of soldiers, but Nehemiah was free to ask such a favor. It was right in both cases, but not expedient in that of Ezra. Many problems are clear, if we distinguish between that which is lawful and that which is expedient.

(c) A letter of requisition for supplies of timber, v. 8. This timber was needed, first for the palace or castle, that is, for the fortress near the temple; second, for the walls and gates of the city; and third, for the king's official residence.

II. Nehemiah's Request Granted, v. 8. Nehemiah was a tactful diplomat. He exercised sound sense and prudence in all things, but he supremely depended upon God and prayed for God's disposal of the king's heart as he made his request known, v. 4. The king granted his request "according to the good hand of my God upon me," v. 8. He ascribes the success of his undertaking to God.

III. Nehemiah's Journey to Jerusalem, vv. 9-11. He journeyed from Shushan to Jerusalem under the protection of a military escort. This was of double value: protection and safety. When it was known that Nehemiah was undertaking this work with the consent of the king, Sanballat and Tobiah were greatly grieved. It always is a grief to the enemy when that which will further the interest of God and his people is being made to succeed. When he reached Jerusalem, he did not at once make his purpose known. He waited for three days and then viewed the situation at night.

Mr. Reuter Went Through a Terrible Siege of Kidney Trouble. Doan's Brought Back His Health.

"After an injury I was in terrible shape from kidney trouble," says D. Reuter, North St., West Chicago, Ill. "I couldn't stoop because of the awful pains in my back and the steady, dull misery almost drove me frantic. I had to be helped out of bed mornings, the pains across my kidneys were so bad and nobody knows the agony I went through. I couldn't do anything and was almost helpless; it seemed I would never get well.

Mr. Reuter

"The urine passed far too often and burned like scalding water. The passages were scanty and I had no control over them. At times everything in front of me grew dark and I couldn't see for several minutes. I perspired profusely and I was thirsty all the time. For two years I suffered, trying medicine after medicine without relief. I was just about discouraged and didn't think I would ever be able to work again.

"Hearing about Doan's Kidney Pills I used them and four boxes cured me. My kidneys became normal, my back got well and strong and all the other troubles disappeared."

Teamster's Life Saved.

WRITES LETTER THAT IS WORTH READING VERY CAREFULLY.

Peterson Bros.: I was afflicted with a very severe sore on my leg for years. I am a teamster. I tried all medicines and salves, but without success. I tried doctors, but they failed to cure me. I couldn't sleep for many nights from pain. Doctors said I could not live for more than two years. Finally Peterson's Ointment was recommended to me and by its use the sore was entirely healed. Thankfully yours, William Haase, West Park, Ohio, Mar. 22, 1915, care P. G. Reitz, Box 199.

Insurance in Australia.

State insurance in Australia shows gratifying results. It has been found possible to pay a bonus of 10 per cent on ordinary policies, and to make other concessions. Reserves are being built up and expenses met. This remarkable success is attributed to the very low expense ratio of the office, which is about 12 per cent of the net premium income.

First Dreadnaught.

It is hard to realize that the original dreadnaught is now ten years old, and that, big as it is, close upon 18,000 tons it has been far surpassed in tonnage and armament, observes an exchange. It gave a new word to the world, for the name of the ship, one of the traditional names of the British navy, is now applied to all ships of its class in every country. The word has taken the place of man of war, line of battle ship, and ironclad. Even now we have been obliged to go one better and the word superdreadnaught has arisen. It is interesting to hark back to the most famous of Nelson's ships, probably the most famous vessel which ever sailed the sea, the Victory, and to compare it with even the first dreadnaught. The latter took 14 months to complete and cost $9,000,000, while the Trafalgar flagship, a little over 2,000 tons, required many years to build and cost only $445,000, a sum at that time considered colossal.

"There's a Reason"

What Can We Do?
International Film Service

Christmas packets for the soldiers and sailors must be got under way at once, and those to go to France must be ready to start on their journey by the 15th of November. Most of the men will be well remembered by their families, but in order that every man may be sure to receive something, Red Cross chapters will undertake to forward packets, to be distributed among the soldiers providing the packets are made according to their directions.

"For wrapping gifts use a khaki-colored handkerchief, 27 inches square, and form the base of the packet by placing on the center of the packet a pad of writing paper about seven by ten inches. Select a variety of articles to an amount not exceeding $1.50, and arrange them on the pad of paper so that the entire package shall be the width of the pad and approximately five or six inches high. Wrap and tie with one-inch red ribbon, and place a Christmas card under the bow of ribbon. . . . Wrap the parcel again in heavy light brown manilla paper and tie securely with red, green or gilt cord, and use Christmas labels."

Small tin or wooden boxes holding a half pound or less will keep dried fruits, candy, fruit cake, fruit crackers, etc., in good shape. These are the things which the soldiers will enjoy most at Christmas time. The Red Cross recommends, among other things, the following presents: Writing paper pad, envelopes, post cards, pencil, books (in paper covers) home-made scrap book, knife, such as boy scouts use, steel mirror, handkerchiefs, neckties, mouth organ, mechanical puzzles, checker board, electric torch, compass, playing cards, and other games, tobacco, pipe and pipe cleaners, watertight match box, chewing gum, sweet chocolate biscuits, fruit crackers, fruit cake, preserved ginger, salted nuts, prunes, figs, dates, raisins, hard candy, chocolate, in tin foil and licorice.

No liquids nor articles packed in glass should be sent in Christmas packages. Instead of sending a quantity of one kind of confection, it is better to provide a variety, packing each one in an oblong tin box holding a quarter of a pound. Fruit cake keeps well—and is about the best choice in cakes, because it keeps fresh so long.

For Evening or Dinner Wear

The lovely Flanders gown which graces this page may have been designed for an evening gown for some one who is serious minded, or as a dinner gown for some one who likes to dress up to the limit for the informal dinner. The chances are that its creator foresaw that it would be obliged to lead the double life, serving for both dinner and evening wear, for it is the order of the day that evening gowns shall practice restraint, and not flaunt a thoughtless, gay splendor in the face of war. Here is a model that will appeal to the woman of fine perceptions and elegant taste. The American designer of this and other gowns appears to have arrived, with styles that suit and express the American woman and are as beautiful as any France has sent to us.

This gown is of orchid satin, not in one of the pale, pinkish shades, but in a purple which ought to be called royal from its character, but is too light to be classed under that head. It is a wonderful shade, vivid and rich and exquisite. No one but an artist should take the liberty of working with such a fabric, for the design must not fail to equal the material in class.

The skirt is almost plain. It is beautifully draped with the side drapery that continues to be favored. The bodice is equally simple with surplice fronts extended into end. Wrapped about the figure and straight sleeves of georgette crepe bound with satin. A vestee of lace partially veiled with crepe is set in, leaving a margin of unveiled lace at the top. Revers of lace extended from the line of the bust over the shoulders to the shoulder blades.

This is the brief story of a truly wonderful gown. It takes genius to achieve such lines and such management of fascinating color by means so direct and simple. It is a gown that will not lose its charm for it is modest and conservative, but at the same time brilliant enough for the opera, and not too brilliant for an informal dinner.

Julia Bottomley

A Blouse in Three Shades.

A blouse of colored chiffon boasts of three shades instead of the customary two—the three being dull periwinkle blue, deep violet and orchid color. The resulting effect is one of the most charming seen in any of the color combinations. The underbodice is orchid color, and the sleeves are half of this shade.

A deep band of violet color, cut into points at the top, is used at the bottom of the sleeves and there are cuffs of periwinkle blue with a flaring band at the top, lined in orchid. The over-blouse is of periwinkle with a vest made of orchid, and an oddly shaped rolling collar of violet, lined in blue. There is no embroidery or trimming of any other sort on the blouse.

Slip Knot Line Holder.

The average washerwoman has never taken a course in seamanship, and she is rarely adept in tying a knot, with the result that some considerable portion of her time is spent on wash-day in putting up the line, and even at that she does not always make a good job of it, and the line sags hopelessly instead of being tight from post to post. A new line holder to be secured to the post enables the most inexperienced hand to hang the line as taut as may be desired without the necessity of tying a knot. The line is merely slipped over a lever portion of the device and under another portion, with the result that the greater the pull exerted on the line the tighter it is clamped in the device.

FATE PURSUED THIS TOMMY

Nearly Spent Bullet Goes Through Hole Made in His Helmet by German Sniper.

James Dickinson, a convalescent Canadian soldier, in a letter to a friend, tells this story of the great war:

During a lull in the battle of the Marne one of the Canadian troopers took off his steel helmet, and, placing it on the end of his rifle, held it so that about half of it protruded above the top of the trench. A German sniper, observing it, at once shot at it, and the ball, striking it squarely, pierced the steel, going out the other side. The "Tommy" laughingly showed it to his comrades and placed it back on his head.

Fifteen minutes later the order came to "go over the top," and this same "Tommy" was among the first. He was also among the first to fall, mortally wounded.

It was discovered at the dressing station that he had been struck by a nearly spent bullet that had gone through one of the holes that he had so recently shown his fellow soldiers in laughter.

ACID POISONING!

The most eminent physicians recognize that uric acid stored up in the system is the cause of gout and rheumatism, that this uric acid poison is present in the joints, muscles, or nerves. By experimenting and analysis at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y., Dr. Pierce discovered a combination of native remedies that he called An-u-ric, which drives out the uric acid from the system, and in this way the pain, swelling and inflammation subside. If you are a sufferer from rheumatism, backache, pains here or there, you can obtain Anuric, double strength, at any drug store and get relief from the pains and ills brought about by uric acid; or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. Anuric which you will find many times more potent than lithia and eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. A short trial will convince you. Send a sample of your water to Dr. Pierce and it will be tested free of charge.

Anuric is a regular insurance and life-saver for all big meat eaters and those who deposit lime-salts in their joints.

Many Bibles Used.

Two million copies of the Scriptures have been placed in the hands of Chinese during the year, according to the report of the National Bible society of Scotland. The report states that in Japan also, the circulation had been increased, and consignments of the Scriptures had been sent to France for the use of the labor battalions with the British troops. It was reported that the revised Japanese Bible had been completed and was in course of printing, and it was hoped that it would be in circulation by the end of the year. The revised Mandarin Bible, on which United States and British scholars and Chinese literary men had been working, would be completed by the end of the year. The field for its circulation was a very wide one, as it was estimated there were 300,000,000 people who spoke the Mandarin dialect.

Apple Full of Gold.

Gold coins were found in an apple by a minister in Albany, Ore., a short time ago. The apple was a gift from his congregation, and when he began to eat it he found it contained a sufficient quantity of gold coins to pay the expense of himself and family on a trip to the minister's old home in Ohio. He had been planning to visit his mother and the congregation, learning of this, decided to pay his expenses.

From all reports there seems to be considerable thieving going on in this community, both in the line of eatables and fuel. There hardly seems to be any excuse that is justifiable of such conduct on the part of any man in this community as there are plenty of jobs calling for laborers and the wages are good. No doubt, to the surprise of some, there is likely to be some official of a certain railroad running east and west through St. Joe, calling on some of our citizens and they will be compelled to show just where they purchased that coal and how much was paid for it. It is wrong and such work should be stopped, as it will lead to worse.

—‡—‡—‡—

"Oh, for a leg of mutton," says J. W. Sherer, of St. Joe, although he lives just north of the corporation limits. Jim has been on the search of the fellow that stole this mutton from his home last week. Jim says that he is positive that it was a democrat that visited his home while he and Mrs. Sherer were away, because he left the pan. Had it been a republican he would have taken pan, lid, mutton and all. As soon as the weather gets bad, Jim thinks he will be able to locate the fellow because he wore brand new rubbers, and the prints were left in the mud and he is taking special notice now of the folks feet as he passes them on the street. As soon as the weather demands the wearing of rubber footwear the miscreant will be made public. Should he be found on the street, Jim proposes to call the marshall, take charge of the offender and then compare his footwear witn the pattern made from the "prints left in sands of his back yard." Not many folks, only democrats, are really fond of mutton anyhow and Jim would be glad to see his friend and see how he enjoyed the feed.

Because of the scarcity of fuel, many of the churches are now setting a good precedent that might be well for all organizations to follow. Many meetings on the church calendar are being changed to afternoons in order to make less of a demand on lighting facilities. In so far as possible these meetings are grouped on Thursday when the church must be heated for prayer meeting. Coal conservation is served when the minimum demand is made on electric and gas lights and upon heating facilities.

—‡—‡—‡—

As evidence that the United States Fuel Administrator for Indiana is "doing a little something" the information that 900 cars of coal were ordered shipped by his office last week, is interesting. It took two weeks to organize the state under the county fuel administrator plan and in less than three weeks from the date of his appointment, the Indiana administrator has built up the machinery necessary to the handling of a staggering situation. It is now up to him and his county administrators to keep the machinery "hitting on all six."

THAT ELUSIVE BIRD

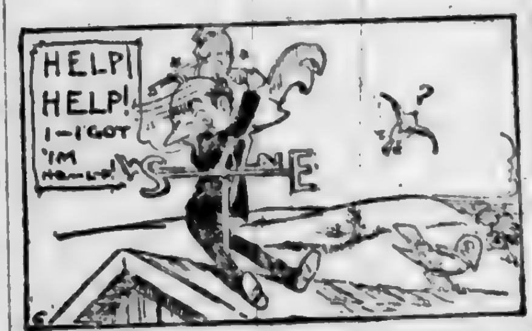
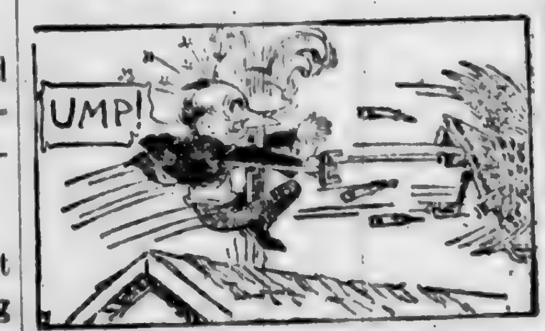
THE TURKEY'S DEPARTURE



HELP! HELP! I-I GOT 'IM

THE OBSTACLE ENCOUNTERED



THE FINAL TRIUMPH

SEEMS TO FIND LITTLE JOY

Possibly Premonition of Its Fate Makes the Turkey Such a Confirmed Pessimist.

The turkey is a serious bird. The expression written on his bill, as he looks mournfully out over the world or walks solemnly, his long neck swaying here and there in search of the passing grasshopper, is that of a settled melancholy due to the certainty of fate and to the hereditary loss of his illusions.

For, ever since the days of the Pilgrim Fathers, the lives of countless generations of the turkey family have been cut short in their prime by sudden and bloody tragedy. What would be the effect upon the minds and hearts of a human family if every member of it for 300 years back had met a violent and bloody end just upon reaching maturity? A pall would hang over the annals of the house. Despair, fixed and settled, would be written into the very constitutions of its members, and life would become a burden, a curse almost too great to be borne.

It must have been that one of the Pilgrim Fathers, viewing the end of the turkey as symbolic of that of man, wrote that cheerful ditty which our ancestors were accustomed to sing in their gathering for divine worship:

> Thy years are one eternal day,
> And must thy children die so soon?

—Minneapolis Journal.

Joy in Thanksgiving.

It is a pity that so few pious people have learned how to participate in the deep happiness that is contained in thanksgiving to God for events that bring joy or for happy days. If some joyous event comes quite unexpectedly or long desired into our life, if father or son returns from the war, if convalescence comes at last, if a victory is won, how warm and generous then rises the impulse from the soul's depths to seek a Spirit whom one can thank for it all! Happy be who knows then the way to the throne of God! Then the vibrations of the soul ring out a joyous thanksgiving to God. This thanksgiving to him to whom in faith we attribute the event gives it its significance, gives it place in a vaster, holy process, that is above all other things.

Are False Represent'ive.

Women of Indianapolis and other parts of Indiana are being victimized by "thieves and robbers" who represent themselves as government agents and are confiscating canned products, declaring that the government is confiscating canned food supplies.

An instance was reported where three men entered the home of a colord woman in Indianapolis and took one-half of the products that the woman had stored away thro a long summer's work. Reports have been received by H. E. Barnard, federal food director for Indiana, of similiar robberies in various parts of the state.

Barnard has issued a warning to women to beware of such imposters. No one has such authority as these "thieves and robbers" assume, Barnard said. If such a person appears and asks admittance to a home, the police should be notified immediately, he said. Barnard will hand all such cases over to the United States district attorney.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Albert Goodwin, of near Angola, bought the 100 acre farm of Leroy McMillan, last week. Possession will be given March 1.

One practical way in which the farmers of Indiana can render material assistance to the state in the coal situation is to use wood for fuel as much as possible. Several dealers have been refusing to sell coal to farmers who have a supply of fuel wood on their farms to tide them over. The United States Fuel Administrator is urging farmers to reduce their coal consumption as far as possible and in towns where citizens can buy fuel wood it is suggested that insofar as practical, wood be substitued for coal.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don t Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritutions or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

The German artillery is very active all night and day, and shells of various calibers rain around the merican position in France. So thickly did they come at one time it was thought another barrage was about to be placed for another raid on the American trenches. The Americans were ready for the Boche and hoping he would try another raid. But none developel.

The American corn crop of 1917, aggregating 3,191,083,000 bushels, breaks all previous records, and the 440,000,000 bushels potato crop also exceeds any former production, according to final reports of the department of agriculture at Washington on the harvest of the first war year.

President Wilson issued at Washington his 1917 Thanksgiving proclamation calling upon the nation, even in the midst of the sorrow and great peril of a world shaken by war, to thank God for blessings that are better than peace of mind and prosperity of enterprise. The proclamation named Thursday, November 29, as Thanksgiving day.

PLENTY OF TURKEYS

Washington, Nov. 10.—Plentiful supplies of turkeys are available for the Thanksgiving market, according to information in possession of the United States food administration, if the large stock of turkeys now in cold storage is placed on sale. The food administration will require that this poultry be rapidly placed on sale under the provisions of the food control act. With a larger volume of the product going on the market for sale consumers may soon look for an abundant supply at lower prices.

European War News

The conference of British, French and Italian representatives in Italy has resulted in the creation of a permanent interallied military committee. General Cadorna has been given a place on the new committee. General Diaz has been appointed first in command of the army with General Badoglio second and General Grandino third. General Foch, chief of staff of the French war ministry, and General Wilson, subchief of the British general staff, will serve on the inter-allied committee with General Cadorna.

It is announced at the Austro-Hungarian army headquarters, according to dispatch to London from Amsterdam to the Exchange Telegraph company, that the Teutonic armies operating against Italy number five.

HOUSEWIVES TOLD THE REASON WHY

Barnard, Federal Food Director for State, Gives Answer to Critics.

CLEARS UP CERTAIN POINTS

Explains Why Beer Making and the Smoking of Tobacco Do Not Affect the Matter of Conservation of Food.

Indianapolis.—H. E. Barnard, federal food director for Indiana, has given out the following answer to questions that were asked as to why the people should practice conservation of food when grain is being made into beer and whisky and men are spending millions for tobacco:

"Scores of speakers in the food conservation campaign have been asked: Why should we save wheat when millions of bushels of grain are wasted in making whisky and beer? Why should we skimp and do without when men are burning money in tobacco? These questions demand an answer.

"In the first place, not a bushel of wheat is used in making whisky or beer. Under the food act the manufacture of whisky and all distilled beverages is prohibited and no grain of any kind is is wasted in tht way, and in our allied countries no wheat is made into alcohol for beverage purposes. Beer is still made, but it is not made from wheat. Last year in this country we used in making beer for home consumption and export 60,000,000 bushels of barley, 15,000,000 bushels of corn and 3,000,000 bushels of rice. If brewing was stopped we would save 60,000,000 bushels of barley, which, if milled, would produce a pound loaf of barley bread per day for 6,000,000 people, if they could be persuaded to eat it. If we could substitute this barley for wheat we should still need to save 170,000,000 bushels of wheat to send abroad, for there is no substitute for wheat. Even if the government were to prohibit the manufacture of beer tomorrow, we would have to continue the food conservation plan.

The Tobacco Question.

"Of course men are spending millions for tobacco, but they are not burning food. The most which can be charged against them is that the tobacco they burn was grown on ground which might have produced food, but the harvest is over. If men stopped smoking today they would not add one ounce to the food supply. Next spring we may very well ask why should the fertile corn lands in Ohio be planted to tobacco, but there is no reason now why women should refuse to help Mr. Hoover because men still insist upon smoking.

"We are in the midst of war. We cannot make our co-operation as citizens and patriots dependent upon the prior righting of all social and economic wrongs. Hunger will not wait upon reform movements, however righteous. If Germany were to win the war certainly we should not have less beer manufactured.

"In this crisis we have but one duty, not to question why something else is not done; why some wrong is not righted, but to throw ourselves unselfishly into this patriotic service now required of us. Now is no time to blame the food administration for things which it does not control and cannot regulate, or to insist upon the adjustment of personal grievances before the all-important duty of saving food is performed, and if there is some waste because great bodies of men, suddenly gathered in cantonments and fed by untrained cooks, cannot save as carefully as in the home, then there is the more need to save."

Who Would Be Hurt by This?

If on one day of each week during the coming year the people of the United States did not eat any meat and if on another day each week they did not consume any wheat products there would be a saving of 2,200,000 pounds of meat, and between 80,000,000 and 90,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Here is a concrete illustration of what a great nation we have become and how important our resources are in the struggle for world democracy.

Should the American people be called upon to observe a meatless day and a wheatless day there would be no hardship, and yet the small sacrifice made by many would, in the aggregate, become a powerful factor in the winning of victory.

More than that, statistics prepared in Washington show that a reduction of the high cost of living is largely in the hands of the people and that each consumer can, with the exercise of a little restraint, help his own pocketbook while performing a patriotic service.

Adopts English System.

The public service commission has announced that it had adopted the English system of establishing public utility rates during the war. A utility will be allowed a regular 6½ per cent on its valuation. If a further increase of rates is granted a 8 per cent profit will be allowed, and if a decrease in rates is made a 7 per cent profit will be allowed. This, it is believed by the public service commission, will prove a most powerful incentive for the companies to reduce their operating costs and conserve coal.

Nearly $1,900,000 of state money and $406,000 of federal money will be available for highway construction in Indiana next year. Counties through which five market highways are to be built must raise a like sum. Apportionments for some counties follow: Elkhart, $58,250; Laporte, $57,500; Porter, $37,500; St. Joseph, $53,500 for the North and South highway and $83,000 for the Lincoln highway.

Tax Body Loses First Step in Fight.

The tax board lost the first step in the fight to validate the findings of the board relative to a higher assessment of the property of public utilities of Indianapolis, in circuit court, when Judge Louis B. Ewbank of that court overruled demurrers to complaints wherein the utilities appealed from the state tax board findings. The companies concerned are the Indianapolis Light and Heat company, the Indianapolis Water company, the Citizens' Gas company, the Merchants' Light and Heat company and the Indianapolis Gas company.

The companies contend that the assessments fixed by the state tax board are not in conformity with constitutional law in that they fix a higher rate of assessment for the utilities than is fixed for other property of the taxpayers of the state, while the constitution provides that taxes shall be uniform and equal. The attorney general, appearing for the tax board, demurred to the complaints, and it was his demurrers that were overruled.

Now Question of Proof.

It now becomes a question of proof, in trial, as to whether the assessments fixed by the state board were not in conformity with assessments of other property or whether in their assessment of utility property the board maintained the standard of assessment fixed for property other than utility property.

To Use Regular Coal Channels.

Evans Wollen, federal fuel administrator for Indiana, proposes to conduct the coal business of the state through the regularly organized and established channels of coal trade, instead of seeking to revolutionize the business and establish an entirely new organization and system. He believes that by directing the production and the distribution of coal through the regular channels of the coal trade better results can be obtained than by taking the other course.

Mr. Woollen takes the position that what the people want is coal, and that it is his business to see that they get it. He realizes that the coal producers and dealers have all of the necessary machinery for getting the coal to the consumers if the business is properly directed from the office of the fuel administrator.

This plan appears to have met with the approval of the coal people of the state as well as of the large consumers of coal. It is believed that under the plan determined upon there will be plenty of coal for all purposes in Indiana, the only problem being to so direct the movement of the coal as to get it to the places where it is needed.

To Open No New Mines.

Mr. Woollen does not propose to encourage the opening of new mines in Indiana for the present, because it is the belief that better results and a larger output can be obtained by the working of the present mines to their full capacity than through the opening of new properties.

George E. Bollenbacker, who has a mine near Washington, wrote Mr. Woollen that the mine was opened in 1890 and worked until 1895, and that it could be turned over to anyone who cared to reopen the property. The administrator wrote Mr. Bollenbacker that he would keep the offer on file, but that at present the policy is to encourage production in mines already operating until the maximum capacity is reached.

No Coal for Farmers.

Another recommendation made by the fuel administrator is that no coal be sold to farmers who have fuel wood on hand or who can get fuel wood. At a recent meeting of the state council of defense it was pointed out that there is a vast quantity of wood going to waste on farms in the state, and it was recommended that this wood be gathered up and used as fuel. It was pointed out that there are many thousands of cords of such waste wood that could find a ready sale if it were cut and hauled to the cities and towns, and that farmers themselves could use it instead of coal.

The coal operators of Indiana are co-operating with the fuel administrator to take care of the coal needs of the state, and they believe they will be able to handle the situation in a fairly satisfactory manner. They say that if the people will be satisfied to receive sufficient coal for their current needs instead of undertaking to store coal for the entire winter the situation will work out in good shape.

Hog Production Grows.

Increased production and conservation of live stock in Indiana during the last few months is reflected in a statement issued by L. E. Northup, state veterinarian. Mr. Northup reported that in one county alone ten farms have produced daily 1,500 pounds of pork each as a result of correct methods of feeding. The statement reads: "The clearance house established has placed and transferred many thousands of hogs. We have ten farms which have produced 1,500 pounds of pork every day since May 1.

U. S. WAR BOARD IN PARIS COUNCIL

Col. E. M. House Heads Commission Now in Europe for Conference.

LANSING OUTLINES POLICIES

More Complete Co-ordination of All the Activities of Nations Engaged in Conflict Will Be Sought.

Washington.—With the announcement of the safe arrival in Europe of the American commission which will take part in the allied war council in Paris, the personnel of the commission and the objects which are to be sought by the American delegation are made public for the first time.

The participation by the United States in this council of the allies marks one of the most important steps taken by this country since America entered the war.

Henceforth the United States will have a voice in determining the actual strategy of the war.

Its officers will be party to the determination of where the enemy is to be attacked, where supplies are to go, what course is to be pursued with neutrals—in short, every phase of the war will, from this time on, concern the United States.

From this point to a single command of all the war forces of the allied nations is only a step.

Col. House Heads Board.

Col. E. M. House, who is recognized as the chief unoficial counselor of President Wilson, heads the war board now in Europe.

With him are representatives of every branch of the war government—army, navy, treasury, war trade board, shipping board, food comptroller and priority.

The delegation naturally divides itself up into departments, thus:

Colonel E. M. House, chairman, will act as spokesman for President Wilson on all diplomatic and political questions and matters of general policy.

Admiral William S. Benson, chief of naval operations, U. S. N., will participate in discussions of allied naval operations.

Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, chief of staff, U. S. A., will discuss military operations and give information on military support United States can give.

Oscar T. Crosby, assistant secretary of the treasury, will represent United States on questions of loans and credits.

Vance C. McCormick, chairman war trade board, will assist in forming uniform policy on exports, licenses to shippers and rationing the neutrals.

Bainbridge Colby, member shipping board, will report United States progress in shipbuilding and discuss distribution of ship tonnage.

Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor, representative of Food Administrator Hoover, will co-operate with allied commissioners in matter of food control.

Thomas Nelson Perkins, member priority board, will take up priority of shipments to our allies.

Gordon Auchincloss, son-in-law of Colonel House and assistant to Counselor Polk, will serve as chief secretary.

Essentially "War Conference."

Secretary of State Lansing, in a statement regarding the purposes of the commission, emphasized the fact that the conference is essentially a "war conference," although it is thought possible that the question of possible peace terms may come up for consideration.

Secretary Lansing's statement follows:

"The government of the United States will participate in the approaching conference of the powers waging war against the German empire, and has sent as its representative Edward M. House.

"The conference is essentially a "war conference," with the object of perfecting a more complete co-ordination of the activities of the various nations engaged in the conflict and the more comprehensive understanding of their respective needs in order that the joint efforts of the cobelligerents may attain the highest war efficiency.

"While a definite program has not been adopted, it may be assumed that the subjects to be discussed will embrace not only those pertaining to military and naval operations, but also the financial, commercial, economic and other phases of the present situation which are of vital importance to the successful prosecution of the war.

"There will undoubtedly be an effort to avoid any conflict of interest among the participants, and there is every reason to anticipate that the result will be fuller co-operation and consequently a much higher efficiency and a more vigorous prosecution of the war.

"The United States, in the employment of its man power and material resources, desires to use them to the greatest advantage against Germany. It has been no easy problem to determine how they can be used most effectively, since the independent presentations of requirements by the allied governments have been more or less conflicting on account of each government's appreciation of its own wants, which are naturally given greater importance than the wants of other governments.

General Survey Important.

"By a general survey of the whole situation and a free discussion of the needs of all, the approaching conference will undoubtedly be able to give the demands of the several governments their true perspective and proper place in the general plans for the conduct of the war.

"Though the resources of this country are vast and though there is every purpose to devote them all if need be to winning the war, they are not without limit. But even if they were greater, they should all be used to the highest advantage in attaining the supreme object for which we are fighting. This can only be done by a full and frank discussion of the plans and needs of the various belligerents.

"It is the earnest wish of this government to employ its military and naval forces and its resources and energy where they will give the greatest return in advancing the common cause. The exchange of views which will take place at the conference and the conclusions which will be reached will be of the highest value in preventing waste of energy and in bringing into harmony the activities of the nations, which have been unavoidably acting in a measure independently.

"In looking forward to the assembling of the conference it cannot be too strongly emphasized that it is a war conference and nothing else, devoted to devising ways and means to intensify the efforts of the belligerents against Germany by complete co-operation under a general plan, and thus bring the conflict to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion."

House Is Real Envoy.

Colonel House is the actual representative of the United States government on this commission; the others are merely his cabinet of advisers. He had been preparing for this mission for weeks before there was an inkling that the president meant him to represent the United States at the conference, and it is understood that he personally chose the delegates from the various departments.

There is no time set for the adjournment of the war conference. The very nature of the purposes that bring the representatives of all the allies together borbids a period being put to their labors.

In some form the congress will remain during the entire war, for until Germany is beaten there will be the necessity of co-operation that can only be obtained by a permanent board.

If there had been such a board in existence, for it means the direction of the war by a central body in authority over all forces, Italy would not be struggling for her life, it is declared. Such a board would have vetoed the advance of General Cadorna so far into Austria that the Teutons could trap him, or if the strategy appeared sound, they would have arranged for supplies and support that would have protected him in the positions he won against the divisions Germany brought from the Russian and Roumanian fronts.

In short, such a board will make it impossible for Germany to pursue successfully the Napoleonic plan of meeting her foes separately, and thus nullify the advantage they have in numbers and resources.

Stone Houses of Aleppo.

The stone houses of Aleppo are imposing and not without beauty. They are well preserved and tended, in contrast to the buildings of most eastern towns. The bazaars, and the khans, or wholesale establishments, are housed in stone buildings strong as forts. These are relics of older times, for Aleppo has been a city of traders for 20 centuries. The great iron studded doors have resisted the batterings of many a mob eager for the rich wares within. Some of the shops fronting these narrow streets house a stock of goods drawn from every corner of the earth. Steamer, railroad, wagon train, pack horse, caravan—the local merchant packs his goods for any form or settlement known to man. The shops are mean and insignificant looking enough from the outside, the traders have never heard of the Aleppo practice of making a window display in narrow frontage on the street, a door where he may squat and smoke, and behind him long rooms and galleries packed with rich wares; such is the usual arrangement for trade in Aleppo. And yet the city has been a commercial center since the days when Europe was a wilderness.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING

An automobile tire pump has been invented that is slipped over the crank shaft of a car and operated by its engine.

Pressing a lever with the foot locks the ignition in a new automobile thief defier and a special key is required to unlock it.

To permit loads to be carried the full length of an automobile running board a folding carrier of the lazy tongs type has been invented.

It is believed that, to an enormous extent, the bed of the ocean is covered with lava and pumice-stone.

The rearrangement of England's coal traffic has been the means of saving 700,000,000 ton miles.

During 1916 there were 882 applications for patents in New Zealand. This shows about eight applications per thousand population, as compared with 3.7 for Great Britain, 4.4 for Australia, and 5.7 for the United States. Applications for improved milking machinery took the lead.

SHEEP'S CLOTHING

—18—

A key grated almost inaudibly in the lock. Lydia started; but before she could move the door swung open far enough to admit Craven, and was at once slammed behind him.

A pace or two from the wall the man pulled up and stared at his daughter, his face dark with temper.

Slowly Lydia rose and confronted him, hard eyes challenging his relentlessly.

"What's this," he demanded abruptly in an ugly voice, "what's this I hear about your bringing Peter Traft here in a taxi?"

"What does this mean," the girl retorted, "that you send me here to be locked up, as though I were a thief to be held for the police?"

He ignored, if he was sensible to, the stressed pronoun. "I want an answer to my question," he said threateningly.

"I demand an answer to mine," she returned, unyielding.

With an impatient gesture Craven advanced as if meaning to seize her and enforce obedience. But halfway he paused, let his hand fall, with obvious effort relaxed; mustered a flickering and uncertain smile, meant to be ingratiating; moderated his tone. "Oh, come now!" he said in strained indulgence. "We can't go on forever quarreling, you and I, Liddy."

"I agree," she replied coolly. "Any explanation you can make—"

"It's all a mistake. Mrs. Ellsworthy, a most zealous woman in—ah—our service, misinterpreted my message, believed it imperative you should be detained, and when you showed temper committed an unpardonable error. I'll see she apologizes; meantime I, your father, express my sincere regret."

Briefly Lydia analyzed words and tone, and found both hollow with insincerity. She shook her head wearily. "You're not telling me the truth. I've learned too well to know when you're—inventing. If you mean what you say, if you wish to prove you didn't instruct that woman to lock me up, open that door and let me leave this house at once."

Craven sighed, shrugged tolerantly. "Very well," he urged. "I've no wish to detain you. Just one thing—and we'll go together. First be good enough to give me that puzzle box—"

"No!" Lydia cried out in a round full voice. "No!"

"What's that?" he said, incredulous.

"I said no," Lydia told him. "I will not give you the puzzle box. It belongs to Mrs. Merrilees."

In a breath his face was suffused with blood. "So that's your style, is it?" he stormed, advancing. "Well, we'll have this out here and now, my lady! I'm your father—I order—I command you to hand over that box! Unless, of course, you prefer me to take it by force."

He had come within two feet, was menacing her with face and gestures of uncontrollable wrath. But she didn't yield a step.

"You can't," she said evenly.

"What the devil's to prevent?"

"Because Mrs. Merrilees has it now."

The man fell back as though she had raised a shape of horror between them; stammering and aghast he jabbered repetition, "Mrs. Merrilees has it—now!"

Lydia affirmed with a nod.

"You—you're not fooling me, Liddy?" asked Craven in a stricken voice.

"I'm telling you the truth, if you've the wit to recognize it," she said with the brutal intolerance of youth for age allied with depravity. "Sheer chance fooled you. My cab broke down at Fifty-fifth street. I walked two blocks north to get another at the Margrave—where Mrs. Merrilees wasn't stopping, and where you didn't mean to meet me after I'd called here—and by downright good luck found her with Mrs. Beggarstaff. So I gave her the necklace, and came on here—Mr. Traft escorting me, though not at my request."

"Good heavens!" said Craven again, his accents quavering. "Do you know what you're saying, Liddy?"

"I'm afraid—I know too well."

With an inarticulate groan Craven sank into a chair and buried his face in his hands. "You've ruined me!"

"I've saved you, you mean."

"You don't understand. What—" He looked up eagerly. "What did they say when you—when you gave back the necklace?"

"They were kind enough to say nothing, to pretend Mrs. Merrilees had instigated the smuggling swindle that you invented—to blind me. Even Mrs. Merrilees pretended, in the goodness of her heart. And I was deceived until—this Mrs. Ellsworthy locked me in, and so gave me a chance to think from a true point of departure. Then I understood. I thought it all out—realized that you had stolen the necklace—that you were an associate of criminals—that I was the daughter of a common thief!"

Groaning, Craven covered his face again.

"Now," said the girl, "let me go. I don't know what action they mean to take against you, but, as for me, I ask nothing better than to be permitted to go and forget you."

"You mean you won't appear against me?" he asked.

"Not if I can manage to lose myself—another name, perhaps—"

"It won't be necessary," Craven interrupted in a voice of chill despair. He rose, stood staring at her with eyes deep sunken in sockets that had been suddenly hollowed out by despair. "I'm done for!"

A certain simplicity in that declaration convinced and struck fear into a heart that had been impregnable to all other appeals.

"What do you mean? Father, what do you mean?"

"You remember the knave of diamonds—the knave of clubs? There's one more knave in the series—spades—and that spells—death!"

"Father!"

"It's an old story—too long to detail. The knaves are warnings. I haven't had spades yet; but I'll get it within six hours unless I produce the necklace to be sold and shared. And that's now removed forever beyond my reach!"

"Father!" the girl reiterated witlessly. She caught the arm of a chair to steady herself, unconsciously sank into it, and sat staring and terrified.

"The trouble," said Craven in a broken voice, "the trouble is, I've always wanted to run straight—always. I guess every crook does, down deep. And when I saw a chance to marry money I shook Smith and Gordon. Only they wouldn't be shaken. And then I ran short, and to keep up appearances until after the marriage made up my mind to turn one last trick—the necklace—and then," he laughed bitterly, "virtue! But they were on the same job. And then you turned up. Otherwise I could have come through with the loot and saved myself. Now—"

He paused an instant, profoundly speculative. "I may have a chance yet for a getaway. They don't know where I am; though they may suspect. If only I can get an hour's lead out of town—"

The sound of sobbing disturbed him. What lies had conjured up—fear, disgust, contempt—the truth had exorcised: the rags and tatters of her childhood's love for him alone remained. Spent, broken in heart and spirit, humbled and torn with the horror his confession inspired, Lydia sat huddled in misery, racked with tearing sobs.

Craven moved to her side, touched her hair with hesitant fingers. "Well, well!" he said huskily. "We were fond of each other, weren't we, while it lasted, little girl? And your mother—I loved her. Well—well—"

He turned and without her knowledge gained the door; paused for a single, prolonged backward glance; shook his head uncertainly; shrugged; deftly inserted a key in the slit in the doorknob; and let himself softly out.

Only the muffled jar of the closing door made her understand that she was alone.

CHAPTER XVII.

To the right of the hallway, as one entered, stood a conventional mahogany hat and coat rack, framing a mirror. On this Peter noticed the raincoat Craven had worn. His hat lay on the floor near the foot of the stairway. Immediately opposite the mirror an arch admitted to the drawing room, a room in darkness tempered by the glow from the hallway.

Just within the arch lay the body of Thaddeus Craven, supine, limp, with arms outstretched. Kneeling beside the body Quoin looked up at Mrs. Ellsworthy and demanded in an irritable voice, "Light, please!"

The woman moved away into the gloom. A switch clicked sharply; the room was rendered brilliant by half a dozen sconces.

In this illumination the body of Craven wore an aspect even more terrible and repellant. Death conferred no majesty on his clay. The upturned face was deeply congested and hideous, with eyes bulging and glazed, with lips swollen, purple, and half parted.

Quoin bent an ear to the bosom, above the heart, sat up and felt for the pulse in a swollen red wrist, bent again to hold his ear close to the gaping lips. Then he got up and, looking from Mrs. Ellsworthy to Peter, nodded sober refutation of any lingering doubt.

"Gone!" he said. "Not a flicker of heart or breath—a stroke of apoplexy—or something. I'm no doctor."

"How did it happen?"

"He was coming downstairs," Mrs. Ellsworthy replied with difficulty.

Quoin interrupted brusquely, "What was he doing upstairs, please?"

"His daughter—talking to her."

"She's up there now? Safe? Unmolested?"

"Locked in the sitting room—safe, yes."

"Doesn't know of this as yet—eh?"

"No. With the door closed, the room is soundproof. Besides, there was no noise."

"Go on. How did he come here, and why did he send his daughter on ahead?"

"If you please," the woman begged, "one moment. I am fearfully shocked."

"Take your time," Quoin consented.

And while she turned away and, with a handkerchief pressed to her lips, struggled to recollect herself, the detective explained to Peter in an undertone, "Widow of one Ellsworthy, in his day a world-known collector of stolen property—I mean a 'fence,' of course. Always lived most respectably—much as you see. Craven probably did a lot of business with him first and last, and afterward with Mrs. Ellsworthy, who carried on the business in a smaller way, but quite as successfully, as far as keeping out of trouble was concerned. Feeling better, Mrs. Ellsworthy?"

"Yes—thank you. Mr. Craven called up about half-past ten to say his daughter was coming to see me, bringing with her a valuable property—I have no idea what—and that I was to find some pretext to detain her until he followed. She got here about eleven in a taxicab with this gentleman. When she heard Mr. Craven was coming she refused to wait, and I had to lock her in the room to keep her. Mr. Traft—I'm sorry—I put off with a note ostensibly from her. When Mr. Craven came he went directly to the girl. While he was upstairs two men of my acquaintance came to the basement door, and I let them in."

"Southpaw Smith and Colonel Gordon?"

"Yes. Mr. Craven had—business relations with them, I believe. They forced their way upstairs, declaring they must see him. When he came down they were waiting for him in here—in shadow. Smith stepped out and said something to him in a low tone—I didn't hear. Mr. Craven shook his head and made an inaudible reply. Smith lost his temper at that, and said aloud, 'You lie! Permit me to present you with this token of our esteem.'"

"And that was—" Quoin prompted.

"This," said the woman, pointing down to Craven's clenched right hand.

With an exclamation of surprise Quoin bent over and, after some difficulty with the stiffening fingers, stood up, exhibiting a knave of spades.

"And then?"

"Nothing. They went away, Smith and Gordon, by the basement."

"There was a quarrel—blows were struck?"

"No. Mr. Craven said something to this effect, 'If that is your decision, very well—so be it!' Smith merely laughed unpleasantly, called Gordon, and turned down the basement stairs. Afterward I heard the gate slam as they left."

"And Craven—"

"He stood looking at the card, swaying and mumbling to himself. I wondered if he had been drinking. Then I noticed he was holding one hand to his side, as though his heart was paining him. I was alarmed, and asked if I could do anything. He looked at me as if he didn't know me, took a step or two this way, and suddenly fell as if he had been shot. And immediately I telephoned for a doctor—"

"I understand, Mrs. Ellsworthy." For an instant Quoin contemplated the knave of spades, frowning thoughtfully. "Odd," he mused, looking up at Traft, "odd how these things run. It's not a month now since an Italian in a low coffee house up on One Hundred and Tenth street left his chair for a minute, with his hat on it by way of reservation. When he returned and picked up the hat there was a playing card beneath it—the death card—in his case the four of hearts. Five minutes later he was shot dead where he sat. It only goes to show how the criminal imagination inclines to melodrama—give your victim warning, so that he may die a dozen imaginary deaths before you kill him. In this case Craven's heart spoiled their fun; but the chances are he would never have got back to his hotel alive."

He paused, looked pityingly down at the dead man, sighed, "Well—poor devil!" then, unfolding a handkerchief, placed it gently over the livid and distorted mask. "Better not move him till the doctor comes; though I fancy we can save you the trouble of an inquest, Mrs. Ellsworthy. And we'll do our best to keep it out of the papers. We'd better draw the portieres while Peter gets Miss Craven out of the house. Yes, that's your job, Peter; but better not tell her anything until you get her away. Take her to Mrs. Beggarstaff—don't you think?"

"Yes," agreed Peter, "for a few days or weeks—as long as she needs to get over it."

"And then?" asked Quoin curiously.

"Why," said Peter in surprise, "didn't you know we were going to be married?"

(THE END.)

Prophetic.

Sir Hubert Herkomer, the well-known artist, used to tell an amusing story of a London art dealer. This man had two beautiful reproductions of the painting "The Approaching Storm."

One of these pictures he placed in the show window, but it did not sell. At length, in order to draw attention to the picture, he put a card on it on which he printed the words, "The Approaching Storm, especially suitable for a wedding present."

Alkali Salts.

Alkali salts follow water when the course is downward and flowing to lower levels, but as well it rises to the surface by capillarity, and when the water evaporates the salts remain fixed and we see the alkali on the surface.

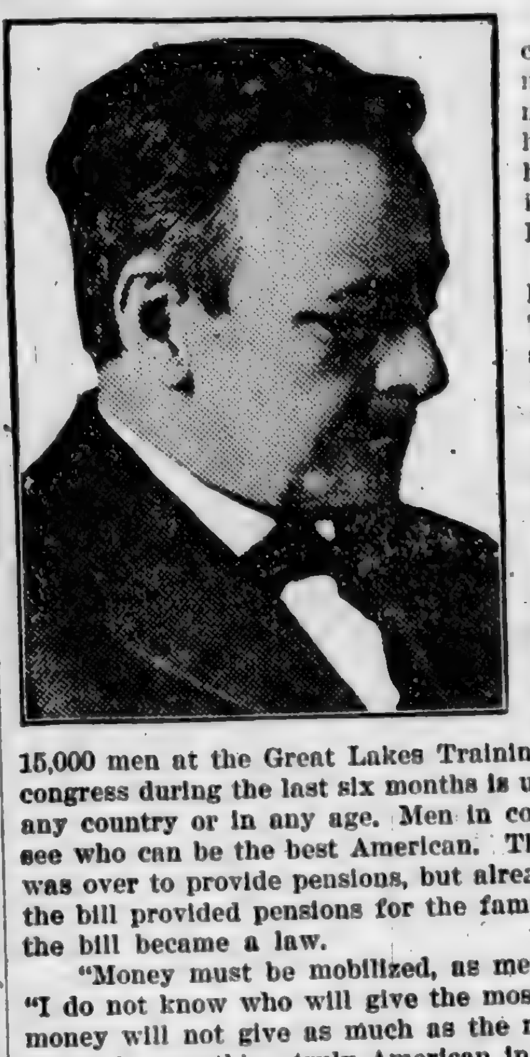
SECRETARY TALKS OF AMERICANISM



"In this crisis we are all Democrats, we are all Republicans. The man who draws party lines now is no American. The man who serves his country best during the war serves his party best," said Secretary Daniels of the navy to members of the Iroquois club at Chicago.

The secretary's address followed his visit to the Great Lakes Naval Training station, which he described as the "greatest naval training station in the world." He paid a high tribute to Captain Moffet, under whose direction the training station has expanded from a capacity of 2,100 to one of 17,000 men.

"The fiction prevails that the navy must be anchored in the ocean," continued the secretary, "but our navy is safely moored in the confidence and trust of the American people. The most beautiful and inspiring sight I ever witnessed was the drill of the 15,000 men at the Great Lakes Training station this morning. The record of congress during the last six months is unequaled for constructive legislation in any country or in any age. Men in congress are striving with each other to see who can be the best American. This congress did not wait until the war was over to provide pensions, but already the insurance bill is in effect. And the bill provided pensions for the families of 28 men who were killed before the bill became a law.

"Money must be mobilized, as men have been," continued the secretary. "I do not know who will give the most money, but the one who gives all his money will not give as much as the man who gives his life for his country. There is something truly American in going to the wage earners and asking them to invest in government bonds to carry on the war.

"It is a great national venture, in which every man is interested, and, excepting a few dissenters, negligible in number, the nation is united and determined to prosecute the war until victory is assured."

SOLDIER RISES TO HIGH RANK

The elevation of Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood to the position of ranking general of the regular army has been spectacular. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he was personal physician to President McKinley with the rank of captain in the regular establishment. He was commissioned colonel of volunteers and recruited the famous Rough Riders regiment of which ex-President Theodore Roosevelt was the lieutenant colonel.

On July 8, 1898, he was made brigadier general of volunteers for services at Las Guasimas and San Juan hill, and on December 7 of the same year was promoted to major general, thereby rising from captain to major general in five months. In April of the next year he was discharged from the volunteers and made a brigadier general in the regular establishment. Eight months later he was made major general in the regular army. In 1898 he was awarded a congressional medal of honor for distinguished services while serving in the medical corps in the 1886 campaign against the Apache Indians. On December 12, 1899, he was appointed military governor of Cuba and served in that position until the island was turned over to the Republic of Cuba in 1902.

RANKS HIGH IN SIGNAL SERVICE

© HARRIS & EWING

Col. Charles M'K. Saltzman, assistant to chief signal officer, was born in Iowa October 18, 1871, and appointed to the Military academy from that state in 1892. Upon his graduation in 1896 was appointed to the Fifth cavalry and served on the staff of General Merriam, commander of the department of Colorado. He was an honor graduate from the Signal school in 1906.

During the campaign in Santiago, Cuba, he was attached to the First cavalry and participated in the battle at Guasamis on June 24, 1898, in which the Rough Riders participated. On February 2, 1901, he was made a captain to the Signal corps and assigned to the Philippines, where he served on the staff of General Wood.

He was sent as a delegate from the United States to London to attend the international radio conference in 1912, which perfected a treaty formulating international rules for radio telegraphy. In 1914 he was attached to the department of the East and in 1915 was made signal officer of the command in the Panama Canal zone.

CANADA'S GREATEST AIR-FIGHTER

"It gives me special pleasure to present to you, gentlemen of Canada and of the United States, Canada's greatest air-fighter. He is twenty-three years old and two weeks ago returned from the battlefront of France, where he had taken personal part in 110 air battles, bringing down 47 airplanes and two observation balloons of the enemy. One of his most extraordinary achievements was the destruction of nine Hun airplanes within two hours of a single day and the bombing of an airdrome so successfully as to win all the most coveted military honors Great Britain has to bestow for extraordinary valor. His grateful country has bestowed upon him the Victoria Cross, the War Cross and the Distinguished Service Order twice, and has promoted him to be a major. Major Bishop, I am told, is the only man to whom the king of England has ever awarded all these honors at one and the same time. Major Bishop has now come here on the way to Canada, having been appointed a chief instructor in aerial gunnery to the Royal Flying corps. He is a native of Owen Sound, Ontario, and I am proud of the fact that his birthplace is not very far from my own." With these words Thomas D. Neelands, president of the Canadian club, described and welcomed the guest of honor at their recent banquet at New York.

Indiana Brevities

Logansport.—The American Fan company of this city, formerly of Kokomo, has been placed in the hands of a receiver.

Greensburg.—J. C. Reddick of Indianapolis, who has been here several weeks representing the Studebaker Automobile corporation, has been transferred to the Louisville branch. The transfer comes in the way of an advancement for Reddick.

Peru.—E. A. Gould, who has been appointed fuel director in Miami county, is a retired railroad man.

Warsaw.—Chaplain James M. Eakins of the One Hundred Thirty-seventh field artillery (Third regiment), has arrived from Hartlesburg, Miss. He was called home by the sickness of his wife's mother.

Frankfort. — Forty-six enlistments have been received for the proposed Frankfort battery of the new Second Indiana artillery being formed here. Jesse J. Killmer, in charge of the recruiting, was the first to enlist.

Alexandria. — Thirty-three high school boys have pledged themselves to earn $10 each this winter for the construction of Y. M. C. A. buildings in France, England, Russia and Switzerland for the American soldiers. The superintendent of schools has consented to permit the boys to work on farms until the money is earned.

Huntington.—First Lieut. Ivan B. Smith, son of Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Smith of this city, is the only Indiana officer in the newly-created dental corps to be picked for the special schooling in oral surgery and plastic reconstruction of jaws and faces opened by the medical corps. Lieutenant Smith is now at Philadelphia in the special school.

Hartford City.—Action on the 31 remaining cases not passed on by the conscription board has been announced. Eight of the number were certified, making a total of 41 certified for service out of 150.

Newcastle.—George Murray Smith, son of Dr. and Mrs. George H. Smith, and Horace B. Upham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Upham of Newcastle, have won medals and promotion in the United States marines for their marksmanship in rifle practice.

Newcastle.—The campaign to raise $1,200 as Henry county's quota for war camp recreation work is under way.

Sullivan.—Mrs. Mary A. Linkenhoker has received a letter from her son, Lieut. Robert Linkenhoker, now with the United States air service, telling her he is in southern Italy.

Sullivan.—A county drive to raise $8,500 for Y. M. C. A. war work was begun at a dinner at the Christian church, to which leading business men of Sullivan county were invited. More than 200 attended.

Lawrenceburg.—The sum of $142,606.68 was collected by the internal revenue collector from the three local distilleries during the month just passed for tax on 1,351 barrels of alcohol and whisky. During October, 1916, $756,353.48 was collected on 12,446 barrels of whisky and alcohol, there being a shortage over October, last year, of $613,746.80 of tax, and 11,095 less barrels shipped.

Franklin.—Johnson county corn growers captured $500 out of $1,000 offered in cash prizes at the Keylesville (Mo.) state corn show. The show was open to the world.

Terre Haute.—The Chamber of Commerce here has appropriated $600 as a guaranty to bring one of the 30 woman agricultural agents to be appointed by Purdue university to Vigo county.

Rushville.—Ministers of the Indiana M. E. conference conferred here over plans to raise $50,000 toward the endowment for Moores Hill college, which will be moved to Evansville.

South Bend.—The police here received from the Chicago police department word that a coat and bankbook, with the name and address of Benjamin H. Geyer of this city, had been found on the shore of Lake Michigan.

Grensburg.—Children of the Presbyterian Sunday school here are anxious to do their bit. Despite the universal desire for candy and sweets, the school voted unanimously not to have them at the Christmas tree entertainment.

Muncie.—The proprietors of every hotel and restaurant in Muncie, except one restaurant, have signed pledges to heed the requests of the national food administrator concerning the observance of meatless and wheatless days.

Boonville.—James Southwood, age fifty-five, was killed in the Knight Strip coal mine by a large slide.

Terre Haute.—William W. Harvey, age seventy-five, a Civil war veteran, was killed by a passenger train at a C. & E. I. crossing. He leaves a daughter.

Four recruits for the army were accepted at South Bend and were sent to Indianapolis for final examination.

Huntington.—The Bippus Tile company has asked C. B. Williams, county fuel director for fuel, to continue operation of its plant.

Henry W. Roberts age forty-three, is dead at the New Albany city hospital of internal injuries received when his autotruck overturned on an embankment on Paoli pike. He leaves a widow and four children.

Clarence Layton, private, alleged to be a deserter from Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, was taken in charge by officers at his home at Madison. He was returned to the camp by Chief of Police Jenkins Saturday.

Greensburg.—Chief of Police Johnson issued orders prohibiting the soaping of windows Halloween night.

Red Cross Department

The sewing room is now nicely located in the reception room of the K. of P. hall. We are permitted to use this room through the courtesy and patriotism of the K. of P. members and their generosity is appreciated by all Red Cross workers. This hall has one of the finest interiors, if not the finest, of any hall in DeKalb county and the trustees ask that children not doing work be not allowed for in playing about the hall the woodwork and walls might be damaged.

At present we have plenty of yarn, both grey and Khaki, and any one desiring to knit may get yarn at the work room on Thursdays or at any other time at the home of Mrs. F. R. Bowman.

All donations and money received from entertainments, etc. remains in the hands of the St. Joe Red Cross treasury to buy material to make supplies for soldiers and sailors. Of the membership fee only is a per cent sent away for county and national work.

The Red Cross Benefit Fair, under the direction of Charles Koch, will be held in Widney's Opera House November 22, with an auction sale in the evening.

E. R. Kinsey, chairman of the soliciting committees has appointed Mrs. Chloe Hart, Mrs. Effie Jackson, Mrs. Leona Mason and Mrs. Ada Bassett to solicit St. Joe for eatables and fancy work, including plain aprons, etc.

The committee to canvas Concord Twp., is as follows:—Ray Herrick, O. K. Shull, Melvin Herrick, John Knight, Sam Mumaw, Byron Widney, Wm. Maxwell and Wm. Hamilton. This committee will work the first of next week and will be prepared to take donations at the time of solicitation, thus saving an extra canvas.

Mrs. Lena Meek will have charge of the popcorn booth and the entertainment committee is Mr. and Mrs. Fred Jenkins.

This Fair deserves the patronage of all loyal patriots.

The abovs named soliciting committees will meet at the home of F. R. Bowman, Friday evening at 7 o'clock.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

SATURDAY NOV. 24

DE LAVAL

SERVICE DAY

at the Cash Cream Station-Buckingham Building

For the benefit of all users of DeLaval Cream Separators we have established a DELAVAL SERVICE DAY.

On this date we shall be glad to have any DeLaval user bring his separator to our room for a complete and careful inspection and adjustment, which will be made free of charge. Should any parts, due to unusual wear or accident, need to be replaced, this will be done, the only expense being for the price of the new parts used.

A DeLaval Service man will be with us to assist with this work. Bring in your Separator and receive the benefit of his advice on the care and operation of your machine, as well as the free service. It is our wish, and that of the DeLaval Company, that every user of a DeLaval Separator get the maximum of efficency at the minimum of cost.

Remove one bolt in the center of the machine and bring the upper part only with the skimming bowl and trays. No stand is required.

Game Violators Pinched

Five violators of the game law have been arrested in DeKalb County and received a fine of $25 each at the hands of the squire, Chester Hodge, at Auburn last Saturday.

Walter Hose, whose home is three and a half miles south of Butler, had two skunk hides in his possession and when arraigned he admitted his guilt.

Charles Riser, living three and a half miles east of Butler, was found to have five raccoon hides and four skunk hides. He also acknowledg- the truth of the affidavit, although he claimed ignorance of a violation of the law.

During Saturday afternoon three more were arrested in the person of Verne Wise, a blacksmith at Waterloo, and George Beiber and George Pulver in Auburn. At the Wise and Beiber places they found raccoon hides, while there were skunk skins at Pulver's.

Tax Levy For 1918

The work of compiling the tax levies for the cities, towns and townships of DeKalb County has been completed by Auditor, S. P. Nelson, and they reveal some very interesting figures for comparison. St. Joe is the lowest levy in the county with a tax of $2.78 per $100 valuation. Of the townships, Concord has the highest, $2.62, due to the Bond issue and stone road.

The rates are given below:

Butler township $2.12; Poll $1.50
Jackson township, $2.07; Poll $1.50.
Concord township, $2.62; Poll $2.50.
Spencer township, $2 22; Poll $2.
Newville towhship, $2 22; Poll $1.25.
Stafford township, $1.59; Poll $2.
Wilmington township, $1.89; Poll $2.00.
Union township $2.21; Poll $1.50.
Richland township, $1.76; Poll $1.50.
Fairfield township, $1.89; Poll $1.50.
Smithfield township, $2.30; Poll $2.00.
Franklin township $2.31; Poll $1.
Troy township, $1.99; Poll $1.
Keyser township, $1.99; Poll $2.
Grant township $1 68; Poll $1.50
Auburn $4 21; Poll $2. Dog $2.
Waterloo, $3.70; Poll $2.50; Dog $2.
Butler, $3.30; Poll $3; Dog $1.

Union township, $.30.
Smithfield township $.40.
Franklin township $.60.
Auburn $.32.
Ashley $.40.

Newlin At Auburn.

The Rev. O. A. Newlin of Winona Lake, Indiana, and two members of his party will begin a meeting at the M. E. Church at Auburn on November 25. The company is well known to many of the St. Joe people and many will arrange to attend. The Auburn people are fortunate in having secured this company to conduct their meetings and their whole ambition is that men and women have a real experience and that they know definitely of a change having taken place in their life.

Beware of Fake Remedy

DeKalb County farmers are asked to be careful and on the lookout for a poultry medicine agent making his way through the country and selling a poultry remedy claimed as a cure-all for the following diseases: Cholera, Roup, Gapes, Germs, White Diarrhoea. This famous remedy is known as "Stop-It." The following statement is enough to condemn it at the very start: "It prevents all diseases known to the poultry yard. It is good for all varieties, old and young." Such statements are absolutely absurd and one should beware of listening to any agent who makes such claims. The U. S. Government at this time is urging people not to buy of unknown and unauthorized agents traveling through the country, but instead to secure their supplies from reliable sources.

The directions on the bottle of the aforesaid remedy are too indefinite to be worth anything. A large number of people in a certain section of DeKalb County have bought from four to twelve bottles of this wonderful remedy at $1.00 per bottle, and are now most anxious to get their money back.

The name of the company given on the bottle is that of Karl's Remedy Company, Indianapolis, and shows no street address whatever. It is hoped that farmers will not part with any more money for this alleged famous poultry remedy until a report is received from the State Chemist of Indiana, where a chemical analysis is being made, nor use it for their poultry until further notice is given.

A College Man's View

The "International" is the stock man's school of efficiency. Never has there been a time when there was such need of efficient methods in meat production. Never has there been such need of a marshaling of all resources and all forces for production on the farms of the United States. The "International" will impress lessons of conservation and efficiency in production of incalculable value. These lessons will have a special significance in view of the unusual conditions now existing. No man engaged in a great enterprise such as farming and food production, at a time when the best results are vital to the nation's existence, can afford to fail to secure information that will add to his efficiency and strengthen the service that he can render. This is the meaning of the International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago the first week in December.

In Business For Self.

Walter Zonker has purchased a meat market at Kendallville of J. S. Hart, and took possession last week. The market is one of the best in the town and is completely equipped with electrical machinery necessary for a market in a town of the size of Kendallville. Clarence has taken charge of the St. Joe market and Asa Shuff is helping in the work. A new display case was put in last week which adds much to the handiness of the local market.

Victims of Cupids Dart.

Jay Bleeks, 36, carpenter, and Minnie Reasoner, 40, St. Joe, were united in marriage by the Rev. S. E. Slater of the Lutheran church, Auburn, on last Thursday afternoon. They will make their home in St. Joe.

St. Joe Man Is Engiheer.

The following is taken from the Fort Collins, Colorado Courier of last week:

There is no vacancy in the city engineer's office, especially as far as the head of the office is concerned. W. B. Cheek, in charge of the office since the first of the month, has been named city engineer and his appointment dates back to the first of November. In applying for the position Mr Cheek stated that he had had eight years of experience in steam, electric, sewer, irrigation and civic improvements in the engineering line in addition to his work with the Portland Cement Manufacturers' Association. His references included big corporations and the cities of Fort Wayne Indiana and Galion, Ohio.

The Concord Ladies Aid Society will serve Supper on Thanksgiving Evening in the Church Basement. Price 25 Cents. A good supper assured

THE FOOD CONTROL ORDER IS ISSUED

H. E. Barnard Names Fifty Classes of Edibles That Are Affected.

MANDATE MUST BE OBEYED

Wholesalers and Retailers Can Sell Only at a Fair Margin Above the Actual Cost of the Produce.

Indianapolis.—Foods subject to federal control and the relation of food retailers to the new federal food control law are set out in an order issued by H. E. Barnard, state food administrator. Half a hundred food classes are named in the order, which is declared to be virtually a law, and the food administrator intends to see to it that all dealers sell the controlled commodities at a "fair margin above actual cost" and "without regard to market conditions or today's market value."

According to the administration, "but one warning will be given before prosecution is begun" against the violators of the law. The law reads in part:

"The following items are subject to government control, applying to both wholesale and retail dealers in foodstuffs, whether dealers are operating under licenses or not:

"Wheat, wheat flour, rye or rye flour, barley or barley flour, oats, oatmeal or rolled oats; corn, corn grits, cornmeal, hominy, corn flour, starch from corn, corn oil, corn sirup or glucose; rice, rice flour; dried beans, pea seed or dried peas, cotton seed, cotton-seed oil, cotton seed-cake or cotcont-seed meal; peanut oil or peanut meal, soya bean, soya-bean meal; palm oil or copra oil; oleomargarine, lard, lard substitutes, olio oil or cooking fats; milk, butter or cheese; condensed, evaporated or powdered milk; fresh, canned or cured beef, pork or mutton; poultry or eggs; fresh or frozen fish; fresh fruits or vegetables; canned peas, dried beans, tomatoes, corn, salmon or sardines; dried: prunes, apples, peaches or raisins, and sugar, sirups or molasses.

Fair Profit Assured.

"All dealers are required to sell the above controlled items at a fair margin above actual cost. This means to sell the food controlled items on a basis of normal and reasonable advance over actual cost, without regard to market conditions or today's market value."

"Interpreted, the order means," reads a statement issued by the administration with the order, "that the retailers will not be permitted to take advantage of an artificially stimulated market to realize a margin of profit larger than would obtain were the market to remain stable.

"Although the state food administration has no direct control over the small retailer, it is wholly within his power to govern wholesale distribution within the state and by this means he will be in position to direct all retailing. Therefore his executive orders have the full force and effect of law, under the Lever bill which created federal food control."

Employment Bureaus to Co-operate.

Louis F. Post, assistant secretary of the department of labor at Washington, has written E. C. Thomas, superintendent of the state employment bureau, asking the most comprehensive co-operation of the state agencies in collecting unemployed men for work in the shipbuilding yards of the country. The total tonnage called for in 1918 under the government shipbuilding program is 6,567,100, according to the letter, and this represents an increase of eight times the tonnage built in 1916.

"Within the history of manufacturing in the United States, no similar demand for constructive activity has ever been presented, and coming, as this does in the midst of recruiting of nearly 2,000,000 men for the army and navy, besides the expansion of munitions making an equally unprecedented scale, the task of finding competent men to build the ships will strain the capacity of the country," Mr. Post wrote.

The plans for obtaining the large number of men needed involves united action on the part of all employment agencies. The state council of defense is being asked by the federal government to support the work of the employment agencies and to set up additional public employment offices in cities not having such offices. Chambers of commerce and similar organizations also are being called on to do this work.

Mr. Thomas said that the Indianapolis employment bureau, during the last quarter, ending November 1, had given employment to 4,614 men and 26 women.

Price of Hogs.

The announcement by officials of the federal food administration, fixing virtually a minimum price of $15.50 a hundredweight on live hogs, had a stabilizing influence on the market generally. The price movement throughout the last week was within narrow limits. A maximum decline of 20 cents to 30 cents, was recovered late, despite an increase in receipts.

This gradual upward climb, according to local live stock commission men, reflects the strong undertone of the market.

Government Crop Report.

A summary of preliminary estimates of crop production for the state of Indiana as compiled by the bureau of crop estimates is as follows:

Corn—Production this year, 203,000,000 bushels; last year (December estimate), 174,658,000 bushels.

Wheat—This year, 31,588,000 bushels; last year (December estimate), 19,440,000 bushels.

Oats—This year, 76,440,000 bushels; last year (December estimate), 52,500,000 bushels.

Tobacco—This year, 14,100,000 pounds; last year (December estimate, 13,764,000 pounds.

Potatoes—This year, 8,460,000 bushels; last year (December estimate), 3,256,000 bushels.

All Hay—This year, 3,077,000 tons; last year (December estimate), 3,403,000 tons.

Apples (agricultural crop).—This year, 1,970,000 barrels of three bushels; last year (December estimate), 1,307,000 barrels.

Peaches.—This year, 592,000 bushels; last year (December estimate), 888,000 pounds.

Cheaper Rates to Be Rewarded.

The public service commission established a precedent in rate fixing for electric utilities and in an order issued applied a principle intended to put a premium on efficient plant and corporation management by permitting a sliding scale increase of return on capital investment with each decrease in operating expense where the decrease results in lower rates to consumer. The application of the principles to Hoosier public service corporations was heartily approved by Gov. James P. Goodrich in a conference with Ernest I. Lewis, chairman of the commission.

The order was issued in the case of the Hydro-Electric Light and Power company's petition to fix rates for it at Connersville, East Connersville and nearby towns. The commission fixed what it has termed a "basic service rate" for the company. This rate is effective as of October 1, and follows:

Light Rates.

	Gross.	Net.
First 20 kilowatt hours.........	.10	.09
Next 80 kilowatt hours.........	.08	.07 1-5
Next 200 kilowatt hours.........	.06	.05 2-5
All over 200 kilowatt hours....	.05	.04½
Minimum a month, 50 cents.

The power rate is $1.10 a month on each horsepower of maximum demand plus 2 cents gross or one and nine-tenths net. The demand charge is to be the minimum charge a month with the demand based on not less than 50 per cent of the rated capacity.

"Basic Rate Return" Fixed.

The order then fixed 6½ per cent as the "basic rate return" for the utility with the stipulation that for each 10 per cent reduction in the "basic service rate" the company shall be entitled to an increase in its "basic rate return" of one-half of one per cent a year. Also there is the stipulation that for each 10 per cent increase in the "basic service rate," or in the rates established by reductions as provided, the company shall be reduced in its "basic rate return," or the return attained by the reduction as provided, one-half of one per cent a year.

The order goes on as follows:

"It is further ordered that the Hydro-Electric Light and Power company may apply for the application of above increases and reductions in percentages of 5 per cent reduction or increases in said 'basic service rate,' and one-quarter of one per cent increase or reduction in said 'basic rate return.'"

And then again as follows:

"It is futher ordered and specified that, in the application of said 10 per cent decreases or increases in the 'basic service rate,' for power, the public service commission shall determine whether the 10 per cent shall be reduced from or added to the primary rate, or to or from the rate per K. W. H. for electric energy; and said public service commission shall also determine whether said 10 per cent shall be reduced or added to the primary 'basis service rate' for electric light shall be distributed other than by a flat per cent reduction or increase on all rates for lighting purposes.

Sale of Securities.

"It is further ordered that all securities of the Hydro-Electric Light and Power company hereinafter authorized by the public service commission of Indiana to be issued shall first, under such conditions as may be approved by the public service commission, be submitted to the public at public auction and sold at the best price obtainable therefore, delivery on bid, however, being conditional on the approval by the public service commission of Indiana of the price offered, and any premium offered and paid for such securities shall go into the nonoperating revenues of said company."

In the earlier pages of the order the following aim is called to mind:

"The aim sought in the following order is to create conditions of greater fairness and better relations between utilities and the public they serve, and earnest efforts should be made by all here affected to work to the accomplishment of this purpose under a plan wherein both share benefits and penalties alike and a mutuality of interest and incentive is sought."

Seed Corn for Next Year.

How and where to get sufficient seed corn to supply the needs of Indiana farmers for next year's planting was the important question considered at a conference at the statehouse of the seed stocks committee of the state food production and conservation committee, and as a result of the conference an appeal was issued to the farmers of the state to use the greatest care and vigilance in the accumulation of the right kind of seed corn and in sufficient quantities to supply the increased demand next year.

Seymour.—Clarence Brown, a railroad man, was caught and held under his automobile for two hours when it upset after going over a 15-foot embankment. He was unable to move the car, and had to dig his way out as he was alone and no one passed after the accident. Brown escaped serious injury.

Madison.—William Smith of Shelby township suffered the loss of his right hand when it was caught in a threshing machine. It was so badly mangled that amputation was necessary.

Elkhart.—Grover C. Anderson, who was sent from here to Camp Taylor September 22 and discharged as physically unfit, was killed by falling from a Lake Shore train at Chesterton. An exemption card served to identify him. His nearest relative is a sister, Mrs. James Thomas, of Austin, Tex.

Peru.—James Snell and members of his family of Twelve Mile were caught under their automobile when it upset in a ditch two miles south of Peru. Mr. Snell, who was driving, and his son, age twelve, were injured seriously, and were taken to the county hospital. The accident was due to a defective steering gear.

Huntington.—John Kahl, age seventy-two, a Civil war veteran, who lived alone at Andrews, was killed by a Wabash freight train. Kahl is slightly deaf and was standing on the track with his back to the approaching train.

Huntington.—Mrs. George Ellison of this city suffered a fracture of her hand and severe bruises about her body when a blind horse she was driving ran away.

Huntington.—The two-year-old son of Charles Baymen and the two-year-old daughter of James Layman were scalded severely when one of them upset a tub of hot water at the Baymen home.

Huntington.—Gerald Hadley, three years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Otis Hadley, was burned severely when his clothes caught fire from a candle.

Terre Haute.—The home-coming banquet of the Terre Haute Masonic lodge, No. 19, was attended by 500 Masons from all parts of the United States. The chief speakers were Rev. George Darcie of Kansas and Walter Murphy of Cincinnati, O.

Petersburg.—Safeblowers at Stendal robbed the post office of $10 in stamps and money. They also robbed Harmeyer & Henke's store of $5 in money and merchandise worth $100.

Greencastle.—The Y. M. C. A. war fund campaign was started Thursday when a mass meeting was held in the courthouse. Dr. H. A. Gobin presided and chairmen were named for each of the townships. An address was made by William A. Collings of Crawfordsville.

Huntington.—John H. Fox, a farmer, suffered a fractured finger and torn ligaments in his hand when a sheep he was attempting to hold caught the hand between its body and a door frame.

Nashville.—Sarah Spicer, seventy years old, daughter of Virgil Spicer, a merchant, was burned seriously about the face when she upset a kettle of boiling water.

Greencastle.—E. M. Cole, foreman of the steel construction gang on the new high school building here, fell about twenty feet and suffered serious injuries to his back and head.

LISTS 9,000,000 FOR U. S. SERVICE

Provost Marshal Gives Rules Regarding Liability for Military Duty.

Washington, Nov. 15. — The five classes into which 9,000,000 men registered for military duty—and those who are registered hereafter—are defined and the order in which they will be called for service were officially announced in the provost marshal general's questionnaire which every registered man must fill out and file. The order shows some change from the tentative draft published some time ago.

Contrary to some published reports, it does not exempt married men as a class, but it does place married men with dependent wives and children far down on the list of liables. In fact, the questionnaire indicates that only men of the first class will be called to the colors, except in the gravest emergency. The five official classifications of registrants follow:

CLASS I.

(A)—Single man without dependent relatives.

(B)—Married man, with or without children, or father of motherless children, who has habitually failed to support his family.

(C)—Married man dependent on wife for support.

(D)—Married man, with or without children, or father of motherless children; man not usefully engaged family supported by income independent of his labor.

(E)—Unskilled farm laborer.

(F)—Unskilled industrial laborer.

Registrant by or in respect of whom no deferred classification is claimed or made.

Registrant who fails to submit questionnaire and in respect of whom no deferred classification is claimed or made.

All registrants not included in any other division in this schedule.

CLASS II.

(A)—Married man with children or father of motherless children, where such wife or children of such motherless children are not mainly dependent upon his labor for support for the reason that there are other reasonably certain sources of adequate support (excluding earnings or possible earnings from the labor of the wife) available, and that the removal of the registrant will not deprive such dependents of support.

(B)—Married men, without children, whose wife, although the registrant is engaged in a useful occupation, is not mainly dependent upon his labor for support, for the reason that the wife is skilled in some special class of work which she is physically able to perform and in which she is employed or in which there is an immediate opening for her under conditions that will enable her to support herself decently and without suffering or hardship.

(C)—Necessary skilled farm laborer in necessary agricultural enterprise.

(D)—Necessary skilled industrial laborer in necessary industrial enterprise.

CLASS III.

(A)—Man with dependent children (not his own but toward whom he stands in relation of parent).

(B)—Man with dependent helpless brothers or sisters.

(D)—County or municipal officer.

(E)—Highly trained fireman or policeman, at least three years in service of municipality.

(F)—Necessary custom house clerk.

(G)—Necesary employee of United States in transmission of the mails.

(H)—Necessary artificer or workman in United States armory or arsenal.

(I)—Necessary employe in service of United States.

(J)—Necessary assistant, associate or hired manager of necessary agricultural enterprise.

(K)—Necessary highly specialized, technical or mechanical expert of necessary industrial enterprise.

(L)—Necessary assistant or associate manager of necessary industrial enterprise.

CLASS IV.

(A)—Man whose wife or children are mainly dependent on his labor for support.

(B)—Mariner actually employed on sea service or citizen or merchant in the United States.

(C)—Necessary sole managing, controlling or directing head of necessary agricultural enterprise.

(D)—Necessary sole managing, controlling or directing head of necessary industrial enterprise.

CLASS V.

(A)—Officers—Legislative, executive or judicial of the United States or of state, territory or District of Columbia.

(B)—Regular or duly ordained minister of religion.

(C)—Student, who on May 18, 1917, was preparing for ministry in recognized school.

(D)—Persons in military or naval service of United States.

(E)—Alien enemy.

(F)—Resident alien (not an enemy) who claims exemption.

(G)—Person totally and permanently physically or mentally unfit for military service.

(H)—Person morally unfit to be a soldier of the United States.

(I)—Licensed pilot, actually employed in the pursuit of his vocation.

Member of well-recognized religious sect or organization, organized and existing on May 18, 1917, whose then existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein.

The questions on the subject of dependents are framed to meet every possible circumstance and to draw out every bit of information that might be of value to the boards in fixing the class to which a man is to be assigned.

Seven days are allowed registrants after receipt of the questionnaire to fill it out and return it to the local board.

Endless Supply.

"I suppose only a limited amount of this stock is being offered—the old wheeze."

"No, we're offering an unlimited amount of it," said the promoter truthfully. "We'll continue to print it as long as we have any sale for it."

The Sort.

"She made a beautiful sight standing there, gracefully beckoning him to come to her."

"No doubt; a regular motion picture."

PRUDENCE SAYS SO

By ETHEL HUESTON

Author of "PRUDENCE OF THE PARSONAGE"

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

This charming story depicts the life of five loveable girls in the Methodist parsonage at Mount Mark, Iowa. They preside over the home and make things interesting for their widowed father. Prudence, the eldest, is the "little mother" of the family. Fairy is her able lieutenant. Carol and Lark, the twins, fill the place with mischief. Connie, the "baby," aids and abets them in every prank they play. This is a wholesome tale, with dashes of joy and sorrow, love and laughter, light and shadow.

THE EDITOR.

CHAPTER I.

—1—

The Chaperon.

"Girls—come down! Quick!—I want to see how you look!"

Prudence stood at the foot of the stairs, deftly drawing on her black silk gloves—gloves still good in Prudence's eyes, though Fairy had long since discarded them as unfit for service. There was open anxiety in Prudence's expression, and puckers of worry perpendicularly creased her white forehead.

"Girls!" she called again. "Girls, are you deaf?"

A door opened in the hallway above, and Connie started down the stairs, fully dressed, except that she limped along in one stocking foot, her shoe in her hand.

"It's so silly of you to get all dressed before you put on your shoes, Connie," Prudence reproved her as she came down. "It wrinkles you up so. But you do look nice. Wasn't it dear of the Ladies' Aid to give you that dress for your birthday? Do be careful, dear, and don't get mussed before we come back. Aunt Grace will be so much gladder to live with us if we all look sweet and clean. And you'll be good, won't you, Connie, and—Twins, will you come?"

"They are sewing up the holes in each other's stockings," Connie vouchsafed. "They're all dressed."

The twins, evidently realizing that Prudence's patience was near the breaking point, started downstairs for approval, a curious procession. All dressed as Connie had said, and most charming, but they walked close together, Carol stepping gingerly on one foot and Lark stooping low, carrying a needle with great solicitude—the thread reaching from the needle to a small hole on Carol's instep.

"What on earth are you doing?"

"I'm sewing up the holes in Carol's stocking," Lark explained.

Prudence frowned disapprovingly. "It's a very bad habit to sew up holes in your stockings when you are wearing them. Mercy, Lark, you have too much powder on!"

"I know it—Carol did it. She said she wanted me to be of intellectual pallor." Lark mopped her face with one hand.

"You look nice, twins." Prudence advanced a step, her eyes on Carol's hair, sniffing suspiciously. "Carol, did you curl your hair?"

Carol blushed. "Well, just a little," she confessed. "I thought Aunt Grace would appreciate me more with a crown of frizzy ringlets."

"You'll spoil your hair if you don't leave it alone, and it will serve you right, too. Oh, Fairy, I know Aunt Grace will love you," she cried ecstatically. "You look like a dream, you—"

"Yes—a nightmare," said Carol snippily. "If I saw Fairy coming at me on a dark night I'd—"

"Papa, we'll miss the train!" Then as he came slowly down the stairs, she said to her sisters again anxiously: "Oh, girls, do keep nice and clean, won't you? And be very sweet to Aunt Grace! It's so awfully good of her—to come—and take care of us—" Prudence's voice broke a little. The admission of another to the parsonage mothering hurt her.

Mr. Starr stopped on the bottom step, and with one foot as a pivot, slowly revolved for his daughters' inspection.

"How do I look?" he demanded. "Do you think this suit will convince Grace that I am worth taking care of? Do I look twenty-five dollars better than I did yesterday?"

The girls gazed at him with most adoring approval.

"Father! You look perfectly grand! —Isn't it beautiful?—Of course you looked nicer than anybody else even in the old suit, but—it—well, it was—"

"Perfectly disgracefully shabby," put in Fairy quickly. "Entirely unworthy a minister of your—er—lovely family!"

"I hope none of you have let it out among the members how long I wore that old suit. I don't believe I could face my congregation on Sundays if I thought they were mentally calculating the wearing value of my various garments.—We'll have to go, Prudence."

"And don't muss the house up," begged Prudence, as her father opened the door and pushed her gently out on the step.

The four sisters left behind looked at once another solemnly. It was a serious business—most serious. Connie gravely put on her shoe, and buttoned it. Lark sewed up the last hole in Carol's stocking—Carol balancing herself on one foot with nice precision for the purpose. Then, all ready, they looked at one another again—even more solemnly.

"Well," said Fairy, "let's go in—and wait."

Silently the others followed her in, and they all sat about, irreproachably, on the well-dusted chairs, their hands folded in their smooth and spotless laps.

The silence and the solemnity were very oppressive.

"We look all right," said Carol belliger[illegible]

No one answered.

When the silence continued, Carol's courage waned. "Oh, girls," she whimpered, "isn't it awful? It's the beginning of the end of everything. Outsiders have to come in now and take care of us, and Prudence'll get married, and then Fairy will, and maybe us twins—I mean, we twins. And then there'll only be father and Connie left, and Miss Greet, or someone, will get ahead of father after all—and Connie'll have to live with a stepmother; and—it'll never seem like home any more., and—"

Connie burst into loud and mournful wails.

"You're very silly, Carol," Fairy said sternly. "Prudence will be at the head of things for nearly a year, and—I think we're mighty lucky to get Aunt Grace. It's not many women would be willing to leave a fine, stylish home, with a hundred dollars a month to spend on just herself, and with a maid to wait on her, and come to an ugly old house like this to take care of a preacher and a riotous family like ours. It's very generous of Aunt Grace—very."

"Yes, it is," admitted Lark. "And as long as she was our aunt with her fine home, and her hundred dollars a month, and her maid, I loved her dearly. But—I don't want anybody coming in to manage us. We can manage ourselves. We—"

"We need a chaperon," put in Fairy deftly. "It isn't proper for us to live without one, you know. We're too young. It isn't—conventional."

"And for goodness' sake, Connie," said Carol, "remember and call her our chaperon, and don't talk about a housekeeper. There's some style to a chaperon."

"Yes, indeed," said Fairy cheerfully. "And she wears such pretty clothes, and has such pretty manners that she will be a distinct acquisition to the parsonage. We can put on lots more style, of course. And then it was awfully nice of her to send so much of her good furniture—the piano, for instance, to take the place of that old tin pan of ours. And do you remember, girls, that you mustn't ask her to darn your stockings and wash your handkerchiefs and do your tasks about the house. It would be disgraceful. And be careful not to hint for things you want, for, of course, Aunt Grace will trot off and buy them for you, and papa will not like it. You twins'll have to be very careful to quit dreaming about silk stockings, for instance." There was a tinge of sarcasm in Fairy's voice as she said this.

"Fairy, we did dream about silk stockings—you don't need to believe it if you don't want to. But we did dream about them, just the same!" Carol sighed. "I think I could be more reconciled to Aunt Grace if I thought she'd give me a pair of silk stockings. You know, Fairy, sometimes lately I almost—don't like Aunt Grace—any more."

"That's very foolish and very wicked," declared Fairy. "I love her, dearly. I'm so glad she's come to live with us."

"Are you?" asked Connie innocently. "Then why did you go up in the attic and cry all the morning when Prudence was fixing the room for her?"

Fairy blushed, and caught her under lip between her teeth for a minute. And then, in a changed voice she said, "I—I do love her, and—I am glad—but I keep thinking ahead to when Prudence gets married, and—and—oh, girls, when she is gone it—it won't be any home to me at all!"

For a moment there was a stricken silence.

"Oh, pooh!" Carol said at last, bravely. "You wouldn't want Prue to stick around and be an old maid, would you? I think she's mighty lucky to get a fellow as nice as Jerry Harmer myself. I'll bet you don't make out half as well, Fairy. I think she'd be awfully silly not to gobble him right up while she has a chance. For my own part, I don't believe in old maids. I think it is a religious duty for folks to get married, and—and—you know what I mean—race suicide, you know." She nodded her head sagely, winking one eye in a most intelligent fashion.

"And Aunt Grace is so quiet she'll not be any bother at all," added Lark. "She won't scold a bit.—Maybe Carol and I will get a chance to spend some of our spending money when she takes charge. Prudence confiscates it all for punishment. I think it's going to be lots of fun having Aunt Grace with us."

"I'm going to take my dime and buy her something," Connie announced suddenly.

"I didn't know you had a dime," said Lark.

Connie [illegible] a little. "Yes—oh, yes—" she said, "I've got a dime. I—I hid it. I've got a dime all right."

"It's nearly time," said Fairy restlessly. "Number nine has been on time for two mornings now—so she'll probably be here in time for dinner. It's only ten o'clock now."

"Where'd you get that dime, Connie?"

"Oh, I've had it some time," Connie admitted reluctantly.

"But where have you had it?" inquired Lark. "I thought you acted suspicious some way, so I went around and looked for myself."

"Where did you look?"

The twins laughed gleefully. "Oh, on top of the windows and doors," said Carol.

"How did you know—" began Connie.

"You aren't slick enough for us, Connie. We knew you had some funny place to hide your money, so I gave you that penny and then I went upstairs very noisily so you could hear me, and Lark sneaked around and watched, and saw where you put it. We've been able to keep pretty good track of your finances lately."

Carol rose and looked at herself in the glass. "I'm going upstairs," she said.

"What for?" inquired Lark, rising also.

"I need a little more powder. My nose is shiny."

So the twins went upstairs, and Fairy, after calling out to them to be very careful and not get disheveled, went out into the yard and wandered dolefully about by herself.

Connie meantime decided to get her well-hidden dime and figure out what ten cents could buy for her fastidious and wealthy aunt. Connie was in many ways unique. Her system of money-hiding was born of nothing less than genius, prompted by necessity, for the twins were clever as well as grasping.

The cookstove sat in the darkest and most remote corner of the kitchen, and where the chimney fitted into the wall it was protected by a small zinc plate. This zinc plate protruded barely an inch, but that inch was quite sufficient for coins the size of Connie's, and there, high and secure in the shadowy corner, lay Connie's dime. She went into the kitchen cautiously, careful of her white canvas shoes, and put a chair beside the stove. She had discovered that the dishpan turned upside down on the chair, gave her sufficient height to reach her novel banking place.

But alas for Connie's calculations—Carol was born for higher things than dishwashing, and she had splashed soapsuds on the table. The pan had been set among them—and then, neatly wiped on the inside, it had been hung up behind the table—with the suds on the bottom. And it was upon this same dishpan that Connie climbed so carefully in search of her darling dime.

The result was certain. As she slowly and breathlessly raised herself on tiptoe, steadying herself with the tips of her fingers lightly touching the stovepipe, her foot moved treacherously into the soapy area and slipped. Connie screamed, caught desperately at the pipe, and fell to the floor in a sickening jumble of stovepipe, dishpan and soot beyond her wildest fancies! Her cries brought her sisters flying, and the sight of the blackened kitchen, and the unfortunate child in the midst of disaster, banished from their minds all memory of the coming chaperon, of Prudence's warning words—Connie was in trouble. With sisterly affection they rescued her, and did not hear the ringing of the bell. And when Prudence and her father, with Aunt Grace in tow, despaired of gaining entrance at the hands of the girls, came in unannounced, it was a sorry scene that greeted them. Fairy and the twins were only less sooty than Connie and the kitchen. And Connie wept loudly, her tears making hideous trails upon her blackened face.

"I might have known it," Prudence thought, with sorrow. But her motherly pride vanished before her motherly solicitude, and Connie was soon quieted by her tender ministrations.

"We love you, Aunt Grace," cried Carol earnestly, "but we can't kiss you."

Mr. Starr anxiously scanned the surface of the kitchen table with an eye to future spots on the new suit, and then sat down on the edge of it and laughed as only the young heart and old experience can laugh!

"Disgraced again," he said. "Grace, think well before you take the plunge. Do you dare cast in your fortunes with a parsonage bunch that revels in misfortune? Can you take the responsibility of rearing a family that knows trouble only? This is your last chance. Weigh well your words."

Fairy pursed up her lips, puffing vainly at the soot that had settled upon her face. Then she laughed. "Very true, Aunt Grace," she said. "We admit that we're a luckless family. But we're expecting, with you to help us, to do much better. You see, we've never had half a chance so far, with only father behind us."

The twins revived at this, and joined in the laughter their father led against himself.

Later in the day Prudence drew her aunt to one side and asked softly, "Was it much of a shock to you, Aunt Grace? The family drowned in soot to welcome you? I'm sure you expected to find everything trim and fresh and orderly. Was it a bitter disappointment?"

Aunt Grace smiled brightly. "Why, no, Prudence," she said in her low, slow, even voice. "I really expected something to be wrong! I'd have been disappointed if everything had gone just right!"

CHAPTER II.

Science and Health.

After all, the advent of a chaperon made surprisingly little difference in the life of the parsonage family, but what change there was was all to the good. Their aunt assumed no active directorate over household matters. She just slipped in, happily, unobtrusively, smiling much, saying little.

The members of the Ladies' Aid, who hastened to call, said, "She is perfectly charming—such a fine conversationalist!"

She was always attractively dressed, always self-possessed, always friendly, always good-natured, and the girls found her presence only pleasing. She relieved Prudence, admired Fairy, laughed at the twins, adored Connie.

"Of course, Aunt Grace," Prudence told her sweetly, "we aren't going to be selfish with you. We don't expect you to bury yourself in the parsonage. Whenever you want a trip away for a while, you must feel free to go."

"I shan't want to go," said Aunt Grace quickly.

"Not right away, of course," Prudence agreed. "But you'll find our liveliness tiring. Whenever you do want to go—"

"I don't think I shall want to go at all," she answered. "I like it here. I—I like liveliness."

Then Prudence kissed her gratefully.

For several weeks after her initiation in the parsonage, life rolled along sweetly and serenely. For ten entire and successive days the twins had lived blameless lives. Their voices rang out gladly and sweetly. They treated Connie with a sisterly tenderness and gentleness quite out of accord with their usual drastic discipline. They obeyed the word of Prudence with a cheerful readiness that was startlingly cherubimic. The most distasteful of orders called forth nothing stronger than a bright "Yes, Prudence."

The twins read Mrs. Eddy's "Science and Health" and their amazing behavior in consequence upsets the peace and quiet of the Methodist household. Prudence solves the problem.

WHERE "PEP" WAS NEEDED

Secretary Daniels, Discussing Efficiency, Relates Story of Girl's Advising Beau to Kiss Old Mare.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels is a firm believer in speeding up. Efficiency is the watchword of his department. A big navy can't be built fast enough for him. And he was discussing efficiency and high speed. He wants to cut out red tape.

"Discussion is well and good," said Secretary Daniels, "but the main question is whether it is idle talk or not. Is it practical or is it foolish? Is it like Torkins and his girl?

"Torkins, by the way, was out with his girl during the days before the automobile, when a young man who wanted to be popular would call on his girl with a horse and buggy to take her for a drive. You know, the faster the horse the better the impression.

"Torkins, on his first call, took the girl for a long drive, and when they found themselves in the midst of a country road, he ventured for a kiss.

"'A kiss?' asked the girl. 'What good would a kiss do?'

"'Oh,' replied the embarrassed youth, 'it would make me feel gay and lively.'

"'Well, Charley,' the cold-blooded, unemotional damsel retorted, 'if it is as you say, and we expect to get anywhere before it's time to return home, you'd better get out and kiss the old mare once!'"

Duties of Criticism.

Justly to discriminate, firmly to establish, wisely to prescribe, and honestly to award—these are the true aims and duties of criticism.—Simms.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

INDICTMENT AGAINST ALCOHOL

"The medical profession has been charged with being in favor of the use of alcoholic beverages," says Dr. W. A. Evans, former head of the health department of Chicago. "The charge cannot be sustained. Alcohol for internal use rarely is prescribed by physicians except when such prescribing is done for the purpose of evading some law.

"Theoretically, alcohol is both a medicine and a food. So far as all practical purposes are concerned, it is neither a medicine nor a food. Discussing it as a medicine, alcohol belongs in a group in which there are tropine, aconite, epinephrin and extracts of thyroid. These medicines are so powerful that they are but rarely used.

"Physicians know so little about the mechanism of the sympathetic nervous system, on which most of the effects of these remedies are exerted, that none of them is liable to be generally used within the next few years. In the meanwhile, the old-time uses of alcohol for medicinal purposes have either been discontinued or else they are condemned by the medical profession.

"Alcohol once was used for consumption. It is not used as a cure for this disease now. It once was used as a remedy for blood poisoning—septicaemia and pyemia. It now is known that its use lessens the chance of recovery from these diseases. It once was used as a cure for colds and bronchitis and as a preventive of pneumonia. It now is known that it makes colds worse and it increases the chance of pneumonia.

"It formerly was used as a cure for snake bite. It is not so used now. It decreases the bodily resistance to snake bite. The only good it ever did was to destroy the awful fear which sometimes shocks persons who have been bitten, and in that way indirectly contributed to cure.

"Alcohol formerly was used for shock on the theory that it was a stimulant. It is not a stimulant. It prevents fear and may in that way do good; otherwise it does harm. Its use in shock is being discontinued. Ammonia and coffee are taking its place.

"It is widely used for the discomforts of natural bodily functions. Physicians condemn its use for this purpose as being unscientific and harmful. There is a notion that gin is good for the kidneys. There is nothing worse for the kidneys than gin.

"Alcohol is disappearing from first-aid cabinets, physicians' satchels and hospitals. Within a few years it will disappear from that part of drug stores devoted to the filling of prescriptions."

WHY NOT PROHIBIT WATER?

A letter clipped from one of the New York morning papers has been sent us for publication. The writer urges that water should be prohibited as it causes the deaths of thousands of people by engendering typhoid and other diseases. This reasoning is typical of much that emanates from the liquor traffic. Water does not cause disease. It has never poisoned any man. It is only when some poison like typhoid pollutes the water that there is danger. The remedy is to prohibit or do away with the poison, not the water. And this, says Temperance, is precisely what modern sanitary science is trying to do. We no longer confine our efforts to the saving of the victims of typhoid, we seek to prohibit or destroy the cause. The efforts of temperance people to do away with alcohol as a beverage is perfectly logical because alcohol is a poisonous drug. If alcohol were as harmless as water only lunatics would advocate its prohibition.

BEER MUST GO.

In not one of the 26 dry states, nor in the District of Columbia, Alaska or Porto Rico, does the prohibition law exempt beer. Beer is not exempt in the army and navy prohibition regulations, nor in any territory under federal prohibition. In Oregon, Washington, Colorado and Arizona the brewers, with millions of dollars behind them, tried to force a beer amendment upon the people, and in every case were overwhelmingly defeated. These facts and the growing anti-beer sentiment throughout the country should convince the brewers and their backers that any attempt to put a beer and light wine exemption clause in the resolution now before congress for a prohibition amendment to the federal Constitution is doomed to failure. They would better save their money for the transforming of their breweries into food-producing factories.

THE EVILS OF ECHO.

A certain glen in Scotland had the reputation of having a splendid echo. An English gentleman visited the place and asked his guide about the echo.

"Just shout 'Two bottle of whisky,'" said the guide.

The gentleman did as requested, and after waiting for several minutes he turned to the Scot and said:

"But I do not hear any echo."

"Maybe no," chuckled the Scot, "but here's the lassie comin' wi' the whisky."—Temperance.

ALL DRAFT APPEALS ARE DECLARED VOID

Exemption Claims Before Boards Hit by Ruling.

WILL HAVE TO APPEAR AGAIN

Registrants Will Be Sent Questionnaire —Men Not Completely Crippled Will Be Held Subject to Special Army Duty.

Washington, Nov. 19.—Men who have been drafted and have appeals from the decision of their local board pending will have their cases automatically thrown out by a ruling of Provost Marshal General Crowder in connection with the revision of the draft regulation.

Major Easby-Smith, legal expert of General Crowder's staff, who, with Col. Hugh Johnson, did most of the work in revising and reorganizing the draft system, explained that all such appeals will automatically cease to exist, as theh man will be returned to his original status—that is, to the position he was in before being called before the draft board.

He will be sent a questionnaire. If his replies to the queries in that booklet indicate that he should be granted the deferred classification—for which his present appeal will be made—he will be so classified by the board.

Can Appeal Decision.

Should the board decide, however, that he belongs in Class 1, subject to immediate call, he will be so notified and will have the right of appealing to the district board for such deferred classification.

Subject to Immediate Service.

The text of the new rule whereby the secretary of war is authorized to draft into immediate service for special duty any man believed from the record to be qualified for such duty, no matter what his classification or his order number in the draft, is couched in the widest terms. As given out by the provost marshal general it follows:

"The deferred classification of experts and men highly skilled in industry or agriculture is intended to prevent the waste incident to induction into military service of men whose special qualifications render them more valuable to the national interest in some other capacity.

War Need Can Reverse Plan.

"There are, however, circumstances in which the need of the military establishment for expert men is such that the national interest is better served by inducting such men into military service than by leaving them engaged in industry or agriculture. In such circumstances neither deferred classification nor the ground of engagement in industry or agriculture or the order numbers heretofore assigned by lot can be permitted to defer the call of such men into military service."

The provost marshal general made clear today that because the new regulations provide that men not completely crippled may be held subject for special army service, and will not be exempted, this does not mean that the army proposes to fill up its ranks behind the lines and on routes of communication with semidisqualified men.

Such men will be put practically in a special class, and can be called only under a special and specific summons for men disqualified for general military service, but qualified for special service.

Would Admit Minor Defects.

This ruling applies to thousands of men are suffering from flat feet, but lar minor deformities which would disqualify them from field service, but which would not interfere with them operating any motor cars and such other work, or on line of communication duty. It also applies to men underweight, or whose health would render the [illegible] unavailable in hard weather.

3 KILLED IN AUTO CRASH

Wives of Two Army Officers and Son of One Crushed to Death at Champaign, Ill.

Champaign, Ill., Nov. 19.—Mrs. Benedict, wife of Maj. C. C. Benedict, their seven-year-old son, and Mrs. Behrens, wife of Capt. Condal Behrens, were killed, and Major Benedict and Captain Behrens were severely injured when an automobile in which they were riding was struck by an Illinois Traction system train at the western limits of this city. It is believed both officers will recover. Major Benedict is in charge of an aviation class at Chanute field, and Captain Behrens is in charge of the hospital at that camp.

JAIL FOR THREAT TO FORD

Detroit Youth Given Five Years for Sending Threatening Letter to Son of Auto Maker.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 19.—Jacob Yellin, a Detroit youth, was convicted by a federal court jury here of sending a threatening letter demanding ransom to Edsel Ford, son of the automobile manufacturer. Yellin was sentenced to five years in Leavenworth prison and also was fined $1,000. The letter which Ford received demanded $10,000 as the price for the safety of his baby son, Henry Ford II.

Next! The sale of Red Cross Seals.

"Thank God for Hoover, he kept us out of indigestion."

Red Cross Seals feed the guns directed against tuberculosis.

If this knitting for the soldiers keeps up, after awhile it will be so that the only way a hubby can be sure of socks without holes in 'em will be to join the army.

Trade is picking up in St. Joe somewhat, by the looks of things just Saturday. Our merchants should advertise their goods more and make it worth while coming to St. Joe.

The following appeared in Tuesday's Hicksville News:—

Lost—Long ladies' pocket book with strap Saturday night.

Evidently Bro. Shaufelberger had been touching up "That's It," as advertised in The News.

General Pershing says there will be no stalemate in the western front, that America "has resources in men and material, once they are prepared, to add weight to the allies which must force a decision against Germany."

Three men—at least they wear pants and pose as men, in St. Joe, are guilty of stealng coal on last Friday evening, from a car on the siding near the B. & O. depot. The car was the property of H. L. Dunkle and he was informed and the gentlemen (?) will now have to answer to him in the future for this act. The men are known positively and at the first opportunity when they are called upon to answer charges of this character, a double header will be laid up for them. A community would be better off without such men and they will sooner or later land where they have plenty of fuel.

H. M. Widney returned Saturday from his hunting expedition in the big Maine woods. He reported the party as having good success although the conditions were not as favorable as at his last year's hunt. The woods were dry and the leaves made it noisy. Two deers were brought home by him. He relates some interesting experiences on the trip.

A ton of soft coal was put up at Auction, Saturday afternoon, by H. L. Dunkle and the money was donated to the Red Cross Chapter at St. Joe. The coal sold to S. S. Widney for $7.50. Many anxious bidders were present and they failed to have as much nerve as "Dick." The spirit in the giving is commendable on the part of our fellow townsman and also on the part of the purchaser.

A change of time has gone into effect on the Wabash railroad that it might be well for our readers to take particular notice of. Train No. 51, westbound in the forenoon and then returning from Wayne as No. 54 in the evening, has been discontinued on Sundays only. During the week-days the trains make their regular trips. No. 55, Westbound, in the evening, will run 15 minutes earlier than before, making it due at St. Joe at 7:35 p. m.

A meeting will be held at the city hall, Auburn, Thursday evening to perfect a home guard organization. Capt. L. L. Denison, of Garrett, is at the head of the movement. 120 men will be required to fill the company, between the ages of 18 and 45 years. The object of the home guards is to take care of the government's interests at home during the war. The company will also stir up patriotism and assist in enlistments for the regular army service.

Dr. J. N. Hurty, State Health Commissioner, who has done so much to help lower the tuberculosis death rate in this state, says, "If the American people fail to purchase as liberally, yes more liberally than heretofore of Chrismas Seals, they will be neglecting a duty of huge dimensions. The fight against tuberculosis must continue. It is an enemy of the human race more fearful than the German enemy. Its conquest is more difficult. The war against tuberculosis must go on and our tuberculosis societies must make greater efforts than ever before."

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hourseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy: Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

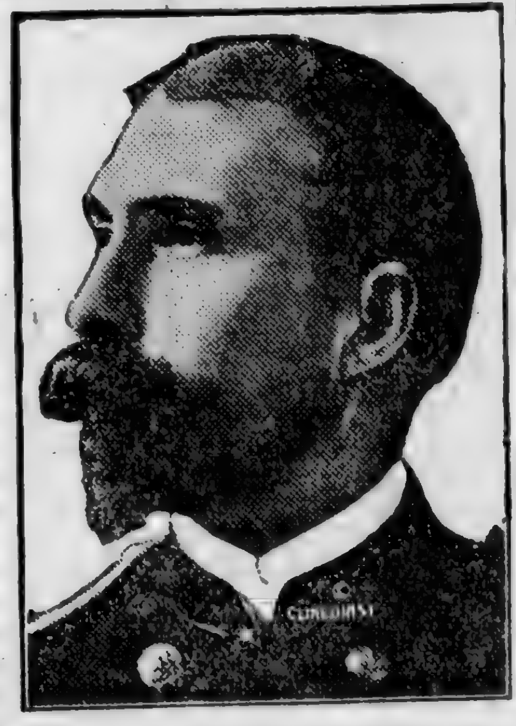
SAILOR MEMBER OF SHIPPING BOARD



There isn't a sailor in the entire shipping board, but there are more men who know about ships than any other one organization has. There is an admiral—Admiral Capps—who is a member of the board, but the others are all civilians, lawyers and business men. Yet the shipping board is the one war machine which is the worst enemy of Germany's greatest war machine—the submarine.

The shipping board has built up a machine of students. Men who make a subject of study and then know how to use the knowledge they acquire. For instance, there is one man in the traffic department of the shipping board who has made the names and capacity and routes of American ships his study. Whenever anyone in the traffic department wants information of a certain ship they send for the information expert, who can tell them off-hand the name of the vessel, her home port, her capacity and where she was last in port. A collection of just such specialized men makes up the machinery of the shipping board. There isn't a thing nautical about the shipping board. In the old interstate commerce commission building, in fact, in the very room where railroad problems were formerly settled, the shipping board now sits and plans the greatest marine program that the world has ever known.

The operation of the shipping board is a huge task. It is just another of the mushroom industries that the war has brought to Washington. Five hundred persons are employed in the executive work which attends the building of the greatest merchant fleet America and the world have ever known.

APPRECIATIVE BELGIAN STATESMAN

Baron Moncheur, head of the Belgian mission to the United States and former Belgian minister at Washington, has requested the Associated Press to express his thanks to the American people for the hospitality extended to the mission.

"I thought I knew the United States well," said the baron. "I was minister at Washington for eight years, and learned and admired the business-like methods and efficiency of Americans. But it was a revelation to see a great free, proud, wealthy nation bending its energies toward the single goal of crushing Prussian militarism. Forgetful of party rivalries, the people of the United States as one man entered the fray, resolved to make the world 'safe for democracy.' It is no small comfort to realize that the plight of Belgium was more than incidental in bringing the greatest nation of the New World to the side of the allies and justice. I came away from America feeling that I had witnessed the welding of a great nation. I was still under the spell of the conversations I had had with your great president—one of the greatest statesmen of modern and all times. As I listened to the expression of his views on the future destinies of the world I was proud that Belgium could have inspired such a sentiment in the bosom of the first citizen of the greatest country of modern times, and to him and to the people of the United States I wish to say: 'Thank you.'"

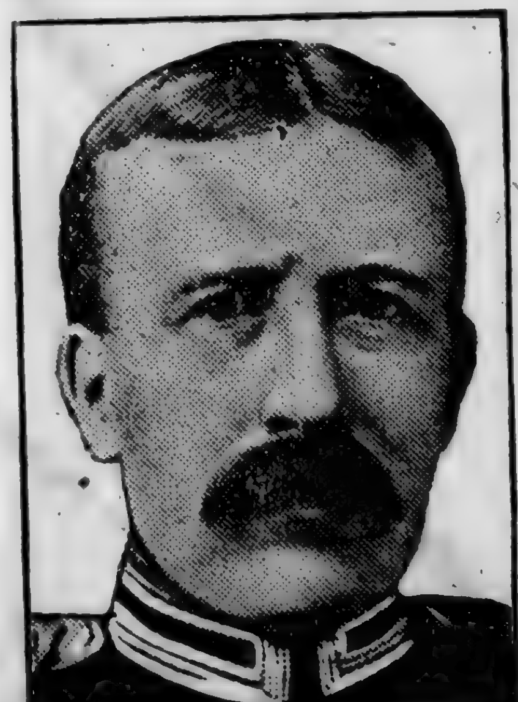
WOULD TRAIN YOUTH FOR WAR

Col. Theodore Roosevelt has written to H. H. Sheets, secretary of the National Association for Universal Military Training, giving briefly his reasons why the United States should adopt universal training. Colonel Roosevelt says:

My Dear Mr. Sheets: I most heartily agree with you in your proposal that the United States government shall, as a permanent policy, at once register all the young men from nineteen years up, for the purpose of military training. This is the right way to shorten the present war, and moreover it indicates what we should adopt as our permanent military policy. As Cardinal Gibbons has well said, such training will benefit our young men incalculably, not only physically but morally, and will not only fit them for war, but it will fit them for their work in peace time.

"I wish to take this opportunity to express the gratitude that all Americans should feel for Lieut. Gen. S. B. M. Young for his leadership in this cause. If our people had followed his advice when it was first given this war would have been over now, and the nations banded for liberty would have achieved a compelling and overwhelming victory."

COMMANDS ENGINEER FORCES

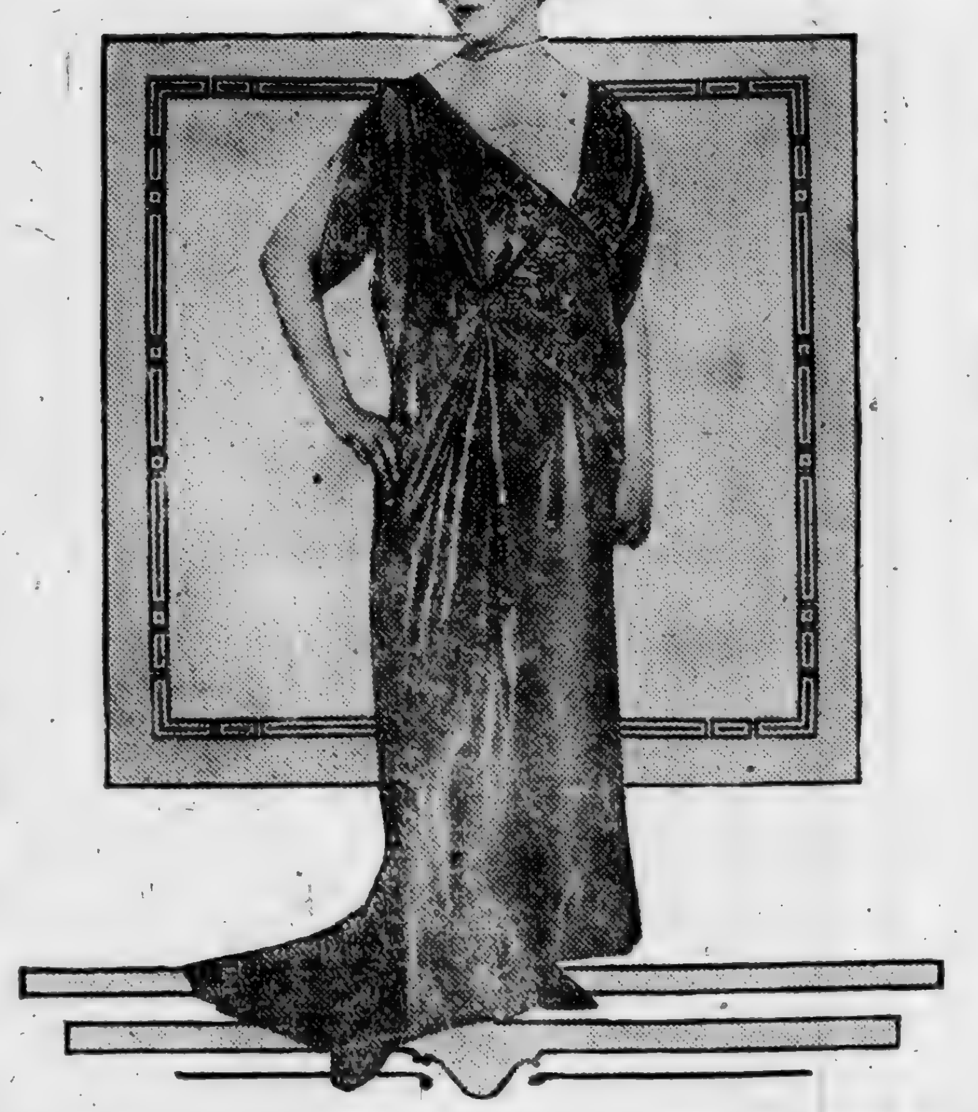


Brig. Gen. John Biddle, engineer officer, was born in Michigan, February 2, 1859, and appointed to the Military academy from that state in 1877. In 1881 he was commissioned a second lieutenant of engineers. During the Spanish-American war, while a first lieutenant in the regular establishment, he was commissioned lieutenant colonel of volunteers.

General Biddle was the only engineer promoted to be a general officer in the recent number advanced to do service in the European war. He has been placed in command of the engineer forces now in France, who will prepare for the American forces to be dispatched to the front as rapidly as possible and will also aid in the rebuilding of devastated French territory as fast as the German army is forced to retreat from it.

General Biddle is considered an excellent officer and for a number of years was president of the War college division of the general staff corps. He was recently superintendent of the Military academy at West Point and was relieved from that detail and placed in command of the Sixth regiment of engineers just prior to his elevation to a brigadier generalship.

Gown for Dinner or Evening Wear



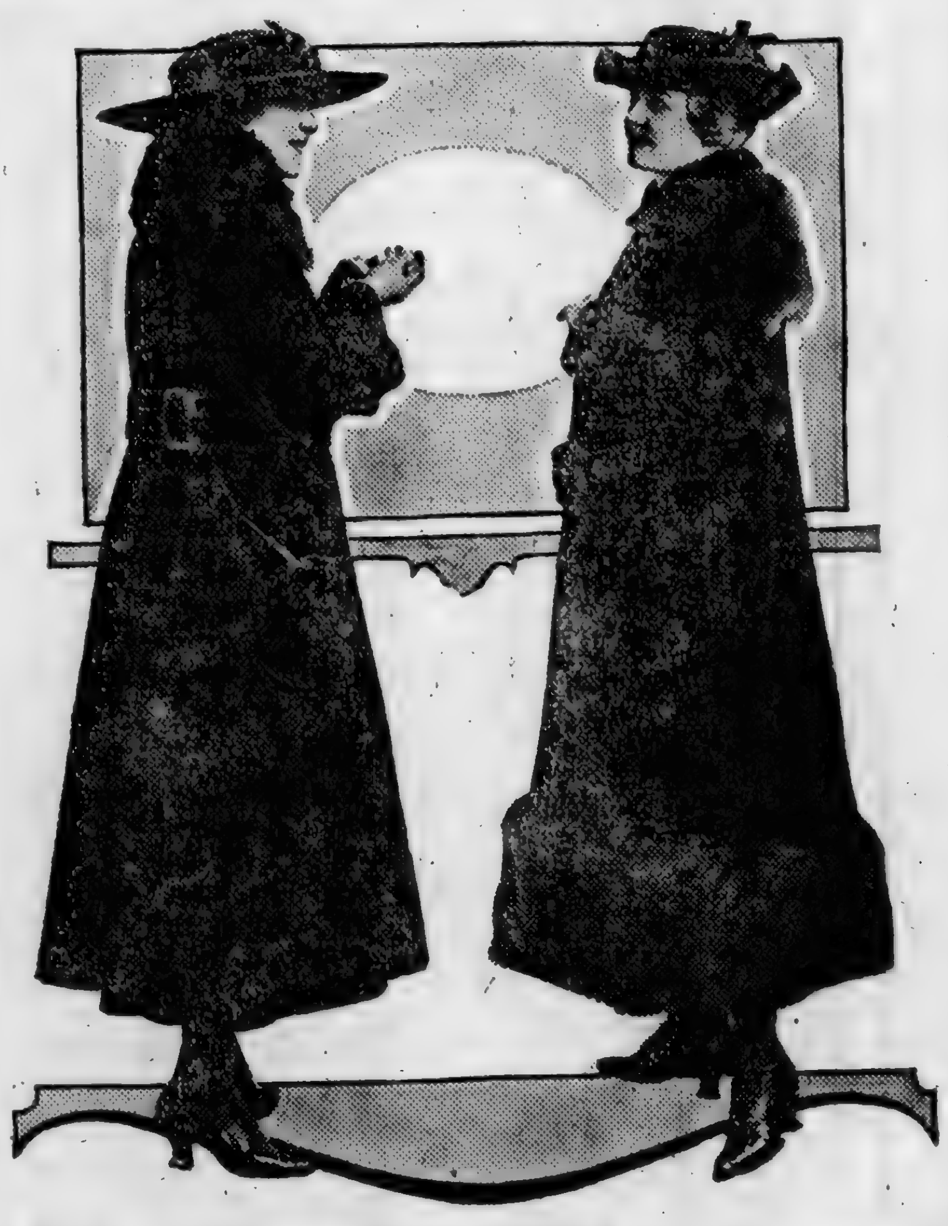
There is no good reason for banishing evening gowns entirely from the scheme of things fashionable. Women will not care to have them as elaborate or splendid as they might be if the shadow of the war were lifted, because they are not in the mood to go to extremes in anything, but it would be a mistake to forego them entirely. Those who can afford to are giving liberally and spending judiciously so as to support business—for business must go on. The luxury of an evening gown has very substantial reasons for indulgence.

Fashionable women are ordering gowns that will serve for both dinner and evening wear; a two-in-one proposition that is altogether successful. In these, bodices are higher and more draped than in the regulation evening gown, and arms are at least veiled with sheer fabrics. They will be worn upon any occasion of great social interest, taking the place of the most formal of evening gowns with unquestioned propriety.

The lovely frock in the picture is not of the variety just described—it is an evening gown pure and simple. Simplicity is its distinguishing feature, and "if eyes were made for seeing" this gown is its own excuse for being. It is made of Nile green satin, with a narrow skirt under a tunic. There is an invested plait at each side of the skirt, with a silver medallion set just above it. The bodice is merely a wide, crushed girdle of the satin wrapped easily about the figure. It is joined to the skirt with a piping of the satin and caught up at the waistline with a medallion of silver lace. Narrow bands of satin extend over the shoulders and a fine silk lace edging is set in the top of the bodice.

A drapery of net, in the same color as the satin, is fashioned into ample, flowing "angel" sleeves. On each sleeve a silver medallion graces the net where it falls away from the wrist, making exquisite detail in the finish. Just one more silver medallion adds one of those unexpected touches by which genius reveals itself, and it appears where the tunic is caught up and fastened to the skirt at the right side.

Coats for Coldest Weather



Sure of the allegiance of sensible women who are looking for warmth and durability, as well as good style, in winter coats, these two models for the coldest weather present themselves. They are of fur-fabric, finished with fur about the neck in each case, and are long and ample, completely covering the figure from head to foot. In the best qualities of seal plush, or broadtail or caracul plushes, they are not less rich looking than the furs themselves and hold only second place in the matter of warmth, to natural skins. But by proper lining and interlining they may be made to tie the race with furs for this supremacy.

The coat at the left is cut on long, almost straight lines and might flare from the shoulders downward but for the wide belt of the material that girdles the waist loosely. This is slipped through a buckle at each side of the back and fastened under a similar buckle at the front. The sleeves are unlike the usual coat sleeve in that they flare at the wrist, fitting less close to the arm than those that are finished with a turned-back cuff. Very large and very practical pockets add style to the model. The buttons are of composition and they serve for fastening the coat at the front and to make a finish for the sleeves. The collar is of skunk fur in this particular case, and may be fastened close up about the throat.

Furs are expensive and liable to become more so, but this fact doesn't seem to deter lovely women from using them as trimmings on coats or dresses in places where they do not add anything to the warmth of these garments. But they are not so great an extravagance after all, because they last many seasons—with the right kind of care—and are always fashionable. In the coat at the right, a wide border of skunk (also called martin) adds to the richness of the model and helps to proclaim it warm. This coat is another straight line model made just like coats of fur, with a wide collar of skunk and fur-covered buttons. It is belted across the front, and is so much like seal skin in appearance that it takes more than a glance, even from practiced eyes, to determine that it is the product of the looms.

Post Office Department Calls Attention to Fact That Parcel Post May Be Utilized Throughout the Year.

Washington.—In order to remove any misunderstanding that may exist regarding the rules governing the sending of parcels to the members of the American expeditionary forces in France, Otto Praeger, second assistant postmaster general, has issued the following statement on the subject:

Parcel post for soldiers and civilians connected with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, when carefully packed and properly addressed, will be accepted by all postmasters for direct transmission through the mails. Such parcels may weigh up to seven pounds. Parcels for the soldiers and civilians connected with the American Expeditionary Forces may contain anything that is admissible to the domestic parcel post except perishables which may spoil on the long journey to Europe.

Parcel post for the American Expeditionary Forces need not be packed in wooden boxes, but should be carefully packed in the strongest kind of pasteboard box to assure its safe arrival at the front.

In addition to this parcel post service to the troops, the war department will undertake to carry Christmas parcels for the American Expeditionary Forces provided such parcels are sent "care the Commanding General, Port of Embarkation, Pier 1, Hoboken, New Jersey," and are packed in wooden boxes not more than two cubic feet in volume well strapped, and with a hinged or screw top. Such Christmas boxes may be sent to the Commanding Officer, Port of Embarkation, either by express or through the mails, and must not exceed 20 pounds in weight. The army will inspect the contents of each box and undertake its delivery from Hoboken to the addressee. The war department will receive Christmas packages up to December 5th.

Parcel Post Limit Seven Pounds.

It will be noted that parcels weighing seven pounds but no more can be sent through the post office department all the way to France.

The twenty-pound parcels which are intended for Christmas gifts and which are to be delivered on Christmas day are sent by the war department from its port of embarkation at Hoboken, N. J. These parcels, which must not exceed twenty pounds in weight, can be sent to the address given in Hoboken in any way that the sender chooses.

Of course the post office department has been handling the smaller Christmas packages all the way through to France, but in order to insure their delivery on Christmas morning it was necessary to mail them by November 15. However, the fact that the mailing was too late for delivery on Christmas day does not mean that packages cannot still be sent by parcel post. They can be sent any day in the year at the rate of 12 cents for each pound sent, and this rate holds from whatever point in the United States the package is sent.

How Packages Must Be Addressed.

Packages for the soldiers must be addressed to the individual, with his company and his regiment and then must be added the words "American Expeditionary Forces." It is not necessary to add the name of the country.

It will be noted that in the instructions given above and prepared in the second assistant postmaster general's office nothing is said specifically concerning the kind of things which may be sent to the soldiers and civilians connected with the expeditionary forces. It is perfectly proper to send sugar, provided it is properly wrapped. The reason sugar is spoken of here is because there seems to have been some misunderstanding about it.

Matches must not be sent in any circumstances. Neither must anything inflammable, except, of course, ordinary packing material, be included, nor must there be any chemical or fresh fruit in the packages. Candy can go if properly protected from mashing up and ruining other things in the mail. Jars of fruit properly sealed and protected against breakage can be sent. Nothing of an explosive nature must be put into the parcels.

It is necessary that the parcel post packages weighing up to seven pounds shall be wrapped so that the post office authorities may examine their contents. The rules for the packages which the war department sends are given explicitly in the above official communication. It is desired to accentuate the fact that parcels up to seven pounds in weight can be sent by ordinary parcel post at any time of the year, but that Christmas boxes which are to go by the way of the war department at the address given above will not be forwarded if they are received at Hoboken later than December 5.

Nerves All Unstrung?

Nervousness and nerve pains often come from weak kidneys. Many a person who worries over trifles and is troubled with neuralgia, rheumatic pains and backache would find relief through a good kidney remedy. If you have nervous attacks, with headaches, backaches, dizzy spells and sharp, shooting pains, try Doan's Kidney Pills. They have brought quick benefit in thousands of such cases.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. R. P. Feaster, 207 W. South St., Greenfield, Ind., says: "I had a severe case of kidney trouble for years and kept growing worse all the time. My back ached from morning until night and kept me miserable. The rheumatic pains in my limbs were awful and I felt so weak at times, I could just about move. Doan's Kidney Pills permanently cured me and I now enjoy health and strength."

Teaching Youth Courtesy.

It is true that the one-time honored "ma'am" has gone to voyage. Yet wait—what takes its place? Sometimes nothing. Poor modern child!

Little Willie, you see, is taught that "ma'am" is decidedly bad form, don't you know, a mode of address only to be used by servants, indeed, and so his youthship comes out with an abrupt "No" or a brief "Yes," to old ladies and playmates alike, an exchange observes.

The really correct thing for Willie to be taught is that the name or relationship of the persons addressed must be given in place of that socially ostracized "ma'am." He must say "Yes, mother," or "no, father" (if he has been taught not to use "sir"), or "No, Mr. Smith or Miss Jones," as the case may be.

The mentioning of a person's name when speaking to him or her is always a pleasant little mark of courtesy, even from one older person to another, and is charming to hear from a child's lips.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 25

A PSALM OF THANKSGIVING.

LESSON TEXT—Psalms 103.
GOLDEN TEXT—Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.—Ps. 103:2.

This Psalm is man's response to the goodness and mercy of God. It expresses the joy and gratitude of a forgiven sinner as he worships before God. There is too much in this Psalm for one to attempt to set it forth, so we must be content to display some of its most prominent notes.

I. Man's Entire Being Should Sing God's Praise, v. 1. The true worshipper praises God with every faculty of his being; his intellect, emotion, desires, affections all unite in praising Jehovah. The entire being responds in a song of harmonious praise. Some praise God with their voices but not with their hearts; some with their intellect but not with their affections; some with their emotions but not with their wills. That praise which involves the entire being alone is pleasing to God.

II. The Benefits Granted, vv. 2-6. The Psalmist exhorts man not to forget all God's benefits. This seems to be needed now as well as then, for most of us are better at remembering our troubles and adversities, our losses and our sorrows, than we are at remembering our mercies and blessings. It would be a good thing for some of us to keep a record of the good things of life and see that, after all, our blessings outweigh our burdens. We have more days of sunshine than of clouds, more joys than we have of sorrows, more hours when we are free from pain than we suffer with pain. If God were as forgetful of us as we are of Him, life would be hard indeed.

(1) Forgiveness of sins, v. 3. In forgiveness we are freed from the curse of sin and its blight and burdens are removed. We are not only forgiven, but we are healed of sin's disease! not only freed from the burdens of sin but of its effects, so that we do not go after the things of this world. To be saved for heaven means that we are saved from the world.

(2) Redemption, v. 4. We have been saved by Christ giving Himself as a ransom for our souls.

(3) Satisfaction, v. 5. When God redeems, He so thoroughly renews the man that the good things which he gets from God satisfy him. His blessings are so real that he finds satisfaction in God. Men and women of the world are reaching out after fleeting things. They are ever grasping after something, but are never satisfied. Not so with the redeemed soul; he finds absolute satisfaction in the things which God gives him. Worldings may be satiated, but God's redeemed alone are satisfied.

(4) Executing judgment in behalf of the oppressed, v. 6. He is always on the side of the oppressed. God undertakes for his own, and sooner or later He will mete out justice to all. There is a reckoning day for the world coming. Those who have done evil shall suffer loss; those who have done good shall be rewarded.

III. Attributes of God for Which He Should Be Praised, vv. 7-18. These attributes have been displayed in God's dealings with his chosen people.

(1) Merciful and gracious, v. 8. He is slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. An example of his mercy is seen in the father of the prodigal son running to meet his son and kissing him. A very little thought will make very evident how God withholds his anger and waits patiently for an opportunity to extend his mercy.

(2) He will not always "chide," vv. 8-12. When God forgives he forgives forever. Men say they forgive, but how often they "chide" and "keep anger." God has not dealt with us according to our sins, for, as the heavens are high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that they fear him. So really has God forgiven us that our transgressions are as far removed from us as the East is from the West, an incalculable distance.

(3) He is compassionate and tender, vv. 13-14. This reveals God's fatherly heart. He fully knows our weakness. He does not deal with us as though we were strong. He knows how weak and fallible we are through the fall. It is consoling to know that God considers our "frame"; He knows that we are "dust."

(4) His mercy is everlasting, eternal, vv. 15-17. Man is at best transitory, but God is eternal. The one who rests his hopes in God is eternally safe. This should encourage us to lean not upon man but upon God.

(5) God is gracious to those who are in covenant relationship, v. 18. If we would enjoy these blessings revealed in God's attributes we must be God's children. His mercies are restrictive, only bestowed upon his own children.

IV. A Call to All the Universe to Praise the Lord, vv. 19-22. Since God is such a wonderful Being, He should have universal praise. His kingdom is over all; his Lordship should have recognition.

The true conquerors are often those whom the world calls the vanquished. —Max Muller

The new docks at Halifax have reached a point where they can care for a considerable amount of Canadian and American shipping, although they will not be finally completed for some time yet. The war has given Halifax a great advantage as a port, because it shortens the trans-Atlantic voyage by several days. The new docks are being erected at a cost of $30,000,000. When complete they will be able to dock 375,000 tons of shipping at one time.

War Behind the Lines.

In the house of commons the statement was made some time ago that it needs a man and a half behind the line to keep one man in the trenches; and that is only at the front. How many men, women and children at home are needed to keep going the man with the rifle and hand grenade we can only conjecture, but if we say ten civilians to every fighting man we shall not exaggerate.—Simon Strunsky in the Yale Review.

OUR BOYS IN FRANCE AND HOME PROTECTION

The men on the firing line represent the pick of our American youth. One in four of our boys at home was sick, rejected because of physical deficiency. Many times the kidneys were to blame.

If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals. Then procure at your nearest drug store Anuric (double strength). This An-u-ric drives the uric acid out and cures backache and rheumatism.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month.

Step into the drug store and ask for a 60c package of Anuric, or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. Anuric, many times more potent than lithia, often eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. A short trial will convince you.

Columbus, Ohio.—"I had an obstinate cough which I was unable to get rid of. I tried several remedies which did little good. Then I began taking Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; it helped me at once, and by continuing its use for a few weeks the cough left me entirely. I have had no return since, except slight colds. I keep 'Golden Medical Discovery' in the house all the time as a family remedy."—GUS. RAMBACHER, Southern Hotel, Columbus, Ohio.

One nice thing about Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—it contains no alcohol or narcotic, nor any harmful ingredient. In liquid and tablets and sold by druggists.—Adv.

Young Women

Are Told How to Find Relief from Pain.

Nashua, N.H.—"I am nineteen years old and every month for two years I had such pains that I would often faint and have to leave school. I had such pain I did not know what to do with myself and tried so many remedies that were of no use. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and decided to try it, and that is how I found relief from pain and feel so much better than I used to. When I hear of any girl suffering as I did I tell them how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me."—DELINA MARTIN, 29 Bowers Street, Nashua, N. H.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and is, therefore,

RESOLVED TO PUT PART OF MY EARNINGS IN THE BANK EACH WEEK
BANK

Into the bank and out

INTO the bank put as large a portion of your earnings as you can, and out of it will come a certificate of safety, a source of security—a feeling you never really had before and one you are sure to enjoy. And it's so easy to start. Just come into the bank, tell us you want to open an account and we'll do the rest.

You won't know but you've been banking for years. No distinction is made in the service we render our patrons. We are glad to get the small as well as the large depositors, and we give each account individual attention and each depositor special advice when requested.

We want your account. Come in and talk about it—ask us "the why" of everything and we'll gladly explain.

Red Cross Department

The St. Joe Branch of Red Cross desires to make a shipment the first of December and to standardize the shipment there is much work yet to be done. All ladies who will help, please be at the sewing room this Thursday afternoon and Wednesday P. M. of next week.

St. Joe and vicinity responded heartily to the appeal from Mrs. Lens for the needy children in France. Five boxes of nice clothing were sent from here.

The arrangements for the Red Cross Fair, to be held November 22nd., are now completed and no effort is being spared to make this a success financially and as an entertainment. The articles brought in by the soliciting committees will be on display and for sale during the day. What is not disposed of will be sold at auction in the evening. Hot coffee and good things to eat may be had at various booths and a variety of entertainment will be furnished. No Fair is complete without gypsy fortune tellers and the services of Queen Eumatella, Vienca and Zoila have been secured by the entertainment committe For venturous people the "Cave of the Winds" will supply their wants. The young people will play games and altogether it will be an occasion you can not afford to miss.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Editor's Thanksgiving

What's that? You bet I'm thankful; don't you see this two-bit smile?
Why, things for me look brighter than they have for quite a while.
Of course, it peeved me when my print got stewed and broke the press
And pied the forms, but I can get things straightened up, I guess.
That libel suit nigh got my goat; but why should I repine?
I haven't got a cent, and so they can't collect the fine;
And then my wife a-leaving me—that gave me quite a jar,
But I am glad that things ain't any worse than what they are.
My mortgage will fall due next month, but
I don't grieve nor fret;
They say they'll sell me out, but then they haven't done it yet;
And tho licked seven times today, you'll never hear me squeak;
I,m still alive and put the little dope sheet
out each week.
These ginks who always kick and squeal,
they ought to have a nurse,
I've hit some rocky roads myself, but then they could be worse;
And so I still retain my poise and wear my two-bit smile,
And things to me look brighter than they have for quite a while.

Dog Strays Away

Court was in session Friday afternoon before Justice of the Peace S. S. Widney. Calvin Means of Jackson township filed an affidavit charging Ward Dull and Clyde Schooley, two log haulers, of Hicksville, with having stolen his dog on Friday, November 16, from the Kline home. Mr. Means stated that he had the dog tied up on that day as he was away from home and when he returned the dog had been loosed and was gone. Upon making an inquiry he found that the dog had gone to the home of Elias Kline, nearby, and that it had followed the above named log men to Hicksville. The men were arraigned before Squire Widney for trial and they testified that they did not take the dog, but that it did follow them to their home and Mr. Schooley said he tied the dog to a post at his home and that it made its escape shortly afterwards and had not been seen since.

Lee Griffin of Hicksville, defended the boys and the findings of the court was in favor of the defendants Mr. Means held the dog at $20.00 and asked its return or the payment of the money.

Eat Baked Potatoes.

Eat more baked potatoes in the interest of both health and economy say members of the Indiana State Medical Society, who are backing up the crmpaign of the State Board of Health in this connection. The present potato waste in Indiana alone is enormous, as it has been figured that in each family of five, and there are 430,000 such families in our State, one-half pound of potato peelings goes into the garbage daily. This means a total of 215,000 pounds thrown away each day, and as there are 60 pounds in a bushel of potatoes, it means that 3583 bushels of food stuff go into the garbage, a money loss of $6,000 a day.

The principal health-giving food content of the potato is also wasted. The peelings represent 20% of the potato and carry 80% of the vitamines. The vitamines lie between the potato material and skin and supply vital force. Therefore, mashed and French fried potatoes are extravagant food. Cooked in these ways the loss of food and vital power is one-half, in addition to what might be called health loss in failure of people to eat the peelings.

Food Administrator.

Herman L. Brown, of Auburn, was named Thursday afternoon as federal food administrator for DeKalb county by H. E. Barnard of Indianapolis, federal food administrator for Indiana. Mr. Brown was recommended by the DeKalb county council of defense.

Mr. Brown will have as his duty the enforcing of the food control act in DeKalb county, acting as a special agent of Mr. Barnard who is responsible for the enforcement of the law in the state.

The county administrators will be in active charge of the enforcement of the food control law, with special reference to the observance of the rules and regulations governing the operation of dealers licensed by the food administration.

County administrators have been named in eighty-seven of the ninety-two counties in Indiana.

Ed Woodcox came home Saturday from the Wabash Hospital at Peru, Ind., where he had been for the past five weeks sick with typhoid fever. Charley Woodcox, of Woodburn, was also a callers on his parents, Sunday afternoon.

The petition is signed by Martin and Inez Wagner and Alice Colbert and the drain will be known as the Martin Wagner drain. The petition is set for docketing Jan. 2.

Obituary

Deliah Erwin, daughter of Jonathan and Cornelia Erwin, was born in Stark Co., Ohio, Sept. 7, 1851. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Earn Johnson, near Concord, Indiana, Nov. 20, 1917. Age 66 years, 2 months, 13 days. In early life she was brought by her parents to DeKalb Co., Indiana, and had since resided in this community where she was so well and favorably known. Soon after coming to this county her mother died leaving her without a mother's love and care at the age of six years old.

She was married to James Draggoo, April 29, 1866. To them were born sixteen children, one girl and one boy of whom died in infancy.

Surviving her are, her husband, six sons and eight daughters, twenty-one grand-children, two brothers and other relatives and many friends.

For many months she had been in failing health but it was hardly thought that the end was so near. But though death came suddenly and unexpected we believe that she was prepared for it and with the silent boatman she crossed triumphantly the mystic river to enter into the sweet bye-and-bye.

For many years she had been a loyal and faithful member of the Concord Methodist Protestant Church. She was faithful in attendance and in the contribution of her means for the church and her Christian life was a good example for her family and friends.

Loved and cherished by her children, honored and respected by her neighbors and appreciated by the church she has left her labor for reward.

Funeral services were conducted from the M. P. Church at Concord, Friday morning, with burial at Riverside Cemetery. Rev. J. C. Coons, officiating with E. R. Kinsey, director.

W. C. T. U. Meeting

The W. C. T. U. was entertained Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Belle Keesler. The president called the meeting to order. Opening song, Christ for the World We Sing. Mrs. Amanda Spayd led the devotional by reading the scripture lesson from Proverbs and Romans, followed by sentence prayers. Song, Prohibition Wins. Talk, "Economizing Time, Money, Food for Systematic Planning and Working to Plans." This was certainly an interesting and instructive talk by Mrs. Elizabeth Mumma, and if only the one statement "Alcohol is a food the same as dynamite is a fuel," were remembered and heeded her splendid talk would have been worth while. "How may the W. C. T. U. Co-operate with the Red Cross" by Mrs. Cora Price who gave a fine appeal for the Red Cross work. Mrs. Daisy Woodcox who could not be present at the meeting before to give her report from the state convention gave it at this time. After a brief business session one verse of America was sung and Mrs. Mumma dismissed the meeting.

News to Be Printed Monday.

The next issue of The News will be printed on Monday afternoon and Evening of next week, as the editor and family are contemplating taking the week off. All correspondents and others should have their news to us by Saturday. Office will be open as usual and your wants attended to.

First Call in Many Weeks.

The local fire department was given a hurry-up-call last Wednesday evening to the Chas. E. Krick home on north 5th., street. The parents had gone to a neighbors and left the children at home alone. In some manner a pair of overalls, that had been thrown over a back of a chair, had been moved near the stove and caught on fire. The children were in the kitchen and the oldest one noticed the smoke and began to investigate while the others gave the alarm. By the time the department appeared the neighbors had extinguished the fire. The boys responded in a short notice and it proved to just be a good practice run. The loss was of no amount.

Union Thanksgiving Services will be held in the Lutheran Church, Wednesday evening instead of Thursday. Rev. Spayd will deliver the address. The collection will be used in the purchase of testaments for the soldiers, through the American Bible Society.

Observe Missionary Day.

Home Missionary Day was observed at the Christian Bible School, Sunday morning. The Superintendent of Missions, Mrs. L. W. Spayd, gave an interesting talk on Home Missions before the study period. 84 were present with an offering of $5.90 which goes for Home Missions. An excellent sermon both morning and evening were given by the regular pastor, L. W. Spayd. The Christian Bible School has been unfortunate this year in losing both its Superintendent, Paul. Perry, who enlisted last April, and the assistant, H. C. Borthwick, who with his family leave this week to spend the winter in Chicago. The Bible School will be in charge of the church officials during the rest of the year, until new officers are elected.

The Concord Ladies Aid Society will serve Supper on Thanksgiving Evening in the Church Basement. Price 25 Cents. A good supper assured Supper served from 5 to 7.

PRUDENCE SAYS SO

By ETHEL HUESTON

The Story of a Houseful of Loveable Girls

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

THE TWINS READ MRS. EDDY'S "SCIENCE AND HEALTH" AND THEIR BEHAVIOR IN CONSEQUENCE UPSETS THE THE QUIET OF THE METHODIST HOUSEHOLD.

Synopsis.—The story opens in the home of the Rev. Mr. Starr where Prudence, his eldest daughter and feminine head of the house, consisting of her father, herself, her sister Fairy, the twins—Carol and Lark—and Connie, the youngest, are awaiting the arrival of their aunt Grace. Liveliness of the smaller members of the family results disastrously for their appearance.

Prudence watched them with painful solicitude, Her years of mothering had given her an almost supernatural intuition as to causes and effects.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Starr bade his family goodby and set out on a tour of Epworth league conventions. He was to be away from home until the end of the following week. A prospective Presbyterian theologian had been selected from the college to fill his pulpit on the Sabbath.

At ten o'clock the train carried their father off in the direction of Burlington, and at eleven o'clock the twins returned to the parsonage. Prudence, Fairy and Aunt Grace sat sewing on the side porch as they cut across the parsonage lawn, their feet crinkling pleasantly through the drift of autumn leaves the wind had piled beneath the trees.

"We're out of potatoes, twins," said Prudence, as they drew near. "You'll have to dig some before dinner."

For one instant their complacent features clouded. Prudence looked up espectantly, sure of a break in their serene placidity.

One doubtful second, then—

"Certainly, Prudence," said Carol brightly.

And Lark added genially, "We'd better fill the box, I guess—so we'll have enough for the rest of the week."

And singing a light but unharmonic snatch of song, the twins went in search of basket and hoe.

Prudence's brows knitted in anxious frowns and she sighed a few times.

"What is the matter, Prue? You look like a rainy Christmas," said Fairy.

"It's the twins," was the mournful answer.

"The twins!" ejaculated Fairy. "Why, they've acted like angels lately."

"That's it!—That's just it. When the twins act like angels I get uneasy right away. The better they act, the more suspicious I feel."

"What have they been doing?"

"Nothing! Not a thing! That's why I'm worried. It must be something terrible!"

Fairy laughed and returned to her embroidery. Aunt Grace smiled and began plying her needles once more. But Prudence still looked troubled, and sighed often.

"It's the Twins," Was the Mournful Answer.

There was no apparent ground for her alarm. The twins came back with the potatoes, peeled some for luncheon, and set the table, their faces still bright and smiling.

In the afternoon they joined the little circle on the porch, but not to sew. They took a book, and lay down on a rug with the book before them, reading together. Evidently they were all absorbed.

Prudence, in spite of her devotion to the embroidering of large S's on assorted pieces of linen, never forgot the twins for a moment.

"What are you reading?" she asked at last aimlessly, her only desire to be reassured by the sound of their voices.

There was an almost imperceptible pause. Then Carol answered—her chin was in her palms, which may have accounted for the mumbling of the words.

"Scienceanealth."

"What?"

Another pause, a little more perceptible this time. "Science and Health," Carol said at last, quite distinctly.

"Science and Health," Prudence repeated, in a puzzled tone. "Is it a doctor book?"

"Why—something of the sort—yes," said Carol dubiously.

"'Science and Health?' 'Science and Health,'" mused Fairy. "You don't mean that Christian Science book, do you? You know what I mean, Prudence—Mary Baker Eddy's book—'Science and Health'—that's the name of it. That's not what you twins are devouring so ravenously, is it?"

Carol answered with manifest reluctance, glancing nervously at Prudence, "Y-yes—that's what it is."

Ominous silence greeted this admission. A slow red flush mantled the twins' cheeks. Aunt Grace's eyes twinkled a little, although her face was grave. Fairy looked surprised. Prudence looked dumfounded.

"What are you reading that for?"

"Why—it's very interesting," explained Lark, coming to Carol's rescue. "Of course we don't believe it—yet. But there are some good things in it—it's very deep. But some of the ideas are very fine, and—er—uplifting, you know."

Prudence looked most miserable. "But—twins, do you think—minister's daughters ought to read—things like that?"

"Why, Prudence, I think minister's daughters ought to be well informed on every subject," declared Lark conscientiously. "How can we be an influence if we don't know anything about things?"

Prudence looked at Fairy and her aunt in helpless dismay. This was something entirely new in her experience of rearing a family.

"I—I don't think you ought to read it," she said slowly. "But at the same time—what do you think about it, Aunt Grace?"

"Why—I don't know, Prudence. You know more about rearing twins than I do."

Prudence at that moment felt that she knew very little about it, indeed. She turned to Fairy. There was a strange intentness in Fairy's fine eyes as she studied the twins on the floor at her feet.

"You aren't thinking of turning Christian Scientists, yourselves, are you?" asked Prudence rather humbly.

"Oh, of course, we aren't Scientists, Prudence," was the quick denial. "We don't know anything about it yet, really. But there are lots of very helpful things in it, and—people talk about it so much, and—they have made such wonderful cures, you know, and—we'd thought we'd just study up a little."

"You take the book yourself and read it, Prue," urged Carol hospitably. "You'll see what we mean."

Prudence drew back quickly as though the book would sear her fingers. She looked very forlorn. If only her father were at home—ten days between herself and the lifting of responsibility!

"When father comes home—" she began. And then suddenly Fairy spoke.

"I think the twins are right," she said emphatically. "It would be very narrow-minded of us to refuse to look into a subject as important as this. Let them go on and study it; we can decide things later."

Prudence looked very doubtful, but a warning movement of Fairy's left eyelash—the side removed from the twins—comforted her.

"Well—" she said.

"Of course, Prudence, we know it would nearly break father's heart for us to go back on our own church—but don't you think if folks become truly convinced that Christian Science is the true and good religion, they ought to stand by it and suffer—just like the martyrs of old?" suggested Lark—and the suggestion brought the doubt-clouds thick about Prudence's head once more.

"We may not be convinced, of course," added Carol, "but there is something rather—assuring—about it."

"Oh, twins," Prudence cried earnestly, but stopped as she caught again the slight suggestive movement of Fairy's left eyelash.

"Well, let it go for this afternoon," she said, her eyes intent on Fairy's face. "I must think it over."

The twins, with apparent relish, returned to their perusal of the book.

Fairy rose almost immediately and went into the house, coming back a moment later with her hat and gloves.

"I'm going for a stroll, Prue," she said. "I'll be back in time for supper."

It was two hours later when Fairy came back. Prudence was alone on the porch.

"Where are the twins?" asked Fairy softly.

"Upstairs," was the whispered reply. "Well?"

Then Fairy spoke more loudly, confident that the twins, in their upstairs room, could hear every word she said. "Come upstairs, Prue. I want to talk this over with you alone." And then she whispered, "Now, you just take your cue from me, and do as I say. The little sinners! We'll teach them to be so funny!"

In their own room she carefully closed the door and smiled, as she noted the creaking of the closet door on the twins' side of the wall. Eavesdropping was not included among the cardinal sins in the twins' private decalogue, when the conversation concerned themselves.

"Now, Prudence," Fairy began, speaking with an appearance of softness, though she took great pains to turn her face toward the twins' room, and enunciated very clearly indeed. "I know this will hurt you, as it does me, but we've got to face it fairly. If the twins are convinced that Christian Science is the right kind of religion, we can't stand in their way. I've been reading up a little myself this afternoon, and there are some good points in Christian Science. Of course, for our sakes and father's, the twins will be generous and deny they are Scientists. But at heart, they are. I saw it this afternoon. And you and I, Prudence, must stand together and back them up. They'll have to leave the church. I think we'll have them go before the deacons next Sunday while father is gone—then he will be spared the pain of it. We must make it as easy for them as we can. They'll probably dismiss them—I don't suppose they'll give them letters. But it must be all over before papa comes back."

Then she hissed in Prudence's ear, "Now cry."

Prudence obediently began sniffling and gulping, and Fairy rushed to her and threw her arms about her, sobbing in heartbroken accents, "There, there, Prue, I know—I felt just the same about it. But we can't stand between the twins and what they think is right. We daren't have that on our consciences."

The two wept together, encouraged by the deathlike stillness in the closet on the other side of the wall.

Then Fairy said, more calmly, though still sobbing occasionally, "For our sakes, they'll try to deny it. But we can't let the little darlings sacrifice themselves. They've got to have a chance to try their new belief. We'll just be firm and insist that they stand on their rights. We won't mention it to them for a day or two—we'll fix it up with the elders first. And we must surely get it over by Sunday. Poor old father—and how he loves—Oh, Prudence, dear, don't cry so."

Prudence caught her cue again and began weeping afresh. They soothed and caressed and comforted each other for a while, and then went downstairs to finish getting supper.

In the meantime the shocked and horrified twins in the closet of their own room, were clutching each other with passionate intensity. When their sisters had gone downstairs they stared at each other in agony.

"They—they wo-won't p-p-put us out of the ch-ch-church," gasped Carol.

"They will," stammered Lark. "You know what Prudence is! She'd put the whole church out if she thought it would do us any good. Oh, Carol, I told you it was wicked to joke about religion."

This unexpected reproach on the part of her twin brought Carol back to earth. "I didn't read a word of it, did you?—I—I just thought it would be such a good joke on Prudence—with father out of town."

The good joke was anything but funny now.

"They can't make us be Scientists if we don't want to," protested Lark. "They can't. Why, I wouldn't be anything but a Methodist for anything on earth. I'd die first. We'll just go and tell Prudence it was a joke—Prudence is always reasonable. She won't—"

"She'll punish us, and—it'll be such a joke on us, Larkie. Even Connie'll laugh."

They squirmed together, wretchedly, at that.

"It—it was a good joke while it lasted," said Carol, with a very faint shadow of a smile. "Don't you remember how Prudence gasped? She kept her mouth open for five minutes!"

"It's still a joke," added Lark gloomily, "but it's on us."

"They can't put us out of the church!"

"I don't know. Like as not they'll say we'd be a bad influence among the members."

"Twins!"

The call outside their door sounded like the trump of doom to the conscience-smitten twins, and they clutched each other, startled, crying out. Then, sheepishly, they stepped out of the closet to find Fairy regarding them quizzically from the doorway. She repressed a smile with difficulty, as she said quietly.

"I was just talking to Mrs. Maine over the phone. She's going to a Christian Science lecture tonight, and she said she wished I wasn't a minister's daughter and she'd ask me to go along. I told her I didn't care to, but said you twins would enjoy it. She'll be here in the car for you at seven forty-five."

"I won't go," cried Carol. "I won't go near their old church. You can't make me."

Lark shook her head in corroborative denial.

"Well, that's queer." Fairy frowned, then she smiled.

Suddenly, to the tempest-tossed and troubled twins, the tall, splendid Fairy seemed a haven of refuge. And with a cry of relief and shame and fear, the twins plunged upon her and told her their little tale.

"You punish us this time, Fairy," begged Carol. "We—we don't want the rest of the family to know. We'll take any kind of punishment, but keep it dark, won't you?"

"I'll talk it over with Prudence," said Fairy. "But—I think we'll have to tell the family."

Lark moved her feet restlessly. "Well, you needn't tell Connie," she said. "Having the laugh come back on us is the very meanest kind of a punishment."

Fairy looked at them a moment, wondering if, indeed, their punishment had been sufficient.

"Well, little twins," she said, "I guess I will take charge of this myself. Here is your punishment." She stood up again, and looked down at them with sparkling eyes as they gazed at her expectantly.

Then She Hissed in Prudence's Ear, "Now Cry."

"We caught on that it was a joke. We knew you were listening in the closet. And Prudence and I acted our little parts to give you one good scare. Who's the laugh on now? Are we square? Supper's ready." And Fairy ran downstairs, laughing, followed by two entirely abashed and humbled twins.

CHAPTER III.

How Carol Spoiled the Wedding.

A day in June—the kind of day that poets have rhymed and lovers have craved since time began. On the side porch of the parsonage, in a wide hammock, lay Aunt Grace, looking languidly through half-closed lids at the girls beneath her on the step. Prudence, although her face was all a-dream, bent conscientiously over the bit of linen in her hands. And Fairy, her piquantly bright features clouded with an unwonted frown, crumpled a letter in her hand.

"I do think men are the most aggravating things that ever lived," she declared, with annoyance in her voice.

The woman in the hammock smiled slightly, and did not speak. Prudence carefully counted ten threads, and solemnly drew one before she voiced her question.

"What is he saying now?"

"Why, he's still objecting to my having dates with the other boys." Fairy's voice was vibrant with grief. "He does make me wild! Aunt Grace, you can't imagine. Last fall I mentioned casually that I was sure he wouldn't object to my having lecture course dates—I was too hard up to buy a ticket for myself; they cost four dollars, and aren't worth it, either. And what did he do but send me eight dollars to buy two sets of tickets! Then this spring, when the baseball season opened, he sent me season tickets to all the games, suggesting that my financial stringency could not be pleaded as excuse. Ever since he went to Chicago last fall we've been fighting because the boys bring me home from parties. He wants me to patter along by myself like a—like—like a hen!" Fairy said "hen" very crossly!

"It's a shame," said Prudence sympathetically. "That's just what it is. You wouldn't say a word to his taking girls home from things, would you?"

They are about to have a wedding in the Starr household, as you know, but Carol effectually spoils all plans and makes postponement necessary. Tough luck for Prudence.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. B. B. SUTCLIFFE, Extension Department Moody Bible Institute.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 2

NEHEMIAH BUILDS THE WALL OF JERUSALEM.

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 4:7-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my Helper and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.—Hebrews 13:6.

The lesson of November 18 spoke of Nehemiah journeying to Jerusalem. After his arrival he spent three days in looking over the work; then he told the priests and other leaders his plans. Enthusiasm was awakened, all classes were aroused, the work of the building of the wall of the city was apportioned among the people, and soon half of the wall was completed "for the people had a mind to work."

I. The Wrath of the Enemy, vv. 7-9. The progress of the work kept up the anger of Sanballat the Horonite and his friends who formed an alliance to hinder the wall being built (vv. 7, 8). When God begins to work through his people, Satan is aroused and tries to interfere. It is no sign that a Christian is out of the will of God when opposition is felt. The enemy will always be on hand to try to hinder whenever a real work for God is going forward. Dead formal Christianity runs smoothly and with deadly monotony and Satan lets it alone, but as soon as some results of real work are seen, opposition is at once felt. Thus it was when God sent his Son into the world, and so it has been in every movement for God in the church, and so it will be in the individual Christian life. From the next verse (9) we would almost think that Nehemiah had heard our Lord's injunction to "watch and pray." Many do much watching and fail; many do much praying and fail; but none ever turns to watching and praying without finding victory. Prayer alone means sloth; watching alone means pride; but watching and praying victory.

II. Internal Opposition, vv. 10-14. Sanballat and his friends were not the only ones Nehemiah had to contend with. Among those that worked on the wall were some shirkers and grumblers. They had become discouraged in the work and began to say they could never complete it (v. 10). If Satan fails to hinder the work from the outside, he will attempt to create dissatisfaction on the inside. Internal confusion of the church is more to be dreaded than open opposition from a known enemy. Dissension and confusion in the church can usually be traced to workers becoming discouraged. The plot of the enemy to make a surprise attack was discovered by the Jews who lived outside the city. They reported it not once, but ten times, with the suggestion that the work on the wall be stopped, and safety sought by leaving the city altogether (vv. 11, 12). When the enemy's open opposition fails and discouragement has been tried, an attempt is made to bring fear upon the workers. But the Bible is full of exhortations for Christians to "fear not." Could these workers on the walls of Jerusalem have seen the unseen, it would have made little differences to them whether the enemies were numbered by tens or thousands, and could Christians today realize that God is for them, all opposition would be as nothing. (I Cor. 10:13; Rom. 8:31; Phil. 4:13). Nehemiah at once proceeded to allay the fears (13, 14). Armed forces were arranged about the walls to guard against the reported surprise attack. The warriors were placed so that in the event of battle they would be protecting their own particular families. Then Nehemiah made a short speech of encouragement to the people, the heart of which was "Remember the Lord which is great and terrible." Remembering him would drive the fear away. They who are on the Lord's side are already victors even before the battle has begun. Someone said to a great general before a certain battle began: "I hope the Lord is on our side." The reply was: "I trust we are on the Lord's side." When this is true, there need be no fear whether the enemies be few or many. Nehemiah then exhorted them to fight for their families and their homes. This two-fold secret of the victory is presented to us over and over in this book of Nehemiah, and nowhere is so prominent as in this lesson. Victory for the Christian depends on two things: We must trust in the Lord as though all depended on him, and we must work and fight as though all depended on us. This is the secret of the success of Nehemiah.

III. The Progress of the Work, (vv. 15-21). The speech of Nehemiah having quieted the fears of the people and the enemy having heard that their plans were known and that God had brought their counsel to nought, all the people returned to the work with renewed enthusiasm and purpose (15). There was a rearrangement of forces (16-21). Half of the people worked; half, full armed, stood guard. A trumpeter was beside Nehemiah, so that at the first alarm from outside all the workers and warriors could be called to the threatened spot. Then they went ahead with building of the wall.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

GOAT LEAVES CHILD.

"Mrs. Billy Goat," commenced Daddy, "had walked off and left her child, Billy Goat Junior.

"To be sure Billy Goat Junior had not suffered, because the farmer had looked after him and he was fast growing into a nice goat.

"Mr. Rooster went up to Junior's father one day not long after he had seen the young goat in the barnyard and said:

"'Congratulations, sir!'

"'What about?' asked Billy Goat.

"'I hear that you've a fine son and that Mrs. Billy Goat is unfortunately lost. I have heard that she wandered off in search of some special food she wanted and that she has not come back.'

"'Dear me, dear me,' said Billy Goat. 'I'm sure I didn't know I had a son.'

"'You didn't know it!' crowed Mr. Rooster. 'What an unnatural father you are.'

"'Mrs. Billy Goat is just as unnatural a mother as I am a father,' said Billy.

"'Now you are puzzling me,' said Mr. Rooster.

"'Why should she bother about her child?' asked Billy Goat. 'Can't she take a walk if she wants to? She is not lost, I am sure. She has just taken a little stroll and will come back again.'

"Congratulations, Sir."

"'The kid would have died,' said Mr. Rooster, 'if it hadn't been for the farmer.'

"A little goat is always called a kid, just as Mrs. Hen's small children are called chickens.

"'That's it,' said Billy Goat. 'Why should she have worried about Junior, as I suppose I will call him now, when she knew the farmer would look after him?'

"'The very name he is called,' said Mr. Rooster. 'Every creature in the barnyard has been calling him Billy Goat Junior. Doesn't that make you proud?'

"'I'm not conceited,' said Billy Goat.

"'That would not be conceit,' said Mr. Rooster.

"'Why not?' asked Billy.

"'It would simply be a parent's natural pride.'

"'I haven't got it—sorry,' said Billy Goat, and he started to walk off.

"'You are very heartless,' said Mr. Rooster.

"But he saw it was useless to talk to Billy, so he wandered back to tell the hens all about his talk.

"Mrs. White Hen had just returned from a chat she had had with Mrs. Billy Goat, who had come back to the barnyard and who hadn't been able to recognize her own child.

"'What do you suppose she said to me?' asked Mrs. White Hen.

"The hens, roosters and chickens standing around clucked and crowed.

"'We haven't the slightest idea. What did she say to you?'

"'She said,' continued Mrs. White Hen in an excited tone, 'that she didn't care whether she had left Junior or not. Someone would look after him—most likely the farmer.'

"'Just what Billy Goat told me,' said Mr. Rooster.

"'But I asked her if she was not afraid that such a thing would not happen. Just imagine, I tried to explain to her, if the farmer should decide to wander off when you did.

"'She didn't seem to think much of such an idea. She was too calm for words. She just thought that everything would turn out all right, somehow, and she wouldn't worry about anything.'

"'Dreadful, dreadful,' clucked the hens.

"'Fancy treating our turkey children in such a way,' gobbled Mr. and Mrs. Turkey.

"'Well, sometimes I might be willing to eat mine up,' said Mrs. Pig.

"'Another unnatural mother,' said Mr. Rooster. 'Well, the only thing that can be said is that Mrs. Pig is too selfish to care about her little ones and the goats too like their family name—stupid—to care about a nice young kid like Billy Goat Junior.'

"And the turkey mothers and hens all agreed."

Little Brother Was Wise.

A little girl was recovering from an attack of scarlet fever, and the first day she was able to sit up she said: "Mamma, I guess I'll ask papa to buy me a baby carriage for my dollie." Her brother, aged five, overhearing the remark, exclaimed: "Well, you'd better strike him for it right away, for if you wait till you get well you may not get it."

COL. GARDNER DESERVEDLY POPULAR

© HARRIS & EWING

Col. Augustus P. Gardner, formerly representative in congress from the Sixth Massachusetts district, and the man who started the preparedness movement in congress, is the adjutant general of the Thirty-first division, National Guard, now at Camp Wheeler, Ga., six miles from Macon. This division, now commanded by Brig. Gen. J. L. Hayden, in the absence of Maj. Gen. F. L. Kernan, is composed of the National Guard forces of Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

A one-time Massachusetts member of congress as one of the ranking officers in a strictly Southern division is a rather unique situation, but Colonel Gardner is one of the most popular officers in the camp. He is held in the highest esteem by all the National Guard officers and especially by the residents of Macon.

After making an effort for two years, apparently without much success, to awaken the country to its unpreparedness for war, Colonel Gardner upon the outbreak of hostilities with Germany, resigned as representative and offered his services to the war department.

Having seen service in the Spanish-American war and having devoted years of his life to a study of military affairs, the colonel was no novice in military matters. Mr. Baker, the secretary of war, recognized at once the advantages of Colonel Gardner being in active service, by giving him a colonel's commission.

For a "down East Yankee" to come right into the very heart of the South with a division of 27,000 men, composed of real Southerners, and to make friends with all the officers and men, and at the same time with the residents of Macon, is no easy task. But the colonel has done all this and more. He is not only the friend of the soldiers and the Macon people, but he is the idol of the newspaper men "covering" the camp.

HEAD OF ARMY TRANSPORTATION

CLINEDINST

The subject of army transportation is so vast that in this article only transportation by rail can be considered. This is the backbone of our modern transportation system, yet it dates no further back in army history than the time of the Crimean war.

The army officer now in charge of transportation, Brig. Gen. Chauncey B. Baker, became deeply impressed with the importance of this branch of the service during the Spanish-American war, when he was chief quartermaster of the Second division of the Seventh Army corps and acting chief quartermaster of the Seventh Army corps. He has served three times in placing the army in foreign territory—twice in Cuba and once in Vera Cruz—and last summer served as senior member in charge of the American military mission to France and England.

He has struggled against inertia, and sometimes opposition, during almost 20 years of peace to bring this branch of the service to a point where it would readily be made effective in time of war.

It must be remembered that this enormous work, including the transportation of material and the mobilization of troops, is taking place without the suspension of commercial traffic and practically without inconvenience to the public.

ITALIAN PREMIER HAS HARD TASK

Orlando, the new Italian premier, is by no means the strongest man in the country. His cabinet record as minister of the interior was not reassuring from the point of view of those who want to subordinate everything to the winning of the war. He did not handle the food supply situation with very great success, and he lacked force in dealing with pacifists, socialists, and the German propagandists.

But at the present moment there is all the reassurance that is needed in the fact that Sonnino is to stay in the cabinet as minister of foreign affairs. Sonnino is the strongest man in Italy and the most inflexible. He is for everything that will make for success for the armies and bitterly opposed to anything that looks to a discontinuance of the fighting until Germany and Austria are defeated. He would not stay in the new Orlando cabinet unless he was sure of the policy of its chief. With all his strength and greatness, Sonnino himself is not the best man for the premiership. He is not flexible enough. He cannot compromise and cajole and trim to meet the requirements of dealing with the present queerly constituted chamber of deputies. Sonnino was premier in 1906 and again in 1910. Each time his power continued for only about three months. He would fall again in the present situation, and then the country would lose him not only as premier but as foreign minister, in which office he is indispensable.

GREAT SOUTH AFRICAN STATESMAN

Have you ever been in South Africa? Have you ever lain at anchor in Table bay and looked at the red roofs of Cape Town standing by the fortress walls of Table mount? Have you ever felt the soft, warm earth of the veldt under your feet? Have you ever watched the ox wagons winding down a pass, or heard the moan of the ostrich in the darkness, or listened to the sudden rush of the torrent over the dry river bed, or smiled at the simple jokes of the country folk? If you have, you know "Jannie" Smuts, as he is affectionately called in South Africa; "Jannie" who was born within 50 miles of Cape Town. You know all about him without being told, for he is part of the whole scheme of nature and things there.

There is a theory that a man finds his best impetus in the country in which he is born. South Africa can certainly boast of one such great man in General Smuts, minister of defense of the Union of South Africa, member of the privy council, minister of aerial defense, and, at the present moment, one of the prominent men of the war.

The Laziest Man.

Senator Vardaman and Senator Reed were trying to think of the laziest men in their respective voting precincts. Senator Reed indicated his version of the laziest man, but he agreed that Senator Vardaman's man was lazier.

"Yes," said the Mississippi solon, "a prospective customer entered a shop and found the proprietor at one corner.

"'Gimme a quarter-peck apples,' was the request.

"'I can't get up to wait on you today,' the proprietor replied. 'Come in some time when I'm standing up.'"

Blamed the Bee.

He was a slow young man, and she was despairing of him ever attempting to kiss her. But as they stood at the garden gate, holding each other's hand, a naughty, nasty bee alighted on his neck, and its sting made him suddenly lurch forward, with the result that he found his lips pressed against those of his sweetheart. So he sealed the accident with a kiss.

"George!" she exclaimed in amazement, as she turned her head to smile.

"It was—er—the bee's—er—fault," stammered George, blushing all over his countenance. "I hope you're not angry."

"Not at all," she remarked, with a twinkle in her eye. "I'm sorry there wasn't a hive full!"

Man—Tommy, does your mother know that the buttons are off your coat?

Boy—Yes. She knows where they are, too.

Man—Where are they?

Boy—On father's trousers.

Not a Valuable Prize.

There's no prize worth winning dishonestly. We can't imagine anything worse than having a silver or gold reminder of a time when we were crooked.—Exchange.

The sweetness of revenge may sour the best disposition.

Was Perfect Lady.

She was a well-known but undoubtedly jealous actress, and she was confiding to her friend the details of her latest quarrel with a younger rival, who had not been slow in answering back. She wound up: "You can't imagine how impertinent she was! I assure you it was as much as I could do to keep my temper. If I hadn't been a perfect lady I'd have slapped her face."

There was an impressive pause. Then she added, "I slapped her face all the same."

A man may try to make a widow think he could not help loving her, but she invariably knows better.

Anyway, the cost of food makes a man more vigorous at a church social.

THE NEW METHOD

(By L. W. Bower, M. D.)

Backache of any kind is often caused by kidney disorder, which means that the kidneys are not working properly. Poisonous matter and uric acid accumulate within the body in great abundance, overworking the sick kidneys; hence the congestion of blood causes backache in the same manner as a similar congestion in the head causes headache. You become nervous, despondent, sick, feverish, irritable, have spots appearing before the eyes, bags under the lids, and lack ambition to do things.

The latest and most effective means of overcoming this trouble, is to eat sparingly of meat, drink plenty of water between meals and take a single An-u-ric tablet before each meal for a while.

Simply ask your favorite druggist for Anuric, double strength. If you have lumbago, rheumatism, gout, dropsy, begin immediately with this newest discovery of Dr. Pierce, who is Chief Medical Director of Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y. Send 10 cents for trial pkg. Large package 60c.

A PROMINENT MARION WOMAN

Marion, Ind.—"All last winter I suffered from a terrible pain in my back. I felt miserable all over, and could not walk but a short distance. Was unable to work and did not sleep well at night, as I was obliged to arise frequently. I learned of Dr. Pierce's Anuric, that cures such troubles, and sent to him for a trial package. This medicine relieved me in a short time of getting up at night, and I have gained considerable. I am better now than I have been for some time—sleep better, have less rheumatism and do quite a lot of work for a woman of my age. I had brickdust settings in my urine before using 'Anuric,' now there is none. I thank Dr. Pierce very much for this medicine which has done me lots of good.

"Use this letter—it may help some one else who suffers as I did, or worse."—MRS. ELLA A. GARRISON, Route 4.—Adv.

SPOHN'S DISTEMPER COMPOUND

STRANGLES

Or Distemper in stallions, brood mares, colts and all others is most destructive. The germ causing the disease must be removed from the body of the animal. To prevent the trouble the same must be done.

Backache of Women

How this Woman Suffered and Was Relieved.

Fort Fairfield, Maine.—"For many months I suffered from backache caused by female troubles so I was unable to do my house work. I took treatments for it but received no help whatever. Then some of my friends asked why I did not try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and my backache soon disappeared and I felt like a different woman, and now have a healthy little baby girl and do all my house work. I will always praise Lydia E. A Prayer of Thanksgiving

By LEWIS ALLEN

THAT we can see round about us the faces of friends: the deserving, that we may help them; the needy, that we may render aid; and little children, that we may rejoice:

THAT we can hear the kind words of loving friends, the sweet songs in church and home, the prayers of devout people, and the crooning of a Mother's lullaby:

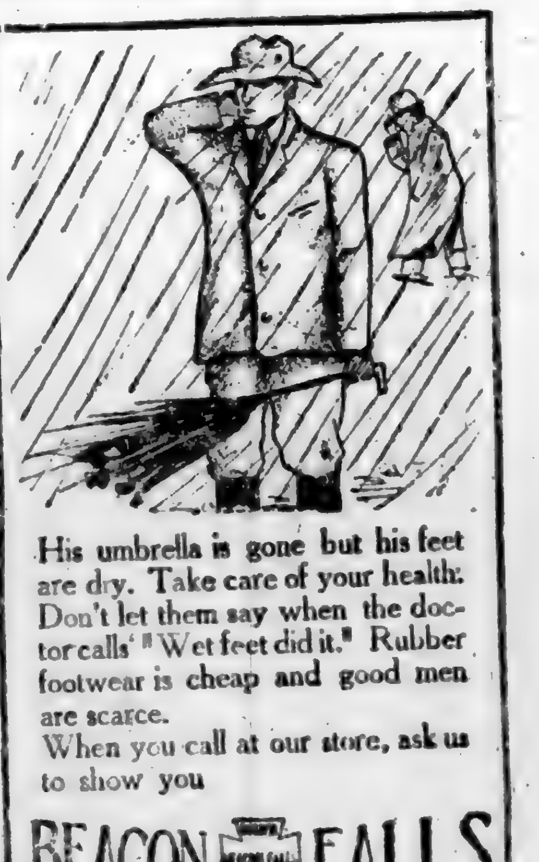
THAT we can feel loving hands in ours, trusting hands of little children, comforting hands upon our throbbing brow; that we can feel the warm embrace of the old folks who receive us at the homestead, or of our own who, dwelling apart from us, have come back this day:

THAT we can taste the savory good things, which, by God's bounty, are this day set before us through the miracle of Nature, which is God:

THAT we can speak to give sincere thanks to him who, in his great goodness, has permitted us to meet once more on this day of Thanksgiving; that we can speak hope and encouragement to our loved ones; words of comfort to the suffering and the discouraged and the lowly, words of hope and cheer and promise to those who have fallen by the way:

THAT we can pray with a knowledge that the prayers of the sincere are answered, that he to whom we offer our prayers is full of loving kindness and pity and forgiveness, and that his help is assured:

TRULY, all these things are God's gifts, and without them there could be no Thanksgiving. Teach us to appreciate them for thine own Glory. AMEN!



His umbrella is gone but his feet are dry. Take care of your health. Don't let them say when the doctor calls "Wet feet did it." Rubber footwear is cheap and good men are scarce.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

SEASON TO REJOICE

Reasons for Thanksgiving Are So Many as To Forbid Gloom.

THE world may well seem never to have been so troubled, never to have had so much to regret. The Great War has bred cynicism and despair. But Nature is not a pessimist. A year's sun, a year's rains, a year's labor, have not been without their fruits. In farm and factory, in public endeavor and in private struggle toward the light, the twilight of the year shows results that forbid the gloomy and inspire courage and good cheer. The instinct of thanksgiving belongs to courage. Gratefulness is the handmaiden of grit. Nature's whisper of well-being rises to a splendid volume of wholehearted song. Whatever may happen in America's own life, or in America's relations with the rest of the world, the reasons for thanksgiving shine with an unquenchable light. No disaster threatened or possible can obliterate the great fact of piled riches in natural and human resources. The fixing of Thanksgiving as a festival at the close of the harvest era is, after all, but an adaptation of symbols. The symbol is worth having, since it always visualizes the eternal charity of Nature herself, and since it is an ever present reminder of the finest resources in human ideals, human aspiration, human will to win. It is from the gathered harvests, the assembled fruits of labor, the established signs of productive power in every activity of men and women that thanksgiving gets its meaning.

Being Thankful.

Thanksgiving is not a day, it is a habit. We cannot be thankful on Thanksgiving day unless we have been learning how every day in the year. Here are some simple rules: Walk on the sunny side of the street; live as much as possible in the best room in the house; think about your friends, not your enemies; talk about your good luck, not your bad. These are some of the ways of acquiring the spirit of cheerfulness which is the only soil in which the flower "Thanksgiving" will grow.

HOUSEKEEPERS WARNED

Washington, Nov. 24.—This statement was made by Herbert Hoover, United States food administrator:

"We have reports from various parts of the country of crooks, thieves and confidence operators who are going from house to house purporting to be authorized by the food administration and other departments of the government to collect or commandeer foodstuffs for the government or the army.

"I wish to say emphatically that no department of the government has or will ever make such demands on householders, and that all such people are petty frauds and should be held for the police. The government agencies are investigating various cases and information is sought of all such persons by this department."

INCREASE GIVEN IN FREIGHT RATES

Railroads of State Granted a Concession by the Public Service Commission.

SUSPEND 15 PER CENT RAISE

People of State Advised by State Food Administrator Barnard That Nation May Be Obliged to Dole Out a Regular Food Ration.

Indianapolis.—The public service commission of Indiana entered an order permitting the railroads in Indiana to put in effect schedules of freight rates increasing the present rates approximately 5 per cent, in line with a petition from the carriers which has been before the commission for some years. At the same time the order permanently suspended the 15 per cent increase tariff schedules, for which the carriers have been contending since the interstate commerce commission granted such increases, in general, in interstate business.

The hearing on the 15 per cent increase cases adjourned, following a declination on the part of J. L. Minnis, representing the carriers counsel, to suspend voluntarily the proposed increases for a period of ten days, or until the commission should have time to dispose of the case permanently. This left only one course open to the commission, according to the commissioner's statement, and that was the suspension of the tariffs permanently, since the temporary suspension would become of no effect Nov. 19 and 20.

Commission's Order.

The commission's order gave the reasons for the action as follows:

"The hearing was resumed Wednesday, November 14, at ten o'clock a. m., and concluded Thursday evening, November 15, 1917. The evidence consisting of nearly 1,000 pages, the exhibits and briefs nearly as much more, all being intricate and perplexing, and there being but two working days left before the period of our suspension would expire, and the commission havingly frequently postponed the hearing at the request of both respondent and protestants, giving each time that properly should have been devoted by the commission to a study of this case, asked the carriers voluntarily to suspend the effective date of these tariffs so that protestants might file an additional brief and the respondents their reply brief.

"The carriers refused to suspend said tariffs even for the short period of ten days. Therefore, in justice and fairness to all we have no alternative but to suspend said tariffs, and we are simply suspending said tariffs in order to give the commission time to study the evidence as rapidly as the volume of such can be intelligently examined.

According to Evidence.

"The commission will grant such increases, if any, as will be warranted by the evidence.

"It is therefore ordered, by the public service commission of Indiana, that the tariffs suspended by order No. 1052, which tariffs increase freight rates on commodities 5 per cent, be and hereby are permitted to become effective as the postponement supplements expire.

"It is further ordered that the tariffs suspended by order No. 3391, which tariffs carry increased rates on petroleum and petroleum products, be and are hereby suspended permanently.

"It is further ordered that the tariffs suspended by order No. 2955, which tariffs carry increased class rates, be and are hereby permanently suspended."

Fear Rationing by Nation.

Unless there is an awakening to the food issue in this country the government will be compelled to issue rations to its citizens. This is the solemn statement of H. E. Barnard, state food administrator, who returned from Washington. The Indiana food administrator was in conference since Monday with Herbert Hoover, national food administrator, and food administrators of other states.

"And this action is nearer than most persons think," added Mr. Barnard. "The situation is far more serious than is generally realized. It is simply awful. The wheat and pork situation especially is giving Washington more worry than the raising and training of the army. Each day it becomes clearer that this war is to be won by food.

"We cannot go on in our own sweet way any longer and do what we please about our food. Unless there is an awakening very soon the food in this country will have to be doled out in the form of fixed rations as is being done in other war-ridden countries. We are at war and we cannot go on using up the things inadvisedly that may turn the tide of battle against us."

Staff Members of New Militia.

Harry B. Smith, adjutant general, made public a general order from his office, in which was contained the personnel of the staff of the First regiment and First separate battalion of the new Indiana state militia, which is to be commanded by Col. Charles A. Gerrard of Indianapolis, formerly quartermaster general of Indiana. Several vacancies in the staff exist, and appointments by the governor to fill these vacancies will be made in the near future, according to the opinion of General Smith.

May Lose by Hoarding.

H. E. Barnard, state food administrator, has issued a statement through the state council of defense urging the farmers of Indiana not to hoard their potatoes at this time and to give attention to the government statistics regarding the potato crop.

"The price of potatoes is at present $1.65 a bushel," said Mr. Barnard. Reports for October give the crop for 1917 as 453,000,000 bushels. This is the biggest crop of potatoes in the history of the United States. In view of this fact the prices are all out of proportion to what they should be. The farmers all over the country are storing the crop in hope of higher prices in the spring. No more foolish practice could be imagined. It will be very surprising if the big drop does not come before April."

New Milk Rules Announced.

The state board of health announced new milk rules to become effective January 1. The rules will be effective as state statutes and it will be the duty of health officers to enforce them. Dr. John N. Hurty, state health commissioner, declared that 80 per cent of the 4,000 infants dying annually in Indiana because of intestinal disorder received their infection from dirty milk. Three grades of milk and one classification of pasteurized milk are established by the new rules which follow:

"Grade A—Raw Milk. Milk of this grade shall come from cows free from disease as determined by tuberculin tests and physical examinations by a qualified veterinarian, and shall be produced and handled by employees free from disease as determined by medical inspection of a qualified physician, under sanitary conditions, such that the bacterial count shall not exceed 10,000 per cubic centimeter at the time of delivery to the consumer. It is recommended that dairies from which this supply is obtained shall score at least 80 on the United States bureau of animal industry score card.

"Pasteurized Milk—Milk of this grade shall come from cows free from disease as determined by physical examinations by a qualified veterinarian, and shall be produced and handled under sanitary conditions, such that the bacterial count at no time exceeds 200,000 per cubic centimeter. All milk of this class shall be pasteurized under official supervision, and the bacterial count shall not exceed 10,000 per cubic centimeter at the time of delivery to the consumer.

Dairies Must Score 65.

It is recommended that dairies from which this supply is obtained shall score at least 65 on the United States bureau of animal industry score card.

"Grade B—Milk of this grade shall come from cows free from disease, as determined by physical examination, of which one each year shall be by a qualified veterinarian, and shall be produced and handled under sanitary conditions such that the bacterial count at no time exceeds 1,000,000 per cubic centimeter. All milk of this class shall be pasteurized under official supervision and the bacterial count shall not exceed 50,000 per cubic centimeter when delivered to the customer.

"Milk dealers shall be required to have a permit or license to sell any grade or class of milk and to use a label of such grade or class. Such permit or license shall be granted only after the local health department has determined that the milk of the dealer actually belongs to the grade, and it shall be revoked and the use of the label forbidden when it is determined that the milk is not in the grade or class designated.

Milk Must Be Graded.

"All milk shall be labeled and marked with the grade in which it is to be sold. Besides the letter of the grade, that is, 'Grade A,' 'Grade B,' 'Grade C,' and the words 'raw' or 'pasteurized,' the label shall also show the name of the producer or distributor.

"Milk not suitable for human consumption may be sold for industrial purposes, provided it be heated to a higher temperature than necessary for pasteurization, and delivered in a distinctive container plainly marked with the words, 'Not suitable for human consumption,' in letters not less than one-fourth inch in length and one-twelfth inch stroke.

"The tuberculin test required in the case of cows producing 'Grade A' milk shall be administered only by qualified veterinarians who have been authorized to make the test by the state veterinarian.

"Health officers are hereby instructed to adopt such methods of inspection and regulation as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of these rules.

"Grade C—Milk of this grade shall come from cows free from disease as determined by physical examination, and shall include all milk that is produced under conditions such that the bacterial count is in excess of 1,000,000 a cubic centimeter.

"All milk of this class shall be pasteurized or heated to higher temperature, and shall contain less than 50,000 bacteria a cubic centimeter when delivered to the consumer."

State School Honored.

Indiana university was named president, Princeton university chosen vice president and Pennsylvania university, secretary at the closing session of the nineteenth annual conference of the Association of American Universities at Iowa City.

Thirty educators from 20 of the country's foremost schools took part in the three-day conference which ended with a general discussion of the advisability of "outside professional engagements by members of professional faculties."

THOUSANDS DIE IN BIG BATTLE

PILES OF SLAIN TELL STORY OF GREAT BATTLE'S FURY IN ITALY.

DEAD MEN LIE IN HEAPS

Struggle for Asiago Plateau Is Most Sanguinary Encounter in History —Positions Change Hands Repeatedly — Units Wiped Out.

Italian Headquarters in Northern Italy, Nov. 26.—The battle of the mountains is raging with unexampled violence. The Italians again hold the Monte Tomba and Monte Persica positions, which they lost Thursday night. The losses have been very great, but the enemy's far exceed those of the Italians.

Italian Headquarters in Northern Italy, Nov. 26.—The battle between the Piave and Brenta rivers in the hills leading to the Venetian plain is reaching a climax with a fury of action exceeding anything that has taken place on that front.

Some positions, after fluctuating in furious mass attacks in which the Germans joined the Austrians, are again in the hands of the Italians, who made a magnificent charge up the slopes.

Up and down the slopes this fearful carnage is proceeding, and four attacks have been swept back over the Italian lines over heaps of enemy dead. Only at one point has the enemy succeeded in making headway with his overwhelming numbers, and here the Italians have given ground, with the final issue still in doubt.

Battle Without Precedent.

A detailed description of this most decisive engagement has been given the correspondent by an eyewitness just returned from the battlefield. He is hardened to these scenes from recent experiences, but says that the bloodiness of the struggle now going on is beyond all precedent.

Against enemy reserves hurled in mass formation the Italians have interposed such heroic resistance that some regiments are reduced to three and four hundred men. The position at one point was almost encircled on three sides so that the enemy artillery fire swept at crossfire through the Italian trench lines and batteries. It was this which required a falling back of about 500 yards until decimated ranks could be re-formed for the final charge.

The Basilicata, Calabria, and Alpine brigades suffered most in this storm. Three battalions of Alpini were almost wiped out of existence.

But the enemy paid dearly for its first advance and did not enjoy it long. German and Austrian dead were piled up in heaps. Their trenches disappeared in the fury of the artillery action. The Italian lines over great stretches of ground were strewn thick with bodies of Germans and Austrians.

Heroism of Cavalry.

The count of Turin, commander in chief of the Italian cavalry which distinguished itself in the recent operations, was seen at cavalry headquarters just before starting for the front, and through one of his staff officers the correspondent obtained a written recital of the stirring exploits the cavalry performed during the recent eventful days. The document, which was events that have just transpired. like an old-time chronicle of chivalry, yet it is only a plain statement of events that hace just transpired.

The count was with his cavalry division throughout the six days and nights on the drive westward from the Isonzo front, when the third army was protected until it was re-formed along the present Piave line, and the recital of events authorized by the count gives some of the extraordinary experiences of the cavalry.

A Corps of Sacrifice.

"The Italian cavalry," the statement says, "proved worthy of the high confidence the country imposed on it. No man hesitated, though in the saddle for long hours under the exhausting rain and exposed to the cold of the nights without shelter. Conscious of its mission as a corps of sacrifice it pressed through the army moving to the rear and awaited the advance of the enemy masses.

"Two cavalry regiments awaited in the open the approach of the invaders. Both colonies had their horses killed under them. Then the enemy army attempted an enveloping movement. Against this menace two squadrons of the Montferrato cavalry were thrown and were steadily pressing the enemy back, when an explosion of one of our ammunition depots that had been abandoned by us nearly destroyed the squadrons in their entirety. Men, horses, swords, bombs, and grenades flew skyward under the force of the explosion. It was only then that the remnant of this heroic band fell back."

Whole Army Deserves Medal.

A high commanding officer on the field has summarized the fury of the present battles by declaring he could not say whom to commend for bravery, as the distinction would require a medal for the entire force engaged.

Northcliffe Now a Viscount.

London, Nov. 26.—Viscount Reading, lord chief justice, has been created an earl and Baron Northcliffe a viscount.

State Happenings

Muncie.—Gola Patton, head of a life insurance firm, is dead there from injuries received when his bicycle was struck by an automobile truck driven by G. Smith, grocer. Smith is held under $3,000 bond.

Rossville.—Mrs. Mary Gaddis celebrated her one hundred and first birthday anniversary.

Township trustees of Indiana were advised by the state coal administration to supply wood instead of coal to the poor.

Greensburg.—The Decatur county council has appropriated $1,000 to buy 16 pedestal lights to be placed around the hitchrack on public square.

Newcastle.—At the L. P. Hart public sale near Cadiz a team of mules sold for $417.50, brood sows sold as high as $50, a Jersey cow and calf sold for $135 and horses sold for $150 and $175. The sale totaled $6,300.

Fort Wayne.—At a meeting of representatives of the various woman's organizations of the city, resolutions were adopted in favor of obtaining a home demonstration agent.

Rushville.—Russel Moore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Seth Moore, suffered a broken collar bone when he was thrown from a buggy in a runaway.

Richmond.—William Tompkins, age fifty, a deaf mute, died of injuries received when he stepped in the path of one automobile while dodging another one.

Greensburg.—Charles Duncan, age twenty-three, of Sandusky, is dead of injuries received when he tripped and fell backward against a circular saw at a mill where he was employed. A mother and sister survive.

Columbia.—A lighting system in the home of L. J. Friedersdorf, southeast of this city, exploded. The front porch was demolished, and the whole house was shaken.

Muncie.—Two hundred bushels of oats and about fifty bushels of beans were stolen from a barn on the farm of Frank Morgan. The thieves backed a wagon up to the barn, filled it and drove away.

Peru.—The new church built by the Baptist congregation at Fulton, at a cost of $23,000, has been dedicated.

Columbia City.—County Agent B. L. Hummel is organizing farmers' clubs in each township of Whitley county.

Columbia City.—The annual corn show of the county will be held in this city Friday and Saturday, December 14 and 15.

Anderson.—The 1918 tax duplicate shows the taxable property in Madison county is $41,000,000. The taxable property in Anderson is $12,287,000.

Anderson.—The report of commissioners on the proposed Pipe Creek dredging improvement in Madison and Delaware counties shows the work will cost $120,049.

Evansville.—Russell Stroud, age two, son of Urah Stroud of Dale, Spencer county, who was burned when he turned over a kettle of boiling water a few days ago, is dead.

Warsaw.—Judson Mason, age twenty, a former star on the Winona Agricultural college football team, is in a serious condition in a local hospital as the result of a fall from a tree which he was trimming.

Boonville.—Charles Schnepper, age sixty-five, a farmer, who, it is alleged, was struck by John Myers, a farm tenant, is not expected to live. It is said the men quarreled over a division of their corn crop.

Greensburg.—Trix, a dog, the hero of two fires, is dead, having been shot by an enemy, according to Parker Doyle, Big Four engineer, his owner.

Anderson.—The new church edifice of the Church of God here has been dedicated.

Seymour.—Retail grocers say there is little prospect of immediate relief of the sugar shortage which has been felt in this city since Saturday. Many of the dealers are without an granulated sugar. The supply of powdered sugar practically is exhausted.

Nashville.—Merchants of this town have bought large supplies of cranberries, and from all indications they will have cranberries for some time to come. For, as one leading merchant says: "No one wishes the berries without sugar, and there is not a pound of sugar in the stores of Brown county."

Columbus.—To conserve coal a movement has been started here to have all of the retail stores in Columbus, except drug stores, close each evening at six o'clock. Saturday evenings would be excepted. M. O. Reeves, county fuel administrator, will be asked to issue an order, requiring the stores to close at the time mentioned.

Aurora.—Peter Greeley and John W. Amos, deputy fish and game wardens, arrested Rolley J. Smith, age twenty-seven, a farmer, on the charge of hunting without a license. Smith pleaded guilty before James W. Shepherd, justice of the peace, and was fined $28.50.

Freelandsville.—A farmers' institute will be held here December 3 and 4.

Petersburg.—The jury in the case of William France, charged with assault and battery with intent to kill, returned a verdict of guilty, and he was fined $25. France, a wealthy farmer, was charged with attacking John Butler, neighbor, in a quarrel over a ditch.

Bloomington.—The metropolitan police board has appointed James C. Browning, sheriff of Monroe county, superintendent of the police force. Browning will resign as sheriff to accept. The board appointed John Kurk, captain; Perry Cardwell, sergeant, and Walker Peterson and Hugh Hinkle, patrolmen.

What the American Thanksgiving Day Means to Suffering Europe

by Charles Lee Bryson

Our army in France will celebrate the occasion fittingly and tell their French comrades its significance ☙ This "Yankee Feast Day" will be adopted by nations our great Red Cross organization is helping to fight starvation, disease and exposure ☙ ☙ ☙

UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD

This was once a picturesque mill and village beside a beautiful forest in France. The picture shows what the Germans did to it; not a house, not a tree left. The enemy soldiers are doing their best to follow the orders of their great Bismarck: "Leave them nothing but their eyes to weep with." The American Red Cross has under way gigantic plans for co-operation in rebuilding devastated sections of France, Belgium and Serbia.

FRANCE is adding a new feast day to her calendar—Thanksgiving Day. All along the line behind the battle front where the French and British are hammering back the invading Germans, and General Pershing's boys are beginning to "go to it;" all up and down their lines of communication; at all their training camps; at their naval bases and depots; wherever there are Americans in uniform—there Uncle Sam's boys will be eating turkey and cranberry sauce, and listening to sermons by their chaplains on the last Thursday of November this year.

France has never before been in close touch with this, the most characteristically American of all our holidays. Of course their Christmas, their Easter, their New Year's Day, and their various church festivals, correspond to our own. They have an adequate understanding even of our Fourth of July, for it is close akin to their own Fourteenth of July, the anniversary of the fall of the Bastile and the dawn of real liberty in France.

But Thanksgiving Day has always been Uncle Sam's own private and personal feast day, in which nobody else had a part. It had its origin in no great international, nor even national, event. At first it was not really American in scope, but was confined to the few hundreds of religious enthusiasts who fixed a day of public devotion and thanksgiving for deliverance from Indians and cold and hunger.

Even the materials for the feast were indigenous to America. Despite his name, which would seem to indicate an oriental origin, the turkey is a native of America, and was unknown in the domain of the sultan until imported there. The potato, which plays a minor but very important part at the feast, though later adopted by Ireland, was discovered in America. So was corn, which in one of its many forms usually makes a part of the meal. And even the tobacco which follows the meal in most homes, was not known outside of America until Sir Walter Raleigh and his compeers took it back to England.

Further, the American manner of celebrating this most American of all days has never been of a nature to call the attention of other nations, or of their citizens visiting here. On this day of all days the American has been wont to retire from public gaze, to refrain from any great public demonstration, and to give thanks in his own way and eat the meal in the privacy of his own family. The only notable seeming exception to this is the institution called the Thanksgiving Day games of the college football teams. But this is no real exception. The games themselves are always amateur affairs, primarily for the students themselves, and after the game every student who can possibly get home goes into retirement with his family for the great and solemn feast.

This year war has brought a change. Young Americans to the number of 20,000—or is it 300,000? Nobody knows, or is permitted to say if he does know—are in France, 3,000 miles from the family circle and the accustomed turkey. Most Americans had little hope that the day could be observed at the front, but General Pershing thought otherwise.

"The boys shall have their Thanksgiving Day," said the general.

That was all, but it was enough. It showed that the general had thought it all out beforehand, and that turkeys and cranberry sauce and all the "fixins'" for the feast, had been provided months before. Without doubt there will be football games, for many of the country's famous gridiron stars are wearing the khaki. And Uncle Sam's boys will sit down to their Thanksgiving Day feast, their bodies in France, but their spirits in the old home circle, with those whom they have gone forth to defend.

And France—what of her? It is her first experience with the Yankee holiday. But it will fit her case exactly. Thanksgiving Day had its origin in the religious spirit of gratitude for deliverance from very real and pressing danger. France today is full of that same spirit of thankfulness, for the presence of those clean-limbed, square-jawed, clear-eyed young Americans is the guarantee that France will be delivered from the danger of German conquest.

Not only in the spirit of feasting, but in the religious aspect of the holiday—especially in the religious aspect—we may expect the French to join heartily with the Americans in giving thanks, and we need not be surprised if they take Thanksgiving Day to their hearts as they have taken the American soldier, and make it their own for the rest of their national life.

Not the American army alone is giving the French reason to be thankful to that Providence which has raised up a powerful ally, but the American Red Cross, which stands ever back of the army and navy, helps to care for them, and takes on its shoulders the burden of feeding and sheltering and clothing the pitiful thousands of refugees.

Back of the French fighting lines are now these homeless, shelterless, women, old men and little children, in numbers almost unbelievable. On October 1 the American Red Cross was caring for 850,000 of them, and more were coming at the rate of 1,000 a day through one city alone, and no one has estimated how many others. The Germans, who had held them prisoner in the lines for three years, were driving them across the lines that the French government might have to feed them.

It was not possible for the Red Cross to provide a Thanksgiving Day feast for this multitude, even if they had known what it was. But the help given them—the portable houses in which reunited families might find shelter; the little furniture and few tools supplied them that they might begin the family life anew; the food to keep them alive and the clothing to keep them from freezing to death—such services as these have aroused in the volatile and emotional French heart a love for the American and his Red Cross which may easily encompass also the American feast day.

In the one little corner of Belgium which is free from the German heel, there also is the spirit of thanksgiving, though the Belgians know nothing of the American holiday. For there has come the American Red Cross, and only a few days ago it voted $589,930 for the relief of the Belgian refugees crowded behind their army in the little strip of soil still held by King Albert and Queen Elizabeth. This fund will be used especially to care for Belgian children, and to run a Belgian hospital for wounded soldiers, because the Belgian government hospital is now overtaxed.

For the feeding of the refugees, warehouses are built along the many canals, and supplies will be sent by boat all over that corner of the little kingdom into which are huddled the helpless ones who have fled from the German invader.

Serbia, too, has cause to be thankful for what the American Red Cross is doing. Serbian war prisoners in Austro-German camps are on the verge of starvation, and only the Red Cross could reach them. The Serbian government has placed $500,000 to the credit of the American Red Cross, and it has already bought 5,000 sacks of flour and shipped them through Switzerland and Austria, to be furnished the starving prisoners.

But of all the nations the Red Cross has befriended, France alone is privileged to witness a real American celebration of Thanksgiving Day, and of all those peoples the French are most likely to catch the American point of view. It is a safe prediction that the French will take enthusiastically to the idea of a day set apart on which to express their gratitude for blessings received.

And if the war lasts another year, and the next Thanksgiving Day finds the American army still on French soil, watch the whole French people seize upon the great American feast day, and celebrate it as enthusiastically as if it had originated in Paris.

THE WONDERFUL BOOK.

It Has the Power to Speak to People of Every Race, Condition and Every Age.

The Bible is the universal Book of the wide world. In hundreds of languages and dialects, heathen countries are today reading its pages, and a great army of missionaries is expounding its truths.

When Doctor Paton was printing his first New Testament in the Aniwan language, Chief Namakei, an old man, eagerly watched the missionary, and one day he said: "Does it speak?" "Yes," said Paton. "It can talk now in your own language." "Oh, let it speak to me—let me hear it speak." Paton then read a few lines, when the old man cried: "It does speak! Oh, give it to me!" Grasping the book, he turned it round and round. Then, pressing it to his heart, he shouted: "Oh, make it speak to me again!" Is not this the greatest work of the missionary, making the Bible speak to men?

It is said that more than five hundred thousand sermons are preached every Sunday from texts taken from the Holy Scriptures. Any but a divine book would have been worn out ages ago, but the more the Bible is used, the better it is liked. The cry everywhere today is, "Come over and help us!" All the gates are open to the Christian soldier sent of God, carrying with him the World of Power and preaching Christ to every creature.—Christian Herald.

TAKE TIME TO MEDITATE

Quiet Hours to Act as a Spiritual Directory to Put One in Right Direction.

Not long ago I had an experience that set me to thinking about the use of prayer and periods of meditation. I had an important conference to attend and realized that my time was limited in which to reach the place of my engagement. I found I had somehow mistaken the address, and knowing that I was getting late, I thought to save time by inquiring. Several persons whom I met and asked were ignorant of the building I wanted. Finally I became fretted and ran into a grocery store to inquire if they knew the name of the person I was seeking. The grocery clerk did not seem to know, but he said, "Have you looked into the directory?" He handed me the book, and very soon I located my party and went off wondering why I had not thought to save my time by consulting the directory before.

When one thinks about it, Jesus seemed to use the quiet times of prayer as a spiritual directory. He realized evidently that, despite the needs that pressed upon him from the people whom he came to serve, it saved time to send them away occasionally and betake himself to the still air of the mountain for meditation and prayer. — Christian Herald.

WHEN WE LOOK FOR FEELING

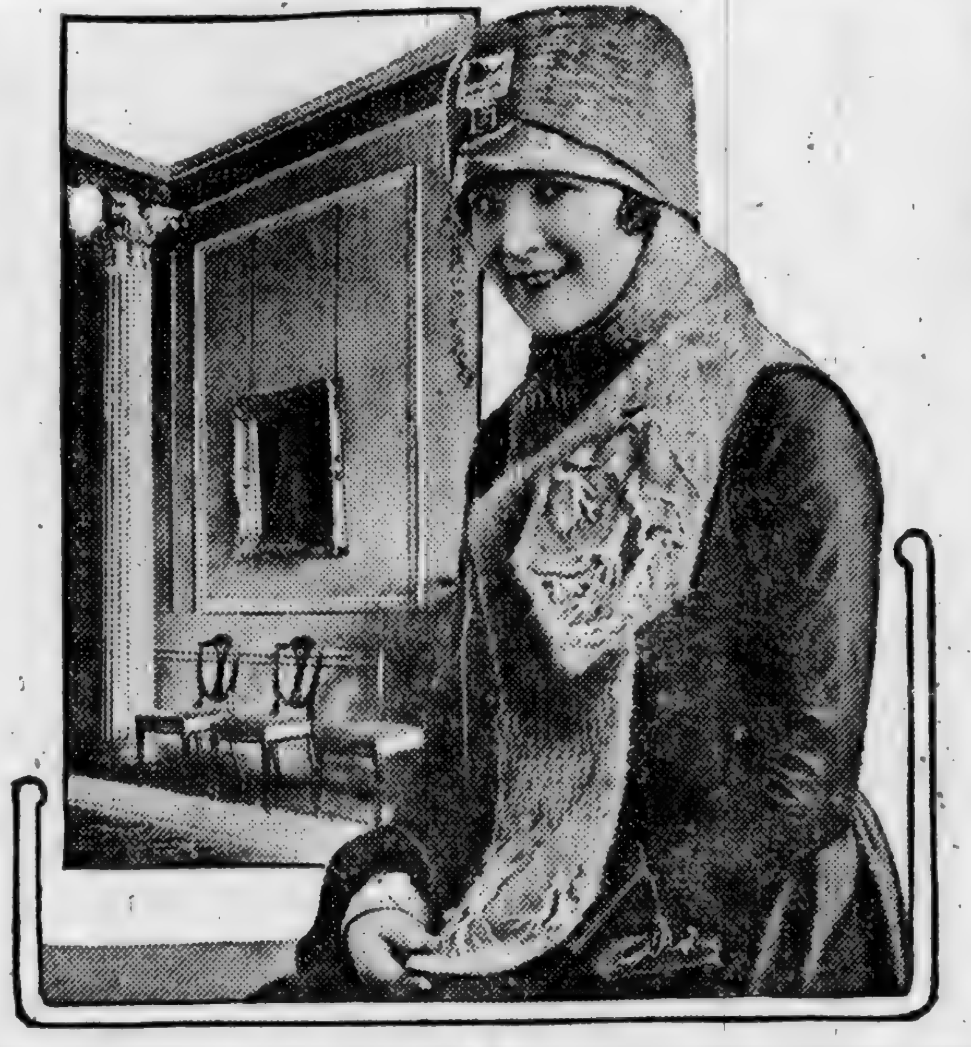
A Stumbling Block to the Christian Is to Worry Over Inner Emotions.

Feelings are a very delightful part of our experience. But they may be a very dangerous part. There are times when our fellowship with Christ floods us with an overwhelming feeling of his power and presence. There are other times when we feel dead and cold; all consciousness of his presence is gone. Has he changed? Is he less loving or faithful to us? He is "the same yesterday and today, yea and forever." Therefore we are to rejoice, always, not in our feelings, but in Christ. Dr. W. P. Mackay has spoken a needed word of warning: "I have had to do with many anxious inquirers, and I find the greatest stumbling block of all is this: They wish to be able to feel faith. Even the telephone cannot let us see a sound; it can let us hear a sound. You might as well speak of hearing a sight as feeling faith. 'Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.'" So let us believe without feeling and without seeing, praising God that his perfect sufficiency in meeting all our needs all the time is not dependent upon what we feel, but upon what he says.—S. S. Times.

Charity.

How white are the fair robes of charity as she walketh amid the lowly habitations of the poor.

Anticipating Winter Sports



Here is a skating set that will add one more fascination to that wholesome and fashionable sport. Japan had a hand in its making, for it is decorated with hand-painted ornaments that are specimens of the beautiful handicraft of that hand-crafty people, and with applique of light green satin bordered with silver threads. If this was not woven in Japan its design certainly originated there.

The cap and scarf are made of satin in a very soft rose color, to begin with. At the ends of the scarf and in front of the cap there are emplacements of brocade as shown in the picture. On the scarf ends the brocade is sewed along the edges to the scarf with long stitches of heavy, gray angora yarn. Then the entire surface of the scarf is covered with parallel rows of these long stitches. They veil the rose color with a mist of gray, because of the fuzziness of the yarn, and the effect is beautiful.

The scarf is about two yards long and in the neighborhood of seven inches wide, wrapped about the neck so that the novel hand-painted ornament comes in front. It is made of several small oblongs of celluloid apparently, in graduated sizes, and one posed over the other. They are very much like the rose-colored satin in shade, and the uppermost oblong has a meaningful and weird looking picture painted on it in several colors. It might be a landscape—upside down—or a scrap of sky and clouds. Whatever it is, the smiling Japanese shopkeeper assures our honorable stupidity that it is good luck to wear such an ornament. When it is to be found on a skating set like that shown here, there is no doubt that he speaks the truth.

The cap fastens with a chin strap that extends from side to side, made of the satin and angora. It is sewed to the inside of the cap on one side and fastens with a strap fastener on the other. The satin is caught up at the front of the cap revealing the green brocade, and held to place by two of those lucky ornaments. Both strap and cap are lined with the soft rose-colored satin.

Chenille Appliqued on Scarfs.

Among the new scarfs ushered in by the cold weather are some models of Italian silk, self striped.

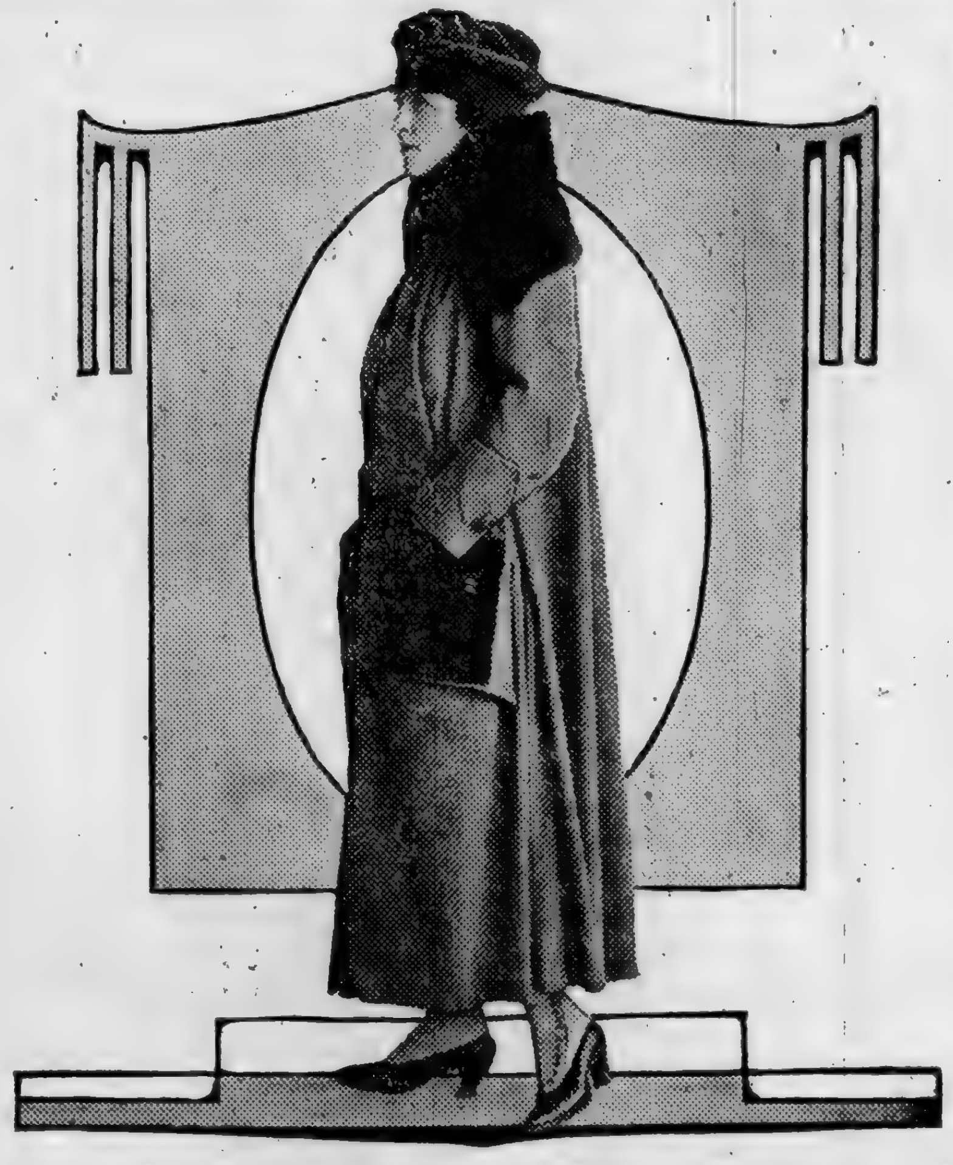
They are cut long and about ten inches wide, and made of a double thickness of silk.

One scarf of bright green is embroidered at the ends in a conventional design is self-colored silk floss that stands out. Green silk fringe finishes the edge.

Dance Slippers With Bows.

A few of the fancy old-fashioned slippers of satin which tie with big perky bows were noted at a recent dance, although the footwear as a whole stuck to the conventional pumps of gold and silver brocade.

Handsome Coat for General Wear



A combination of smooth-faced tan or sand-colored cloth with fine Hudson seal, removes some of the difficulties which lie in the path of the designers of coats. When the task is to achieve a handsome coat for general wear the designer knows to start with that no color is a better choice than tan, and no fur looks better with it than seal, they belong to one another.

Having this assurance as to pleasing color, the creator of new coats must show his ability, by original methods of cutting and deft use of new style features, in lines and in details of finishing. Whoever planned the coat pictured here betrays a masterful hand in these particulars. The coat is plain and full, with fashionable straight lines. Its fullness is cleverly managed by the insertion of three plaits at each side, back of the pockets. They are hardly to be noticed, being overshadowed by very large double pockets—an arrangement of a big square seal over a larger square of cloth. There is a high, square collar of the fur, and another of fashion's favorite vagaries appears in the half-belt that extends across the front of the coat. It widens at the center, departing from the straight and narrow path of the usual belt, and fastens at the left with buttonhole and bone button of generous size.

Plain coat sleeves rely upon their cuffs for the stamp of originality. These are merely straps whose ways are devious, but never asunder. They are placed side by side: the career of each ended by an inexorable bone button and a buttonhole that holds them fast. These are the mannerisms of an exceptionally clever performer, and they are also the delight of a cultivated taste in apparel.

Julia Bottomley

Joined Forces.

A woman, who had been given a quantity of square doilies three and four inches square, put them to good service by joining them together with wide lace and using them on her buffet; she objected to using them separately and was highly pleased with the scarf that resulted from joined forces.

Squares of tan linen embroidered in colors can be joined effectively to form table runners. Of course, the lace should match the color of the linen. If you should fail to find tan to match, dip white or cream lace in tea. Try a little piece of lace first so you can tell if the tea is of the proper strength.

THE ALCOHOL AGE.

"What is the matter with the world?" asked Dr. Charles Gilbert Davis, noted surgeon of Chicago, in a thought-arresting article in the Illinois Issue. His answer is, "A thousand years of alcoholic saturation."

"All life should evolute," he says; "alcohol produces evolution. Take the largest and finest breed of dogs—the Great Dane, for example—and for three or four generations feed them daily a little alcohol and what is the result? What was previously a large, noble animal will deteriorate into a snapping, snarling, fighting, almost hairless, insignificant little cur. And yet we feed men on this lethal poison for thousands of years and then wonder why we have disease, pestilence, insanity and war.

"In this dawn of the twentieth century it may be truthfully affirmed that the aggressive war brain is the brain that directly, or indirectly through heredity, has been poisoned by alcohol. The alcoholic brain cannot evolve those emotions of the human soul that make for peace. We may talk peace, legislate for peace, and make peace treaties, but wars will never cease till the brain is freed from the corroding effects of alcohol.

"One thousand years from now the historian will record the events of today and classify them under the general heading, 'The Age of Alcohol.' It will be pathetic but interesting literature."

BREAD OR BEER.

Sir Alfred Booth, chairman of the Cunard steamship line, was, when the war began, neither a prohibitionist nor a total abstainer. Early in 1916 he startled Great Britain by declaring that "the transport problem demands prohibition until the war is over." "I am not thinking of the temperance side of the question," he said, "we have got beyond that now. I am thinking of the demand which the trade makes upon the services of our ships, our railways and carts, and our labor." He denounced the use by the breweries and distilleries of thousands of tons of coal mined and sent to them every week, the barley and other produce carted and hauled by rail to the brewery, brought back again and distributed to the consumer. "If we are to maintain our armies in the field, we shall before very long have to choose between bread or beer."

MOTHERING THE SOLDIERS.

The W. C. T. U. has opened many recreation rooms for the soldiers. The homesick men who flock to them do not fail to express their gratitude for the cheery welcome and the homey atmosphere they find in these places. To the matron at the rooms in Washington, D. C., a poem was presented by young Robert E. Lee, grandson of the great Southern general, as an expression of his feelings. The last stanza runs thus:

When side by side we take our chance,
To live or die in bloody France.

For right and you;
Then never fear, you here at home
That we'll forget, where'er we roam
The W. C. T. U.

THE WORKINGMAN'S BURDEN.

Every workingman carries on his back a nonproducer. The laborer who pays his bills is charged a higher price to cover the loss the storekeeper sustains by failure of the drinking man to pay what he owes. When crime is committed or a family impoverished by the drink-debauchery of its natural support, the cost appears on the tax bill of the man who labors.

Jobs are made by the consumption of products, and if money is not spent for booze, it will be spent for other things which must be produced by labor.—From the Cyclopedia of Temperance.

ALCOHOL INCREASES FATIGUE.

Fatigue is due to the action upon nerve endings and nerve cells of poisonous products formed within the body as the result of muscular metabolism. For a fatigued person to add to his blood, unless in minute doses, another poison in the form of alcohol, is only to make matters worse rather than better. What are required are longer periods of rest.—Sir Thomas Oliver, M. D., LL. D., in "The Drink Problem of Today."

BUYS NEW CLOTHES.

In Denver soon after prohibition went into effect a woman exhibited with great pride the first dress her husband had ever purchased for her, although they had been married long enough to have a child in the eighth grade. She added that he had a new suit, too.

TO SYMBOLIZE A CLEAN LIFE.

Four thousand men in the First Reserve Officers Training camp at Fort Sheridan, Ill., signed this pledge:

"1. We undertake to maintain our part of the war free from hatred, wanton brutality or graft, true to the American purpose and ideals.

"2. Aware of the temptations incident to camp life and the moral and social wreckage involved, we covenant together to live the clean life and to seek to establish the American uniform as a symbol and guarantee of real manhood."

Red Cross Department

Under the direction of Mrs. Lysher three comfort tops were made from the scraps of outing from the work room and were sold at the Fair.

On account of Thanksgiving the sewing room is open this week on Wednesday, but next week the work will be on Thursday as usual. Everybody invited.

Due to unexpected hindrances the committee appointed to solicit Concord and vicinity were unable to work. We regret this very much and if there is any one who still desires to donate it will be very acceptable. Just notify or bring to Chas. Koch.

At the present time Mrs. Ira Bone of Concord, holds the championship for fast knitting. She has completed a sweater and a pair of wristlets in one week, and is now knitting her second sweater.

Some of the ladies near Concord regret that they are not permitted to take garments home and make for the Red Cross. This could be done under the following conditions: First, with the aid of the St. Joe Branch chairman, organize a class of not less than five ladies. Second, Choose a chairman who is a member of the Red Cross. If this chairman, or any lady appointed by her, is willing to be responsible for any garments lost or spoiled then the sewing may be let out. Up to date we have found no one in St. Joe who will take this responsibility and give it the requisite time.

There has been organized a Thanksgiving Hunting Club for the benefit of the Red Cross. The results of the hunt are to be sold and the monep given to the Red Cross. To Grover Curie and Merritt Hull is honor due for this idea and they are to be commended for their patriotism and enterprise. They also have the distinction of being the first to offer to supply our treasury without solicitation. If everyone would take this same interest we would not need to worry about how we are to keep our chapter supplied with yarn and outing. This is not a one man war neither is the Red Cross a one person affair. The responsibility is yours whether you are willing to take it or not. If you have talent, musical or literary, patriotism, ambition or a combination of all, why not use your ability for your country? Select the people or organization you can best work with and get busy for the benefit of the Red Cross. If we were all busy there would be no time to criticise the methods of the other fellow.

Red Cross workers of this Branch feel much pleased with the results of the Fair held in Widney's Opera House November 22. Not only was this an enjoyable event but the fact that we cleared $132.85 proves it also a financial success and we desire to heartily thank everyone who in any degree contributed to the sucess of this project. The farmers contributions were excellent and brought good sums of money and the town people gave liberally. Some of the donations were in money of which Mrs. Kate A. Leighty's contribution of $10 00 was the largest. During the day all fancy work and produce sold at market price and in the evening the crowd gathered to witness the auction sale. This was in charge of the rising young auctioneer, Mr. McNamara, and he surely demonstrated his ability. He was assisted by Mr. Brunson, who acted as clerk, and we appreciate the services of these men. Before the sale the Misses Agnes Sechler, DeVeta Bayman and Marguerite Leighty sold Red Cross tags. They wore the Red Cross nurse uniforms and were very successful. The lunch stand and pop-corn booth were rushed as was also the Gypsy camp. Mrs. Dolph Frye, Mrs. F. R. Bowman and Mrs. Ed Leighty were costumed as gypsies and told fortunes like professionals. The "Cave of the Winds" furnished amusement with Mrs. Will Hamilton as guide. Thanks to Mr. Hart, our electrician, there was something doing from entrance to exit. Much of the credit for the success of this Fair belongs to the manager, Chas. Koch, and to the soliciting and entertainment committees.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Asking for Divorce.

Just because Dr. A. A. Kramer, mayor of Butler, had told his wife that he hated her and did not love her as he once did, she took it for reason enough for a legal separation and has filed a suit in the circuit court for divorce, asking for $5 000 alimony and the custody of their one child, Hal, aged nine years, with an allowance of $60 per month for his care.

Another divorce suit filed in the circuit court is that brought by the wife of John H. Grove, of Auburn, who claims that her husband did not support her and that she has been obliged to work as chorewoman, and that her husband has left their home and is supposed to be in Ohio.

Knisely-Miser Nuptials.

The marriage of Miss Ellen Viola Knisely, daughter of Joseph R. Knisely, of near St. Joe, to Fred L. Miser, of Mets, Indiana, took place at the M. P. parsonage at St. Joe, Thanksgiving morning at 11 o'clock, by Rev. J. C. Coons. After the ceremony the parties drove to the home of the bride's parents, where a bountiful dinner was served. Those present were:-George Knisely and family, and Frank Cooley, of Hicksville; Ray Littlefield and father, of Wayne; and Albert Miser, of Moore, Ind. The newly-weds will make their home near Metz, on a farm.

Mr. Meiser is 39 years of age and follows carpenter work. The groom has been married once before, losing his first wife by death. He is a son of John Meiser and wife of Auburn. The bride is 25 years old.

Women Becoming Active

The federation of womens' clubs of our state have become active in the campaign for full conservation. A special appeal has been sent out to the presidents of the clubs.

Prominent in this appeal is the suggestion that women cease to be "gauzy" and wear warmer clothes so that the furnace won't have to be kept so hot to keep the dear women warm.

The circular suggests the following:

That wood be used as fuel whenever possible.

That the heated rooms in every home be reduced to those necessary to the household's needs.

That women dress warmer.

That electric lights be turned off when not in use and that the maximum use be made of the "simmer" on the gas range.

That clubs, churches, organizations, etc., avoid the heating of large auditoriums when possible, by holding their meetings in private residences.

That those who can afford to buy high priced coal buy it and thereby release the cheaper coal to families less able to buy.

We have not been informed as to what action the local clubs have taken in response to the request of the Federation.

State-Wide War Council

December 13-14 a state wide war conference will be held at Indianapolis, at which time all those interested and working in the different departments for the success of the war are invited to be present. All of the different phases will be talked over by men of national reputation and the future program for the work of the local workers will be mapped out here.

Our Part In The War

"No matter how great the cost may be, this country's participation in the world war will bring a reward immeasurably greater. When the smoke of battle clears away and the prayed-for peace is established, that great, intangible, but mighty, thing, which may aptly be called the American soul, will have assumed the strength and flawless proportions to which it was destined. It has been great and strong and virile, but it has lacked much of the element of oneness. War will weld the vagrant, shifting ingredients into a great single unit, and when the great American soul comes fully into its own, the dreams of the forefathers—the founders of this nation—will be realized."

Felix J. Streyckmans, chairman of the foreign-language division of the Liberty Loan executive committee of the seventh federal reserve district, thus expressed himself when the recent campaign in the interest of war bonds was at its height. Mr. Streyckmans was born in this country, but his parents came from Belgium.

"The war will mean the permanent passing of the hyphen", he went on. "There will be no more hyphenated Americans; there will be no more divided allegiance, although the natural motherland sentiment may burn as brightly as ever before. But America will be the land of Americans. America will be as hospitable as in the past, as wholesome in her desires to extend the helping hand, but it will be a more united America—an America whose flag can have but one meaning to all. War is a great leveler of caste, and the time is not far distant when there will be but one class in this great land of ours—and that class will be known by one word—'American'.

"Victory has not yet perched upon the banner of free America, but it must perch there eventually. The more wholehearted and earnest we do our part in the great struggle, the sooner will the peace of the entire world be assured and that peace will prove a blessing to friend and foe alike. The organizations of American citizens of foreign birth or extraction which resulted in connection with the recent campaign to raise war funds, must be maintained and strengthened for future work. When another loan is authorized by the government at Washington, the foreign-language division of our people must be in a position to do even greater work than it did in the last campaign."

Mr. Streyckmans and his associates will labor throughout the interim between campaigns to strengthen the various foreign-language organizations for work in the next Liberty Loan drive in the seventh federal reserve district.

Leon Sechler and wife, of Garrett and Mrs. Grace Dilley of Fort Wayne, were guests in the Frank Sechler home, Thanksgiving. Mrs. Dilley remained until Sunday.

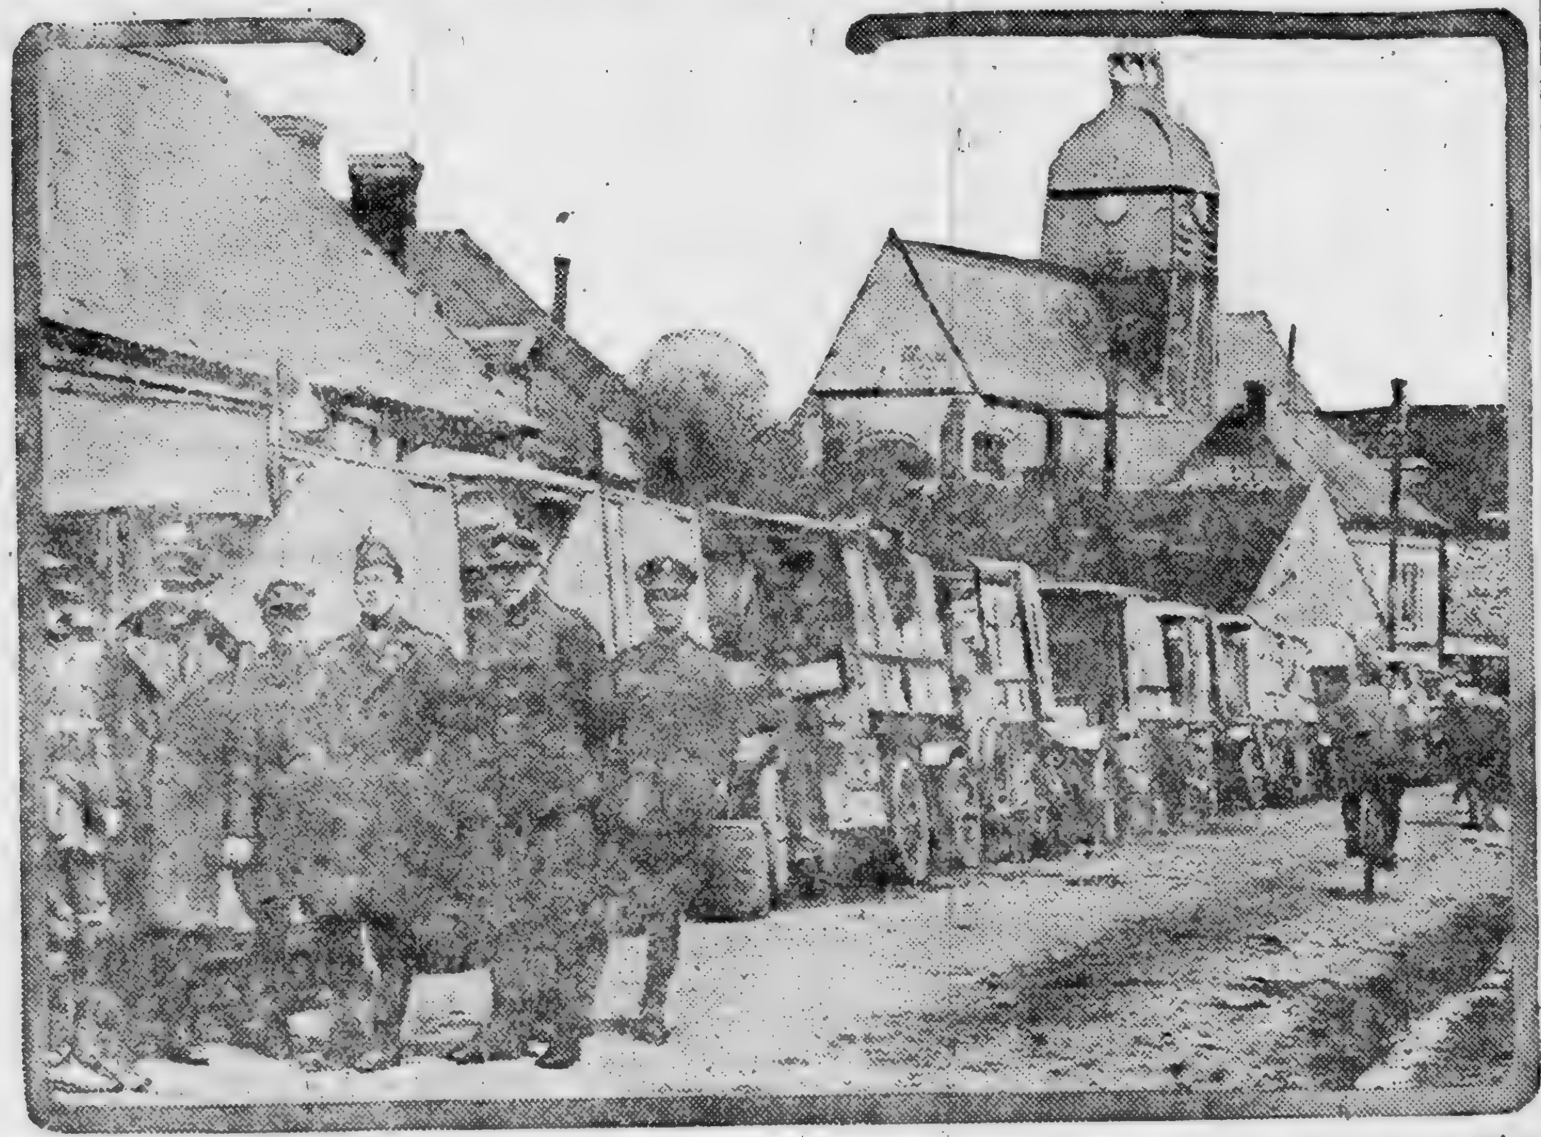
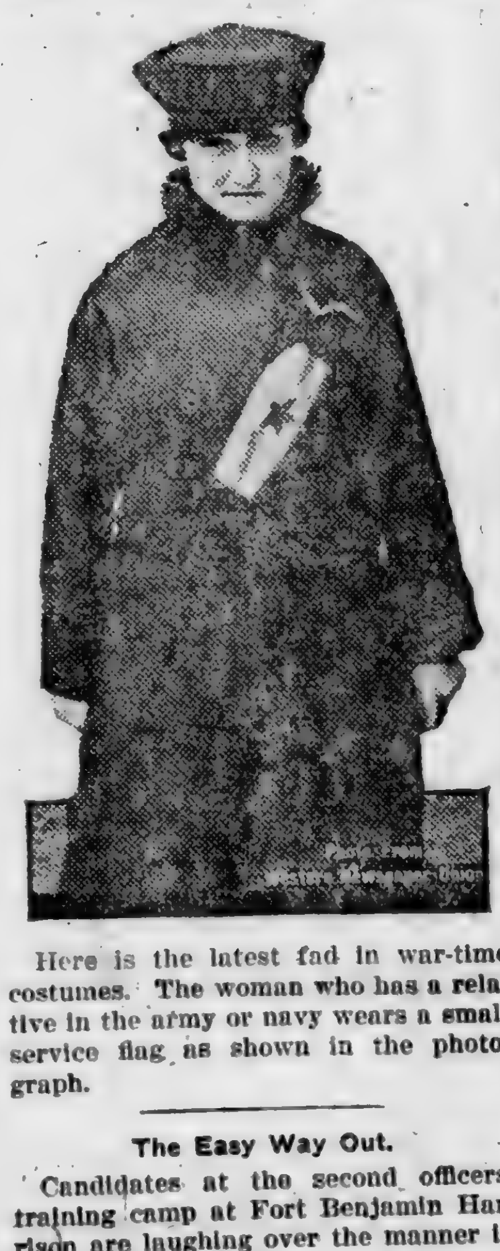
AMERICAN AMBULANCE UNIT TAKEN OVER BY ARMY



This photograph shows the Norton-Harjes ambulance unit, one of the first American contingents to see service in France. It has just been taken over by the American army under General Pershing. The unit performed heroic work in aiding the wounded, and many of its members were awarded the Croix de Guerre for their bravery.

WEARING THE SERVICE FLAG



Here is the latest fad in war-time costumes. The woman who has a relative in the army or navy wears a small service flag as shown in the photograph.

The Easy Way Out.

Candidates at the second officers' training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison are laughing over the manner in which one of their number in a recent trench maneuver acquired the grade of zero for intelligence on the efficiency card of the instructor officer, according to the Indianapolis News. The officer had overheard the following conversation, when a medical officer attempted to enter a trench where the candidate was standing guard:

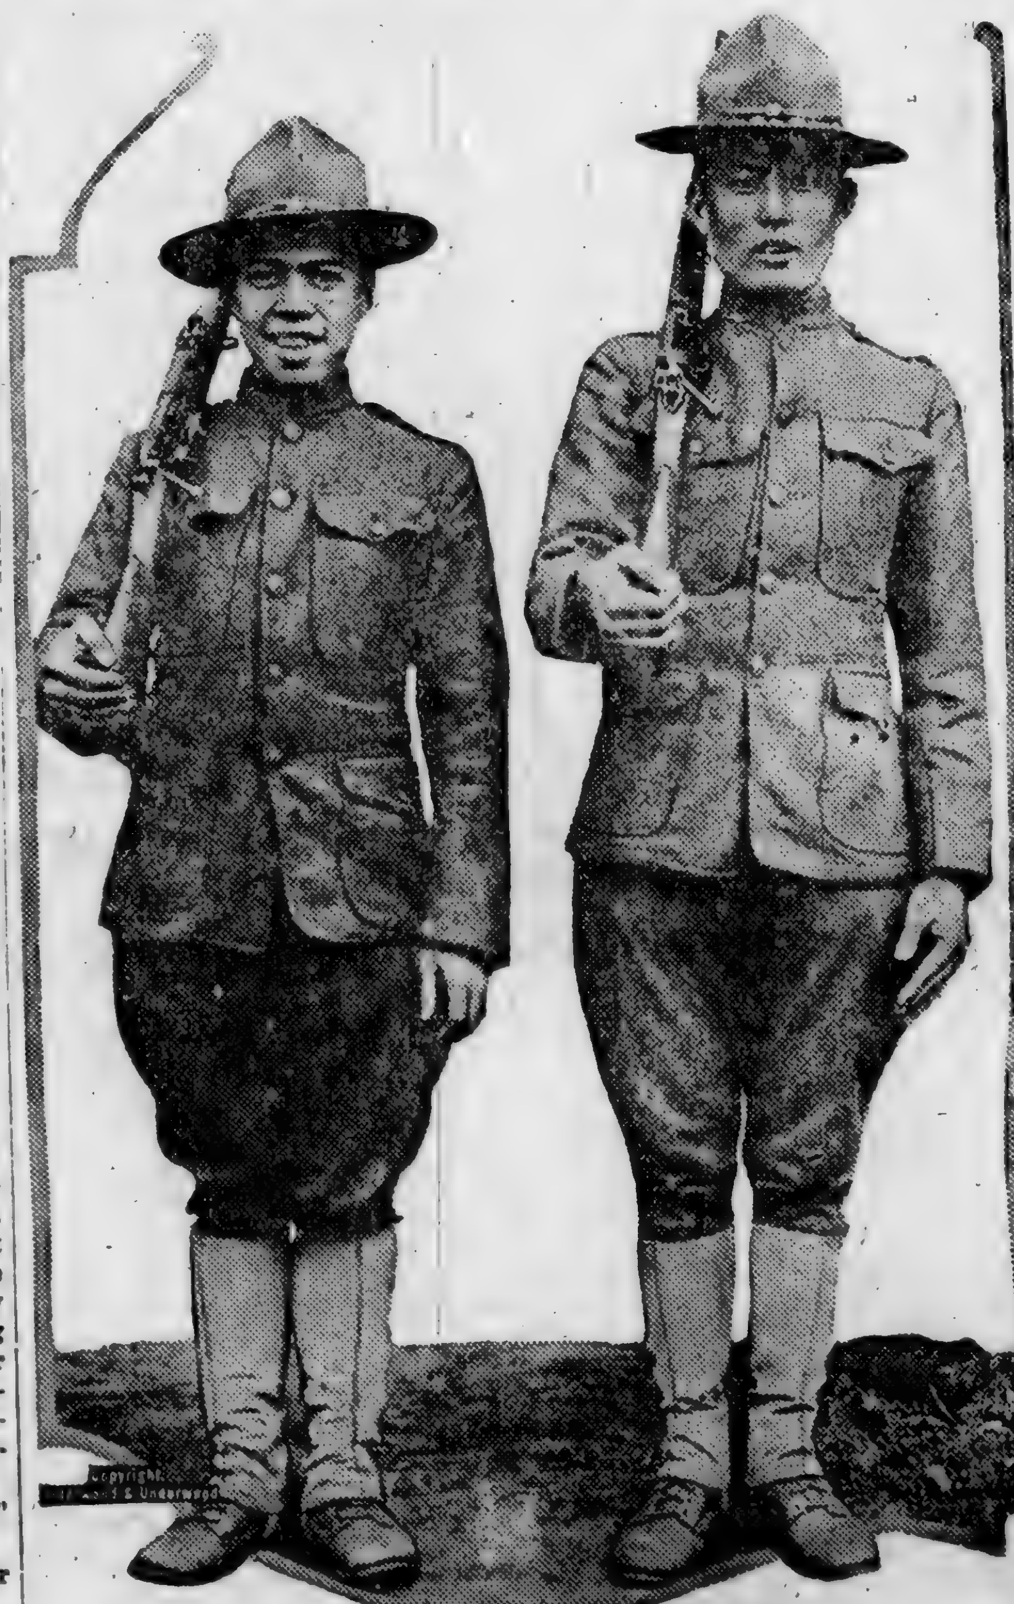
"Advance and give the password," from the sentry.

"I haven't got it," the medical officer answered.

The situation, though not unusual, was a problem to the sentry. He chose the easy way out:

"Advance, and I'll give it to you."

CHINAMEN WILL FIGHT IN AMERICAN ARMY



Quite a number of Chinese residents of the United States are in the National army and are expected to make fine soldiers. These two, now at Camp Upton, are typical of the Orientals who have responded to the draft.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

CONTROLS ALL NAVAL OPERATIONS

The most important man in the navy today is Admiral William S. Benson, ranking officer in the service and chief of naval operations. Yet little is heard of him outside naval circles.

Outwardly or officially, Admiral Benson is "charged with the operations of the fleet and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in war." When congress created the particular billet which he now fills on May 11, 1915, the duties of the chief of naval operations were thus defined, Admiral Benson, then a rear admiral, took the job and the public promptly forgot he was there. When the war came there were so many other things to occupy the public mind that no one apparently has sought to disturb Admiral Benson's official seclusion.

Outside his door on the second floor of the navy department is a "positively no admittance" sign. A distinguished visitor to Washington inquired the other day whose office it was and when informed blandly inquired, "Who is Benson?" Evidently he was one of the unacquainted land variety.

Deciding matters of naval strategy in home and foreign waters, looking after the details of every phase of America's naval war program ashore or afloat, and supervising all matters relating directly or indirectly to naval war plans, these are the most important of the duties which Admiral Benson has to perform. From a practical viewpoint he is commander in chief of the navy ashore and afloat. He is to the navy what the chief of staff is to the army.

MAY REVOLUTIONIZE MOTOR POWER

Scientific tests are still being made under authorization of congress of a wonderful device of Garabed T. Giragossian, an Armenian inventor and mechanic of Boston, which if all that is claimed for it proves true, will revolutionize the motor power of the world.

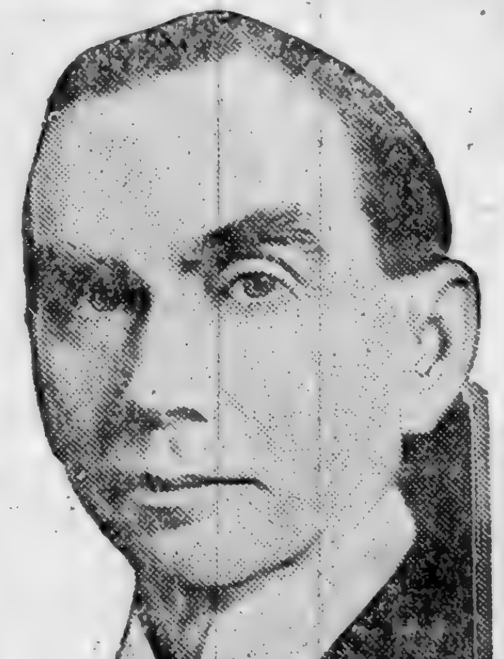
The inventor calls his device a "free energy" generator and it is significant that congress deemed the matter worthy of scientific tests. Just what the engine is, is not made known. It is claimed by the inventor that it can drive a battleship any distance without stop for fuel, for this strange device uses no fuel; that it can propel an airplane around the world with armor heavy enough to turn aside the heaviest shells, and perform other feats that seem most uncanny.

In speaking of his invention, Mr. Giragossian says:

"I have not overcome gravity or anything of that kind. The source of the energy is already existent and I am going to utilize it by means I have discovered. It is concentrated. If we want to make use of electricity out of the earth we concentrate on that. It is necessary to build boilers and engines to produce thousands of horse power out of coal. My device is utilized in such a way that it is almost condensed energy. The source of the energy is very great. It is portable and you can carry it from place to place.

"My engine will produce power to turn something, that is all. It does not require any heat. It can be put in any room, in any cellar. The principle is so extremely simple that the minute you see it you will say to yourself: 'Well, why didn't I think of that before.'"

LOOKS AFTER COUNTRY'S REVENUE



"He is always good at figures," said Danny's teacher, when talking with his mother after she had called at the school. This happened in 1877, and 40 years has not changed Daniel C. Roper. At least Uncle Sam doesn't think so, because he appointed him to probably the hardest job of a non-military nature to be found in Washington. His office door reads, "Collector of Internal Revenue," and as the revenue has been increased several times it is going to be some job. He began his preparation for this career by attending Trinity college, and after he was graduated from that North Carolina institution he continued by attending the National university of Washington, D. C., from which he emerged four years later ready for a fight with the world.

Soon after his college work ended he became very much interested in the cotton and weaving industries. It was Mr. Roper who developed a scheme of collecting cotton statistics by a count at frequent intervals during the harvesting period of the number of bales turned out at the gins. This in itself was quite an achievement, and the government recognized his merit by sending him on a survey of the textile industries in America and in Europe. From this data he was enabled to compile a textbook, which has been used as authentic information by experts in this country, as well as abroad.

CUSTODIAN OF ENEMY PROPERTY

Arrangements were made at a conference between President Wilson and A. Mitchell Palmer, custodian of enemy property, to put into complete operation the provisions of the trading-with-the-enemy law for custody of property in this country of German citizens and those of countries allied with Germany.

Receipts of enemy property already has begun, the first receipts being a draft for $100,000 vountarily tendered the custodian, who promptly invested it in Liberty bonds.

Within a short time property worth millions of dollars will be in the custodian's hands. President Wilson soon will issue an executive order which will authorize opening of branch bureaus for receipt of enemy property.

The ultimate disposition of property taken over by his office, Mr. Palmer explained, rests with congress, which must decide whether it shall be confiscated or merely held in trust during the war by the custodian as a trustee. An executive order fixes the salary of Mr. Palmer at $5,000 a year and directs that he give a bond of $100,000.

FARM ICE HOUSE AND MILK HOUSE

The Economy of Having Certain Structures Serve More Than One Purpose.

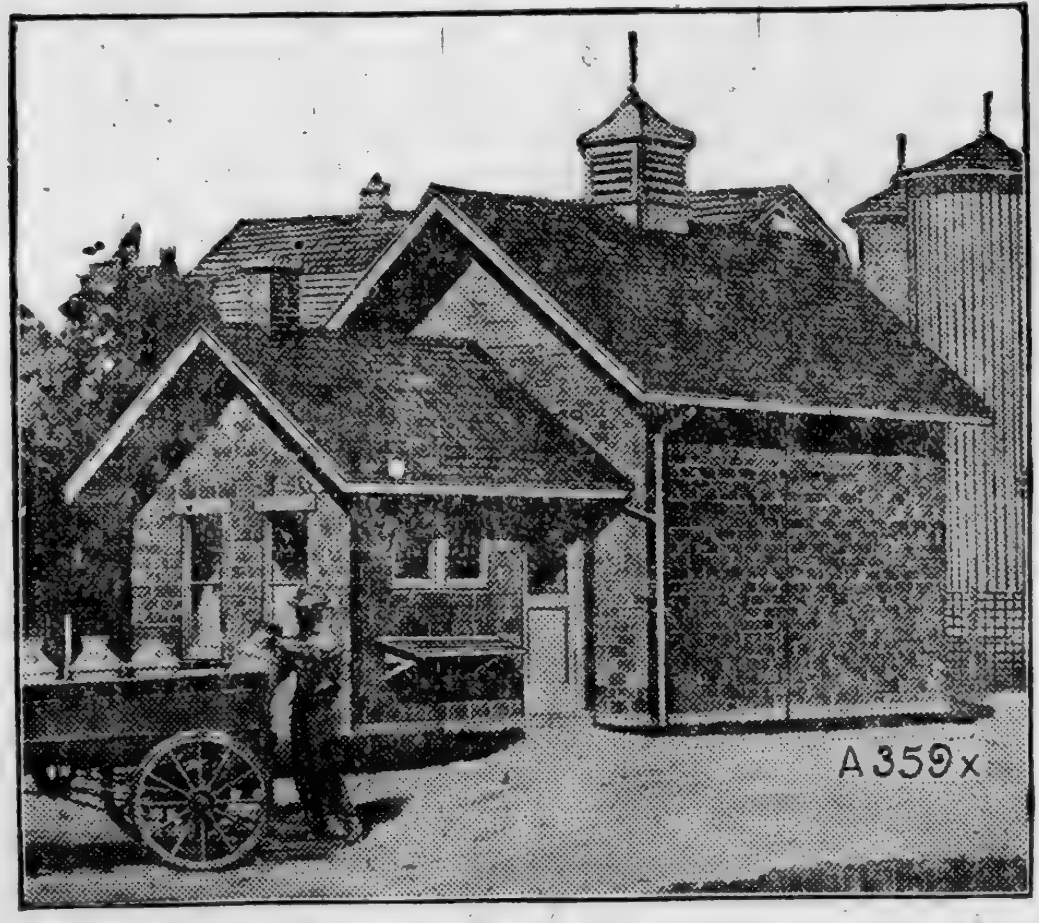
FEWER BUILDINGS, BUT GOOD

Large Number of Scattered Sheds and Barns Spoils Appearance of Property—Also Wastes Time and Money.

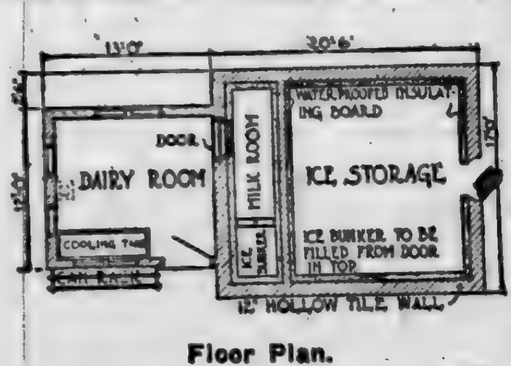
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Some of the buildings on the average farm, as a matter of economy in original investment and also in labor cost of doing certain parts of the farm work, may be designed to serve a multiple purpose. Of the possible combination buildings, perhaps the most logical is the combined ice house and milk house. The appearance of the farm is very much benefited by having a smaller number of high-grade buildings of somewhat larger size. A large number of scattered outbuildings not only result in the appearance of disorganization, but this arrangement very often actually results in the waste of miles of walking between buildings, when the matter is considered on a basis of a year's time. Even though the combination building be, in reality, two separate buildings under one roof or two departments having no connecting areaways or passages, the result of the combinaton is the same, if the selection of the parts of the combination is carefully made.



The ice house and the milk house must, of necessity, be definitely separated by a wall well insulated against variations in temperature, yet a good proportion of the contents of the icehouse will eventually be used in the milk room and the combination of these buildings results in a saving of time in filling the bunker or in obtaining ice for other purposes in the milkhouse part of the building. Good dairymen will not keep milk near the stables, even though the law in their state does not force them to observe this precaution. The milk house is then a necessity and it will ordinarily be obtained in one of three ways: In case the dairy business is large, a separate building, fitted with all of the modern equipment necessary to the conduct of a paying dairy business, will be needed. In case the amount of milk handled is not great enough to warrant the use of a separate building, the milk house must be combined with either the farmhouse or the ice house. Under certain conditions, the farmer might desire an extension to his house which would include both the ice house and the milk house. A farmhouse designed in this way is among others in a group of designs recently prepared by the United States department of agriculture. If such a scheme is not used, the combined building should, at least, be placed as near the farmhouse as possible.



Floor Plan.

There are certain conditions which must be taken into account in building the ice house. The first is that its location must be such that good drainage is possible. There is always a loss by melting and the water must be carried well away from the building and disposed of either in the soil, through a drainage system already in place or by connection with a stream. The design will account for the other conditions, which are related to the proper construction of the walls and roof of the building to secure sufficient insulation to prevent undue loss. Structural tile has been found an excellent material for the construction of farm ice houses. Its ordinary use provides a series of dead air spaces which are very effective as an insulation against temperature variation. It is, of course, necessary to use care in the construction of the walls so that no leaks are present to admit warm air to the interior of the house. The inside of the house must be lined with some waterproofed insulation so that moisture does not have an opportunity to work into the mortar joints and body of the tile.

Within the main walls of the ice house there may be a partition placed near one end to form a milk room and ice bunker. Such an arrangement is more economical of ice than to build the milk room in some part of the milk house remote from the ice house. The door into the milk room should be constructed in the same manner as the continuous doors placed in the outside wall of the ice house.

The milk house size and arrangement will depend upon the method of handling the milk. If special equipment is used, provision must be made for it in the house. There is more to be considered than simply the size. For instance, the farmer who wishes a gasoline engine in his milk house, to turn the separator, churn, ice cream freezer or whatever other equipment is used requiring power, must have provision for the placing of a concrete base, at the time of pouring the foundation and floor, and an outlet must be provided in the wall or roof for the exhaust pipe of the engine. If a boiler is required, it may be necessary to provide special floor construction for it. In any event, the milk house should be provided with a chimney and a cooling tank should be conveniently placed, in the design. Unless a supply of pure water is near at hand and can be conveniently piped to the milk house, it is advisable to place a pump in the milk house. Some farmers place the equipment of their water supply system for the farm in their dairy house. The washing of cans and milking utensils requires a small sink which should be placed where there is plenty of light.

The combined ice house and dairy shown in the accompanying perspective and floor plan is a well-designed building of very neat appearance. The walls of the building are of structural tile, built upon a concrete foundation. The ice is intended to be covered with sawdust or straw that has been put through the cutting box. Continuous doors for easy filling extend from the concrete wall almost to the peak of the building.

The dairy is big enough to handle the milk from a good-sized dairy herd when the milk is run through the separator and the skimmed milk fed to well-bred young stock as quickly as possible after being separated. One of the easiest and best ways of starting a farm dairy business is to handle the milk in this way. The cream should be sent either to the city or to the creamery. Skimmed milk when fed to pure-bred calves and pigs has a special value that brings better returns than selling the milk. There is very little fertility carried away from the farm in cream cans. Farmers who do a careful dairy business have valuable stock and get high prices for the animals fed in this way. The value of the dairy house can only be measured by taking into account all of the various features of the business such as this method of feeding suggests.

Irving's Pen Names.

Washington Irving had more pen names than any other American writer. At different times he used Geoffrey Crayon, Diedrich Knickerbocker, Jonathan Oldstyle and Salmagundi. Some other well-known nom de plumes of American authors have been "Artemus Ward," by Charles F. Browne (1834-1891); "Hans Breitman," by Charles G. Leland, 1824-1903); "Peter Parley," by Samuel G. Goodrich (1793-1860); "Ik Marvel," by Donald G. Mitchell (1822-1908); "Oliver Optic," by William T. Adams (1822-1897); "Mark Twain," Samuel L. Clemens (1835-1915; "Paul Creyton," by J. T. Trowbridge (1827-1916); "Sut Lovingood," by George W. Harris (1805-1869); "Croaker," by Fitzgreene Halleck (1790-1867).

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 9

EZRA AND NEHEMIAH TEACH THE LAW.

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 8:1, 4, 5, 6, 8-12. Read entire chapter.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.—Ps. 119:105.

The first day of the seventh month (8:2) was about October 444 B. C. Seven days feast (vv. 15-18) was the feast of the Tabernacles beginning the 15th of the seventh month (October) and continuing for seven or eight days (Lev. 23). Nehemiah was the governor; Ezra the scribe, chief priest; and Artaxerxes, king of Persia, ruler over Palestine. It would be interesting to look up the sudden interjection of Ezra's name into this discourse; also the special reasons for teaching the Bible. There is in this chapter a record of a full week and of the daily events of that week.

I. The Preparation. Go back to verse 70 of the preceding chapter, and you will find that the temple had just been receiving some large gifts. The task of finishing the wall was also completed, all of which gives point to verse one, where it says that the people gathered themselves together as one man. This was an ancient open-air meeting, one we do well to study. The people requested Ezra to "bring the book." It needed no catch-penny operations to draw the crowd together. The writer of Nehemiah calls the book "the law which the Lord hath commanded unto Moses." (See v. 1 cf. v. 14.) This, of course, would include Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, an indication as to the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, which is in line with the statement that Jesus Christ made that it was God who had written it as he had commanded Moses. It was not a mob; there was organization and equipment. (See v. 3 and 4.) The Bible was also read so that the people could understand it (v. 2); certainly something that is in demand in our present day. Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people, for he stood on an elevation above them (v. 5) and read "distinctly."

II. The Reading of the Word. They read the book, not from some commentary or quarterly, though these have value in their place. The reading began with reverence. Reverence for but not a worship of the book. The Bible is not a fetish or a charm against sickness or accident. The verse "caused the people to understand the law," (v. 7) probably means that is was translated into the vernacular, the language of the common people. While God's word is a plain book and easy to read, nevertheless men of spiritual understanding are needed to "rightly divide" it unto the people (v. 7). However, the great interpreter of the Bible given by the Father is the Holy Spirit himself (John 16:12-15; I John 2:20-27). This method of beginning the study of the word and its continuance as presented in these verses is a good suggestion for modern Sunday school workers.

III. The Hearing of the Word. (vv. 9-17). As Ezra and Nehemiah and their associates and Levites taught the people, there was a five-fold result. First: There was conviction and mourning. The word of God always convicts of sin, but the people were told not to mourn over the past, nor were they to weep, for all the people wept (v. 9). When men hear the words of the law there will be conviction of sin. (See Eph. 6:7; Heb. 4:12.) Weeping may not, however, be conviction (2 Cor. 7:10). Weeping weakens, but that was not designed, rather the exhilaration of joy. Moreover, they were to seek the refreshment of food and drink. Indeed, the joy of the Lord was to be their strength (v. 10). "And there was very great gladness" (v. 17). In verse 11 we are told that the Levites exhorted the people to hold their peace, that the day was holy and that they should be grieved. To this the people responded (v. 12), and made great mirth, because they had understood the declaration of the word of the Lord. Notice that joy and gladness came after obedience, also that Nehemiah, the governor, had a part in the teaching. It is a great thing for any people when their civil rulers are genuine, intelligent, and spiritual leaders. The people were instructed to show their gratitude as well as their piety by remembering "those for whom nothing had been prepared" (v. 10). The fourth result was peace (v. 11)—the peace of right relation with God (Rom. 5:1; Phil. 4:7).

Fifth Result: Service.

Mourning can very easily be continued too long, and, therefore, it was necessary to employ the emotion of mirth and the exercise of work that the people might enter into this peace. The fifth result, therefore, was service (v. 12). Notice that their thanksgiving portions and their service were based upon an intelligent knowledge of God's word. If there is anything that present-day social service needs, it is the illumination which comes from a knowledge of God's word. Last of all, worship (vv. 13-18). Worship is a compound of "worth" and "ship."

Primitive Methods.

"Are there any amusements in this town?" asked the stranger in a mining camp.

"Depends on what it takes to amuse you," replied the grizzled prospector. "Gunplay hereabouts ain't what it used to be, but occasionally two of the boys meet unexpectedly like on the street and settles a dispute without goin' to law about it."

SELF DEFENSE

Defeat Backache and Kidney Trouble With Anuric

Many people in this section have suffered from rheumatism and kidney trouble and have found that Anuric was the most successful remedy to overcome these painful and dangerous ailments.

The lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called "An-u-ric" (double strength). You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as stone in the bladder. If you want quick relief buy Anuric now (60c a package)—or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. This will prove that "Anuric" eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

Many More Would Testify

Goshen, Ind.—"One week's use of Dr. Pierce's Anuric has proved wonderfully beneficial in relieving me of dizziness and stiffened joints. These two things had caused me serious annoyance and I am very grateful to have been cured in so short a time."—MRS. F. M. VANCE, 321 N. Main St.

Lafayette, Ind.—"My husband and I have both received considerable benefit in one week's treatment with Anuric. I had suffered with backache and my bladder did not seem to be acting properly for a long while, but these distressing ailments have disappeared and I am feeling perfectly fine. My husband is just as enthusiastic as I am in praise of Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets."—MRS. A. H. PORTER, 824 N. 5th St.—Adv.

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

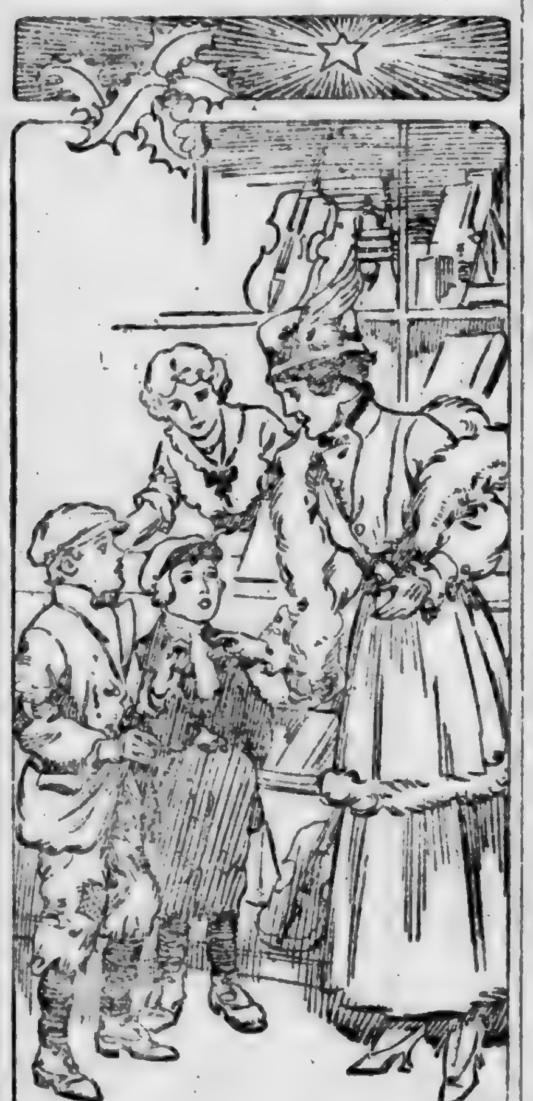
A Lesson In Christmas Spirit

It was the day before Christmas last year. All my shopping had been done (or so I thought) when I suddenly remembered hearing my eldest son, a lad of eight years, say, "Oh, I hope Santa will bring me a harmonicon this Christmas," says a writer in the New York Evening Sun.

Of course I could not disregard such a wish, and, although it was raining, I put on my storm coat and rubbers and with umbrella in hand started out for one of our large department stores.

On arriving at the counter where this particular article was displayed I found every one so busy I could not get attention for some time, and while waiting my turn I noticed two sadly neglected looking little boys of about six and eight years respectively standing very close to the counter and looking, oh, so longingly at these same harmonicons, when suddenly one of the young saleswomen turned sharply around and in a loud voice said, "Now, then, if you two boys don't get away from here at once I'll call the floorwalker and have you arrested." At the time this sudden attack was made upon these poor little waifs I was holding in my hands two of these same musical instruments, trying to decide which of the two kinds I would take.



The Two Boys Looked at Me.

The larger one of the boys looked up at me with a frightened look, as if to say, "Oh, we didn't mean to steal anything," when I said, "Boys, would you each like one of these harmonicons?" They said nothing, but the look of surprise (gratitude they knew nothing of) when I put one in each boy's dirty little hands I shall not forget to my dying day, and before you could say "Jack Robinson" they were out of the store and out of sight. I turned to the young woman, saying, "I will pay for them," when I noticed the tears in her eyes.

When she finally found her voice she said, "Oh, madam, I am so sorry I spoke as I did." "Well, never mind," I said; "you didn't understand. I am the mother of two boys and know what a boy craves." When she handed me my change and package she said, "I shall never forget this day; it has taught me a lesson."

Tuning Up For Christmas.

With a whirl and a swirl and a terrible roar
It blew in at evening from an arctic shore;
Traffic it blocked and the treacherous street
Glitters and twinkles with silvery sleet.

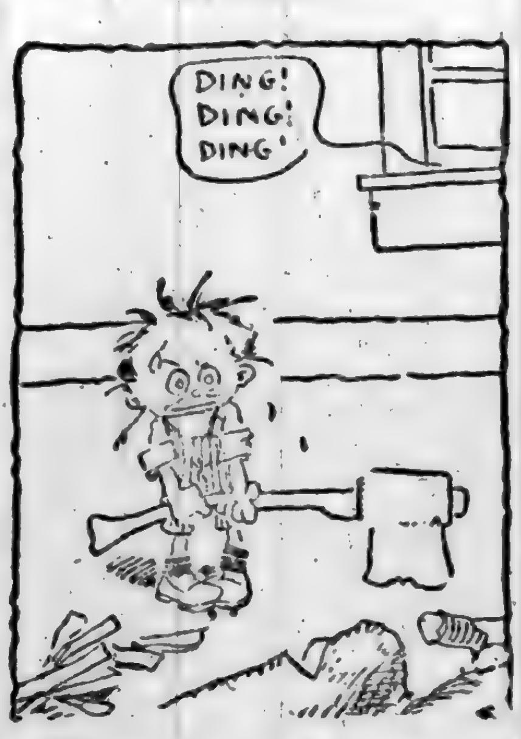
Dolls in armies and soldiers a-plenty
Gifts for kiddies and sweet and twenty,
Gifts for grannies and aunties and dads,
Gifts for using and losing and fads!
Gifts for nurses and chauffeurs and cooks,
Gifts for bookworms, who read all their books!

Gifts for sinners and sneerers and saints,
Tops for spinners and pastels and paints.
Music, mechanical, mirrors or lamps,
Turkeys for orphans and newsboys and tramps.

Gifts that are fluffy and gifts that are grim;
A necklace for Jessie, a scarfpin for Jim.
Full sets of the classics and gleaming gold pieces
Suitable—very—for sweet little nieces.
Calendars, virtuous, witty or wise,
Flowers and bonbons and puddings and pies!

Cynics there be who deride and defy them,
But we, in our dreams, even buy them and tie them!
As ever old winter, with snowdrift and sleet,
Transmutes the whole town into Santa Claus street!
—Elizabeth Newport Hepburn in New York Times.

OVERDONE



DING! DING! DING!

"Whew! Here I've chopped wood half the day to get an appetite, an' now I'm too durned tired to eat."

AS SUNG BY POETS

Old and New Thanksgiving Sentiments Worth Recording.

RABINDRANATH TAGORE, the Hindu-English poet, recently contributed to the London Times the following verses on "Thanksgiving," which are as unlike the conventional Thanksgiving poem in sentiment as they are in form:

Those who walk on the path of pride crushing the lowly life under their tread, spreading their footprints in blood,
upon the tender green of thy earth.
Let them rejoice, and thank thee, Lord,
for the day is theirs.

But thou hast done well in leaving me with the humble;
whose doom it is to suffer,
and bear the burden of power, and hide their faces and stifle their sobs in the dark.

For every throb of their pain has pulsed in the secret depth of thy night,
and every insult has been gathered in thy great silence,
And the morrow is theirs.

O Sun, rise upon the bleeding hearts blossoming in flowers of the morning and the torchlight revelry of pride hiding in its own aisles!

There is, of course, nothing new in dissent from that smug piety that returns thanks because its possessor is "not as other men are," be it in worldly possessions, in bodily health, in mental equipment or even in moral inheritance. Robert Burns long ago satirized one aspect of such self-complacence in "The Selkirk Grace":

Some hae meat and canna eat,
And some wad eat that want it;
But we hae meat and we can eat,
And sae the Lord be thankit.

William Blake, in one of those quaintly phrased little poems of his that have almost the flavor of esoteric wisdom, declares:

Since all the riches of this world
May be gifts from the devil and earthly kings,
I should suspect that I worshiped the devil
If I thanked my God for worldly things.

The countless gold of a merry heart,
The rubies and pearls of a loving eye,
The ideal man never can bring to the mart,
Nor the cunning hoard up in his treasury.

And in recent years Edmund Vance Cooke, a poet of whom Cleveland, the "sixth city," should be proud, has sung:

We thank thee. Yea, in the even tone
Of those who are glad of the goods they own.
We thank thee. Yea, that thou hast preferred
And blessed us more than the common herd.
We thank thee, part with the heart's intention,
But most, let us own, with the lips' convention.
"We thank thee." Lord! What a selfish prayer!
Thanks—while a beggar's breast is bare!
Thanks that our own full feast is spread
While another creature is lacking bread!
Thanks that our full fed blood runs warm,
While a starveling baby breasts the storm!

There is certainly no taint of Tartuffe or Pecksniff in the reason that William Ernest Henley gives for thankfulness in his "Invictus," but it has something of pharisaical arrogance notwithstanding:

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

Algernon Charles Swinburne, in "The Garden of Proserpine" (from which, by the way, Henley seems to have borrowed his "whatever gods may be"), expresses a sentiment that in certain moods has an appeal to many men:

From too much love of living,
From hope and fear set free,
We thank with brief thanksgiving
Whatever gods may be
That no life lives forever,
That dead men rise up never,
That even the weariest river
Winds somewhere safe to sea.

But, after all, there is a healthier appeal than Swinburne's, and an appeal to a greater number of normal men and women, in such fine odes as that which the late Hezekiah Butterworth wrote in celebration of the first "Thanksgiving in Boston Harbor":

The Arabella leads the song—
The Mayflower sings below,
That erst the Pilgrims bore along
The Plymouth reefs of snow,
Oh, never be that psalm forgot
That rose o'er Boston Bay,
When Winthrop sang, and Endicott
And Saltonstall that day:

"Praise ye the Lord with fervent lips!
Praise ye the Lord today!'
And praise arose from all the ships
Like prayers in Yarmouth Bay—

His umbrella is gone but his feet are dry. Take care of your health. Don't let them say when the doctor calls "Wet feet did it." Rubber footwear is cheap and good men are scarce.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don t Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on out cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

I tell you the rabbits have to suffer yet, if it is after Thanksgiving. Seems as though there would be none as many as have been caught.

Mrs. Maggie Hull and two children of Auburn Junction, came down Thursday to take dinner with Jas. Ervin and family and went back Friday noon.

The supper in the church basement Thursday eve was well attended. Had a nice crowd and cleared almost $23, which we appreciate very much.

Mrs. Mary Bartlett, of Fort Wayne, is visiting relatives and friends in this neighborhood a few days. She came Thanksgiving day and attended the supper.

Mrs. George Johnson will entertain the Ladies Aid next Thursday all day. Let every member come, also every lady of the community come and be a member. Bring your thimbles, I thing comfort knotting is the work of the day.

Coburn's Corners

Earl Tustison and family ate Thanksgiving dinner with Mrs. Whitehurst, of Newville.

Mrs. Lou Smith and daughter, of Spencerville, spent Sunday afternoon at McClellan Hart's.

Mrs. Dan Burley was a week end guest of her mother, Mrs. Ernest Strubing, south of Hicksville.

R. H. Conine and wife went to Lansing, Michigan, Wednesday, to visit the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hart.

J. C. Hull and wife and F. B. Leighty, wife and little son, ate Thanksgiving dinner with Ora Quance and family.

Vernon Frank and five children of Auburn, ate Thanksgiving dinner in the J. O. Baker home. Mrs. Frank was a week end guest of her sister Mrs. Lizzie Smith, at North Baltimore.

T. H. Shull and family entertained the following company on Thanksgiving Day, L. A. Mercer, wife and baby of Antwerp, C. C. Shull, wife and daughter, Nellie and M. Shull and wife.

This nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.—Lincoln.

Order Saturday Evening Post. 5.

Miss Helen Elson, of Auburn, visited over Sunday at William Maxwell's.

Claud Laub and family spent Thanksgiving Day with John Laub and family near Hicksville.

M. B. Shull has rented the Mrs. W. M. Abel farm and expects to move on same the last of the week.

Glen Place, Ensor and Cladys Conine, Portia Hadsell and Gladys Place were Sunday guests at T. H. Shull's.

The following company were Sunday dinner guests at Fred Hart's: J. M. Milliman and daughter Fannie, Rev. Spayd and Mr. VanWiggerden, of Frement, Mich.

Clyde Hart and family were guests of Mrs. Hart's father, Wm. Baltz, north of St. Joe, Sunday afternoon. Mr. Baltz left Monday for Camp Shelby, Miss., where his son, Grant, is sick with pneumonia.

Another Auto Accident

Millard Tyson, age 17 and Lester Casebeer, aged 19 were killed at Butler, Thanksgiving evening about 11 o'clock, by the New York Central railroad fast train. The boys were returning home after spending the evening with their lady friends. The evening was foggy and is thought to have been responsible for the accident. No one saw the accident but many were attracted to the scene by the noise of the collision. The parents Mr. Casebeer were at the home of E. B. Rose, waiting for their boy to come and take them home, when this news came to them. Their son was killed instantly while Tyson lived until 2 o'clock Friday morning.

When persons living nearby arrived at the scene of the accident they found that Casebeer, horribly mangled, was dead. Tyson, with both legs broken in several places and internal injuries, was semi-conscious and was heard to say: "My God! I can't stop it," and from that it was thought that perhaps he was driving when the Ford was struck by the train.

The Ford belonged to Casebeer. It was twisted and wrecked and bore little resemblance to an automobile.

St. Joe Locals

Pauline Andress was the guest of Garrett relatives, a few days last week.

—‡—‡—‡—

Mrs. Belle Ridgway and daughter were Chicago visitors last week the guests of George Ridgway.

—‡—‡—‡—

The Thanksgiving offering amounted to $4.10 which will purchase 16 bibles for the soldiers.

—‡—‡—‡—

Mrs. Dell Coburn, of Hicksville, came Friday for a short visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Wade.

Word came last week of the death of Geo. W. Pfaff, of Cedar Beach, California. He is well known in this country having lived near the Spencerville Cemetery for years. The body will be cremated. Mrs. Lester Houk, of west of Spencerville, is the daughter of Mr. Pfaff.

Among Our Sick FOLKS.

George Trostel is not much better at this time.

John Bair, of south of Spencerville, is confined to his bed with sugar diabetis.

Mrs. Ella Gill has been threatened with pneumonia, but is somewhat improved at this writing.

Mrs. Emma Abel took suddenly ill Sunday evening at her home, requiring the service of a doctor.

George Wade and wife, of east of Spencerville, are now residents of St. Joe. They are both confined to their beds and have become almost helpless. George has suffered a stroke of paralysis.

Samuel Davis, living east of St. Joe, suffered a stroke of paralysis, Saturday evening. While it is not serious yet, he is able to talk and use his body freely, but he has taken his bed for several weeks at least. Every precaution is being taken to avoid another stroke, as Mr. Davis is aged and he would probably be unable to overcome another attack.

Mrs. Cordelia Yarnelle suffered a very severe stroke of paralysis last Tuesday evening and remained unconscious until Friday. Mrs. Ethel Cheek tried to call Mrs Yarnelle on Wednesday morning by phone and no response was given, she then went to her home and found Mrs. Yarnelle unable to talk very distinctly. She called in some of the neighbors and by noon she was unconscious and became quite serious. Saturday she began to rally and became conscious at times although not able to talk. Monday her condition was about the same.

Farmers Get Some Money

Better than $11,000 00 was paid out in St. Joe last week by Wm. Curie for stock Some business. In all five cars of hogs left the local yards for the eastern market. But few towns much larger did this well and the most remarkable fact of the deal is that Curie did not drive to buy one hog. They all came to him. Others we learn have driven the territory for days trying to buy up the surplus of hogs but with no avail Curie says that hogs are the best on the average this year than during the past five years. The largest amount paid to any one person was $1,271.87 to Mrs. Elias Kline, for 57 hogs.

Another Call.

David Grill died his home on Tuesday evening of last week of paralysis, at the age of 66 years 5 months and 29 days. He was born on June 1st., 1851 in Summit County Ohio, and married to Mary Dove in 1880, to which 6 children were born, 4 sons David of Ohio, Henry of Garrett, Harry of the West and Elbert, who resides at home; 2 daughter, Mrs. Lora Baughman and Mrs. Clara Frick, both of St. Joe. Besides these a wife and 13 grandchildren survive. Funeral services were held from the Lutheran Church, Friday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock. Rev. A. K. Mumma, officiating. Interment in White City Cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Widney and daughter, were Thursday visitors at the home of O. H. Widney and wife, at Auburn.

Mrs. Sadie Bruce and son Ralph, of Auburn, spent a couple of days last week with John Betz and wife. On Friday they all spent the day at Spencerville with Mrs. Hazel Steward and Mrs. Ada Berry.

Burglars entered the meat market at Spencerville Friday evening and helped themselves to 15 pounds of weiners, pork loins and $20.00 in cash. They then entered Jack Beams store and helped themselves to some butter and other goods. Indications are that it was local talent. The same evening the Grabill garage was broken into and automobile tubes were taken besides 33 cents in pennies.

The inspector of the St. Joe Branch A. R. C. has ready for shipment the articles made this month by the St. Joe and Newville classes. Mrs. Dunkle reports that the work of both classes is of the very best and it would be impossible to say too much in praise of the worthy women who are doing this work. It is proof of a large vision and of practical patriotism. We appreciate the ready co-operation of the Newville ladies and thank both the Newville and St. Joe women who have made it possible for us to send this excellent shipment.

NEWS REVIEW OF THE PAST WEEK

Interallied War Conference in Paris Opens With Russia the Big Topic.

LENINE DEALS WITH BOCHES

Germans Accept Bolsheviki Proposal of Armistice—Signs of Collapse of Radical "Government"—Italian Crisis Considered Over—Supreme War Council for United States.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

The great interallied war conference opened in Paris on Thursday and the world is justified in expecting momentous results from it, though they may not be immediately evident.

Aside from the question of unified control of the war, one of the most important matters considered by the conference, of course, was the Russian situation. This was rapidly moving to a climax, for during the week the representatives of the bolsheviki government crossed over to the German side and made their proposition of an armistice on all fronts of the belligerent countries. Since this plan coincides with Germany's desires and doubtless was inspired by her, the German authorities accepted the suggestion and set December 2 for a conference on the subject. Meanwhile members of the German general staff were in Petrograd advising Lenine and Trotzky.

The conference in Paris took under consideration the issuance of a "reasoned statement for the guidance and warning of the Russians as to the serious results that are likely to follow if a separate peace is concluded," to quote the conservative language of Lord Robert Cecil. This means nothing less than that the Petrograd radicals, and Russia if they are able to impose their will on the country, will be recognized as enemies of the allied nations. The ambassadors of the allies and of the United States were said to be waiting for the meeting of the Russian constituent assembly, elections for which were held last week though the results were not known at the time of writing.

Hope in Southeastern Russia.

There are growing indications that, when the froth and spume of the present bolsheviki revolution in Russia have blown away, the original revolutionists of last March, men like Milyoukoff, who have brains and experience as well as ideals, will come to the surface again and regain a control that may save their distracted country from the talons of the Prussian eagle.

The beginning of the end for Lenine was reported to have come on Friday, when, according to dispatches from Petrograd, his cabinet was succeeded by a coalition ministry of advanced Socialists and other factions, with the Bolsheviki in the minority.

Despite the fact that the second and fifth armies last week gave their adherence to the Bolsheviki "government," Lenine and Trotzky have shown no slightest evidence of their ability to rule Russia, and whether or not they be knowingly agents of Germany, their actions are all for the benefit of the central powers. If the armistice they ask for were followed by the kind of peace they advocate, Russia would lie open to Germany as a ripe field for merciless exploitation and the Germans would gain infinitely more than they possibly would lose in western Europe.

The hopefulness in the situation lies far away from Petrograd. A great organization known as the Southeastern union has been formed, embracing the Don territory, most of Little Russia, the lower Volga region and Turkestan. This is the great grain-growing part of Russia, the territory that feeds the rest, and steps are being taken to add to the union the corn-producing part of Siberia. In all this territory, roughly speaking, General Kaledines, hetman of the Cossacks, is in control, and he, in turn, is controlled by leaders who have not yielded to the dictation of Lenine and his bolshevikists. Moreover, the immense gold reserve of the Russian empire, which was removed from Petrograd to the Kremlin in 1913, has been taken still further into the interior and is out of the reach of the maximalists. Whether Kaledines and the Cossacks will chose to support the social democrats or will aid in a restoration of the monarchy is not clear. But sane friends of order, democracy and freedom feel that anything would be better than the reign of anarchy and civil war that threatens Russia now.

The soldiers who remain at the front are wailing bitterly because of the shortage of food, and there is a fine prospect of hundreds of thousands of these fighting men turning back into their country half-starved and ready to pillage and ravage it without restraint.

Italy's Danger Lessened.

The heroic Italian troops having demonstrated their ability to hold back about four times as many Teutons along the Piave front, the fears of a more extended invasion of Italy and of the capture of Venice are lessening. During the week great numbers of re-enforcements arrived from the British and French armies on the west front, many of them having marched eight days through the mountains. They brought with them ample artillery and supplies. Italian reserves in great masses, young, well-equipped and full of spirit, also moved north to relieve those who have been combating the invaders, and in some places the Italians took the offensive. The fighting, especially between the Piave and the Brenta, continued fierce and unabated throughout the week, and the losses on both sides were heavy, but the Austro-Germans made no further gains. Down toward the Adriatic they made repeated attempts to cross the river and the flooded lands in pontoons, but were completely routed by the Italian artillery. As the week closed the situation in Italy was still serious, but improving each day.

Gen. F. B. Maurice, chief director of military operations in the British war office, was especially well satisfied with the week's developments in Italy. From the fact that Germany had not brought up vast re-enforcements to follow up the initial success with a decisive blow, he concluded that Germany was unable to send them. It is now time, he declared, to say definitely that the crisis in Italy has passed, this being due entirely to the efforts of the Italian army. "Anglo-French troops are now available in sufficient quantities to satisfy us that the situation is secure," he concluded.

Hard Fighting Around Cambrai.

The war has seen no more desperate fighting than has followed on the heels of General Byng's sensational thrust toward Cambrai. Crown Prince Rupprecht seemed determined not to let that city fall into the hands of the British, or at least to make it a costly prize, and his constantly re-enforced troops were sent against the British in Bourlon wood again and again and in the village of Fontaine, which changed hands several times. Byng's men held on tenaciously and usually had the best of it in the hand-to-hand fighting as well as in the artillery combats, and the tanks continued to play their part. These monsters often cleared the way for the infantry, and in at least one instance, when they were themselves held up by superior forces, the British airmen, flying daringly low, routed the enemy with machine gun fire and permitted the tanks to go on. Altogether, it has been the most spectacular battle of the war, and it has cost the Germans a great many of their best men.

General Byng last week seemed to be endeavoring to break through to the north of Cambrai, a movement that probably would compel the enemy to fall back on a wide front. Cambrai itself seems doomed to destruction.

General Pershing last week sent over his second casualty list. It gave the names of two privates who were killed in the trenches by German artillery fire and of five severely wounded.

U. S. Supreme War Council.

While urgently advising upon our allies more unified action in the prosecution of the war, the administration is not overlooking the need for similar co-ordinated effort at home. On Tuesday a great step toward centralized control of all the country's resources was taken in the appointment of a superior war council through which all the war activities of the government will be enabled to work together. This council is made up of the members of the council of national defense—Secretaries Baker, Daniels, Lane, Houston, Redfield and Wilson—Secretary McAdoo, Chairman Hurley of the shipping board, Food Administrator Hoover, Fuel Administrator Garfield and Chairman Willard of the war industries board. Director Gifford of the council of national defense will sit with this superior council, and President Wilson will meet with it whenever he thinks it advisable.

The government is making a determined effort to settle the troubles of the railways and its own problems in the matter of transportation, and just now the plan of a railroad pool for all lines east of Chicago is being tried out. If this is not successful, it is predicted, the government may take over the operation of all American railways.

President Wilson proclaimed a new embargo on the importation of many articles that are essentials of munitions of war, without the express permission of the government. This will operate to conserve American tonnage for war purposes and to facilitate the importation of raw materials and other supplies necessary in the manufacture of munitions. This assumption of control over imports, provided for in the embargo act, gives the government a powerful weapon for the economic war on Germany and can be directed also against neutral traders suspected of supplying the central powers with American goods.

President Wilson on Monday approved a recommendation of Mr. Hoover reducing the alcoholic content of beer to 3 per cent and reducing the amount of grain used by brewers to about 70 per cent of the volume hitherto consumed. Prohibition of all brewing, the administration believes, would divert tipplers from the comparatively harmless beer to the consumption of whisky, brandy and gin, of which there is in the country enough to last several years.

No War on Austria Yet.

Vigorous enforcement of the orders restricting enemy aliens made things rather lively last week for German residents, especially of the large cities. But the hope that the administration would make easier the checking of espionage by having congress declare war on Austria went glimmering. For reasons which could not be made public, President Wilson and his cabinet agreed that no declaration against the dual monarchy should be made unless it commits some further especially hostile acts. The president pointed out the fact that the enemy alien law could be amended to include the subjects of countries allied with Germany, as was done in the trading with the enemy act, and Attorney General Gregory at once began the preparation of such an amendment.

Vatican Replies to Critics.

Unusually bold criticism of the course of the Vatican by a number of papers, and assertions that the pope had been fostering the cause of Austria, had been far from neutral and should be called on to make his position clear, brought forth indignant denial from Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state. Said he: "To say that his holiness favors, or has favored, or will favor an unjust, un-Christian, and unendurable peace is not only false but also absurd. Any propaganda for such a peace, alleged to be conducted at the Vatican's inspiration, especially in certain nations, is the product of pure maliciousness."

He asserted that the disruptive propaganda that began to affect the morale of the Italian army could not be laid at the doors of the Vatican, and that "the shoulders on which rests the responsibility for the reverses are well-known, a responsibility which certainly does not touch Catholics, the clergy and least of all the august person of the sovereign pontiff."

His eminence made no reference to the Sinn Fein rebellion in Ireland.

One of the first matters taken up by the interallied conference in Paris was the need of speedy diplomatic action in regard to Switzerland, where German intrigue is imperiling the neutrality of the country and gaining economical domination through control of the Swiss railways. The Swiss federal council is becoming anxious over German military movements on the frontier.

NATIONAL GUARD FORCES ARRIVE SAFE IN FRANCE

Regiments From Nearly Every State Join Pershing.

RAINBOW DIVISION IN CAMP

Americans Welcomed Enthusiastically by the French—Guardsmen Have Been Going Across for Many Weeks.

Washington, Dec. 1.—America's Rainbow division is in France, along with other National Guard units. They include Illinois troops, mostly from Chicago. While the war department made no announcement upon receipt of dispatches telling of the Guard units' arrival, the army censor said it was permissible to refer to the Rainbow division as that was obviously meant inasmuch as General Pershing's censor had passed the news.

With the American Army in France, Dec. 1.—National Guardsmen from every state in the Union have arrived in France, it is now permitted to be announced. They are among the troops now training or lately arrived.

While it is not permitted to disclose the identity of units, it may be said that all of those which sailed from the United States have arrived safely and that some already are in training within sound of the guns on the battle front.

Whole Force Seeks Efficiency.

They are showing a spirit in keeping with the purpose of all concerned to make the American expeditionary force a homogeneous American army, in which each division, whether regular, National Guard or National army, cannot be distinguished in efficiency from the others. The former state troops are billeted over a wide area and are pronounced excellent soldiers.

The Guardsmen have been arriving in the American zone for many weeks. They are scattered somewhat, but as far as possible the units from the same state have been kept close together, except in one case. They found the regular army had made good preparations for them, and while many are billeted in houses in French towns, others have been quartered in low wooden barracks specially erected.

The troops from the various states have been recognized by the French population and have been welcomed enthusiastically. Many of the units on arriving in billet towns wore the French red, white and blue cockade pinned to their campaign hats. These were given to the soldiers when they landed at base ports. After a sufficient time to rest from the journey, which in some cases has been extremely tiresome, the troops have been set to work training for actual service at the front. In all quarters they are declared to be most enthusiastic, and their soldierly qualities have drawn high praise from the French instructors.

Given All-Around Training.

During the last few days one unit has been working with grenades and automatic rifles, while another has been working out military problems in maneuvers. Another unit has been in the instruction trenches which bring them as near as possible to actual fighting conditions. Many of the former Guardsmen in training have heard guns roaring in the distance. They are all being given the same course of instruction as the first contingents of regulars have undergone.

The Guardsmen are all in good health. The reason why it is not permitted to mention units by name is that if one is mentioned the way is open to mention all others, which means the revealing of identification numbers and other information which is of importance to the enemy.

But for the information of the relatives and families of the men, everyone who sailed from the United States has arrived safely in France.

LANSDOWNE VIEW ASSAILED

London Press, Excepting News and Telegraph, Denounce Peace Ideas of Marquis.

London, Dec. 1.—The marquis of Lansdowne's letter giving peace suggestions holds first place in the editorial columns of the London morning newspapers, but with the exception of the radical Daily News, which approves it, and the moderate Daily Telegraph, which indorses it in part, it is denounced.

Lord Lansdowne's great reputation and past services to the country are recognized by the hostile critics, who, however, fear that these add to the mischief which they believe the letter will cause by misleading American and other foreign opinion into the belief that the views expressed represent an important section of the nation. Such belief, they declare, would utterly be mistaken.

Arrested as a Traitor.

Brantford, Ont., Dec. 1.—E. L. Hanselman, graduate of a school of chiropractic in Chicago, who has been practicing here in the daytime and working at munitions at night, was arrested on a charge of treason. He will be arraigned Monday. He was born in Canada of German parentage.

CAROL INVOLUNTARILY SPOILS ALL WEDDING PLANS AND THE BIG EVENT OF THE FAMILY, THE CONGREGATION AND THE TOWN IS POSTPONED.

Synopsis.—The story opens in the home of the Rev. Mr. Starr where Prudence, his eldest daughter and feminine head of the house, consisting of her father, herself, her sister Fairy the twins—Carol and Lark—and Connie, the youngest, are awaiting the arrival of their aunt Grace. Liveliness of the smaller members of the family results disastrously for their appearance. Carol and Lark investigate Christian Science.

—3—

"Hum—that's a different matter," said Fairy more thoughtfully. "He hasn't wanted to yet. You see, he's a man and can go by himself without having it look as though nobody wanted to be seen with him. And he's a stranger over there, and doesn't need to get chummy with the girls. The boys here all know me, and ask me to go, and—a man, you see, can just be passive and nothing happens. But a girl's got to be downright negative, and it's no joke. One misses so many good times. You see the cases are different, Prue."

"Yes, that's so," Prudence assented absent-mindedly, counting off ten more threads.

"Then you would object if he had dates?" queried Aunt Grace smilingly.

"Oh, no, not at all—if there was any occasion for it—but there isn't. And I think I would be justified in objecting if he deliberately made occasions for himself, don't you?"

"Yes, that would be different," Prudence chimed in, such "miles away" in her voice that Fairy turned on her indignantly.

"Prudence Starr, you make me wild," she said. "Can't you drop that everlasting hemstitching, embroidering, tatting, crocheting, for ten minutes to talk to me? What in the world are you going to do with it all, anyhow? Are you intending to carpet your floors with it?"

"This is a napkin," Prudence explained good-naturedly. "The set cost me fifteen dollars." She sighed.

"Did the veil come?" The clouds vanished magically from Fairy's face, and she leaned forward with that joy of wedding anticipation that rules in woman-world.

"Yes, it's beautiful. Come and see it. Wait until I pull four more threads. It's gorgeous."

"I still think you're making a great mistake," declared Fairy earnestly. "I don't believe in big, showy church weddings. You'd better change it yet. A little home affair with just the family—that's the way to do it. All this satin-gown, orange-blossom elaboration with curious eyes staring up and down—ugh! It's all wrong!"

Prudence dropped the precious fifteen-dollar-a-set napkin in her lap and gazed at Fairy anxiously. "I know you think so, Fairy," she said. "You've told me so several times." Fairy's eyes twinkled, but Prudence had no intention of sarcasm. "But I can't help it, can I? We had quite settled on the home wedding, but when the twins discovered that the members felt hurt at being left out, father thought we'd better change over."

"Well, I can't see that the members have any right to run our wedding. Besides, it wouldn't surprise me if the twins made it up because they wanted a big fuss."

"But some of the members spoke to father. And you must admit, Fairy, that it is lovely of the Ladies' Aid to give that dinner at the hotel for us."

"Well, they'll get their money's worth of talk out of it afterward. It's a big mistake.—What on earth are the twins doing out there? Is that Jim Forrest with them? Listen how they are screaming with laughter! Would you ever believe those twins are past fifteen, and nearly through their junior year? They haven't as much sense put together as Connie has all alone."

"Come and see the veil," said Prudence, rising. But she dropped back on the step again as Carol came rushing toward them at full speed, with Lark and a tall young fellow trailing slowly, laughing, behind her.

"The mean things!" she gasped. "They cheated!" She dropped a handful of pennies in her aunt's lap as she lay in the hammock. "We'll take 'em to Sunday school and give 'em to the heathen, that's what we'll do. They cheated!"

"Yes, infant, who cheated, and how, and why? And whence the startling array of pennies? And why this unwonted affection for the heathen?" mocked Fairy.

"Trying to be a blank verse, Fairy? Keep it up, you haven't far to go!—There they are! Look at them, Aunt Grace. They cheated. They tried to get all my hard-earned pennies by nefarious methods, and—"

"And so Carol stole them all, and ran! Sit down, Jim. My, it's hot. Give me back my pennies, Carol."

"The heathen! The heathen!" insisted Carol. "Not a penny do you get. You see, Aunt Grace, we were matching pennies—you'd better not mention it to father. We've turned over a new leaf now, and quit for good. But we were matching—and they made a bargain that whenever it was my turn, one of them would throw heads and one tails, and that way I never could win anything. And I didn't catch on till I saw Jim wink, and so I thought it was only right to give the pennies to the heathen."

"How is your mother, Jim?"

"Just fine, Miss Prudence, thank you. She said to tell you she would send a basket of red Junes tomorrow, if you want them. The twins can eat them, I know. Carol ate twenty-two when they were out Saturday."

"Yes, I did, and I'm glad of it," said Carol stoutly. "Such apples you never saw, Prudence. They're about as big as a thimble, and two-thirds core. They're good, they're fine, I'll say that—but there's nothing to them. If I had a ranch as big as yours, Jim, I'll bet you a dollar I'd have apples bigger than a dime!"

"'Bet you a dollar,'" quoted Fairy.

"Well, I'll wager my soul, if that sounds more like Shakespeare. Don't go away, Jim; we're not fighting. This is just the way Fairy and I make love to each other. You're perfectly welcome to stay, but be careful of your grammar, for now that Fairy's a senior—will be next year, if she lives—she even tries to teach father the approved method of doing a ministerial sneeze in the pulpit."

"Think I'd better go," decided the tall, good-looking youth, laughing as he looked with frank, boyish admiration into Carol's sparkling face. "With Fairy after my grammar, and you to criticize my manner and my morals, I see right now that a parsonage is no safe place for a farmer's son." And laughing again, he thrust his cap into his pocket and walked quickly out the new cement parsonage walk. But at the gate he paused to call back, "Don't make a mistake, Carol, and use the heathen's pennies for candy."

The girls on the porch laughed, and five pairs of eyes gazed after the tall figure rapidly disappearing.

"He's nice," said Prudence.

"Yes," assented Carol. "I've got a notion to marry him after a little. That farm of his is worth about ten thousand."

"Are you going to wait until he asks you?"

"Certainly not! Anybody can marry a man after he asks her. The thing to do, if you want to be really original and interesting, is to marry him before he asks you, and surprise him."

"Yes," agreed Lark, "if you wait until he asks you he's likely to think it over once too often and not ask you at all."

"Doesn't that sound exactly like a book, now?" demanded Carol proudly. "Fairy couldn't have said that!"

"No," said Fairy, "I couldn't. Thank goodness!—I have what is commonly known as brains. Look it up in the dictionary, twins. It's something you ought to know about."

"Oh, Prudence," cried Lark dramatically, "I forgot to tell you. You can't get married after all."

For ten seconds Prudence, as well as Fairy and their aunt, stared in speechless amazement. Then Prudence smiled.

"Oh, can't I? What's the joke now?"

"Joke! It's no joke. Carol's sick, that's what's the joke. You can't get married without Carol, can you?"

A burst of gay laughter greeted this announcement.

"Carol sick! She acts sick!"

"She looks sick!"

"Where is she sick?"

Carol leaned limply back against the pillar, trying to compose her bright face into a semblance of illness. "In my tummy," she announced weakly.

This called forth more laughter. "It's her conscience," said Fairy.

"It's matching pennies. Maybe she swallowed one."

"It's probably those two pieces of pie she ate for dinner, and the one that vanished from the pantry shortly after," suggested Aunt Grace.

Carol sat up quickly. "Welcome home, Aunt Grace!" she cried. "Did you have a pleasant visit?"

"Carol!" reproved Prudence.

"I didn't mean it for impudence, auntie," said Carol, getting up and bending affectionately over the hammock, gently caressing the brown hair just beginning to silver about her forehead. "But it does amuse me so to hear a lady of your age and dignity indulge in such lavish conversational exercises."

Lark swallowed with a forced effort. "Did it hurt, Carol? How did you get it all out in one breath?"

"Lark, I do wish you wouldn't gulp that way when folks use big words," said Fairy. "It looks—awful."

"Well, I won't when I get to be as old and crabbed as—father," said Lark. "Sit down, Carol, and remember you're sick."

Carol obediently sat down, and looked sicker than ever.

"You can laugh if you like," she said, "I am sick—at least, I was this afternoon. I've been feeling very queer for three or four days. I don't think I'm quite over it yet."

"Pie! You were right, Aunt Grace! That's the way pie works."

"It's not pie at all," declared Carol heatedly. "And I didn't take that piece out of the pantry, at least, not exactly. I caught Connie sneaking it, and I gave her a good calling down, and she hung her head and slunk away in disgrace. But she had taken such big bites that it looked sort of unsanitary, so I thought I'd better finish it before it gathered any germs. But it's not pie. Now that I think of it, it was my head where I was sick. Don't you remember, Lark, I said my head ached?"

"Yes, and her eyes got red and bleary when she was reading. And—and there was something else, too, Carol, what—"

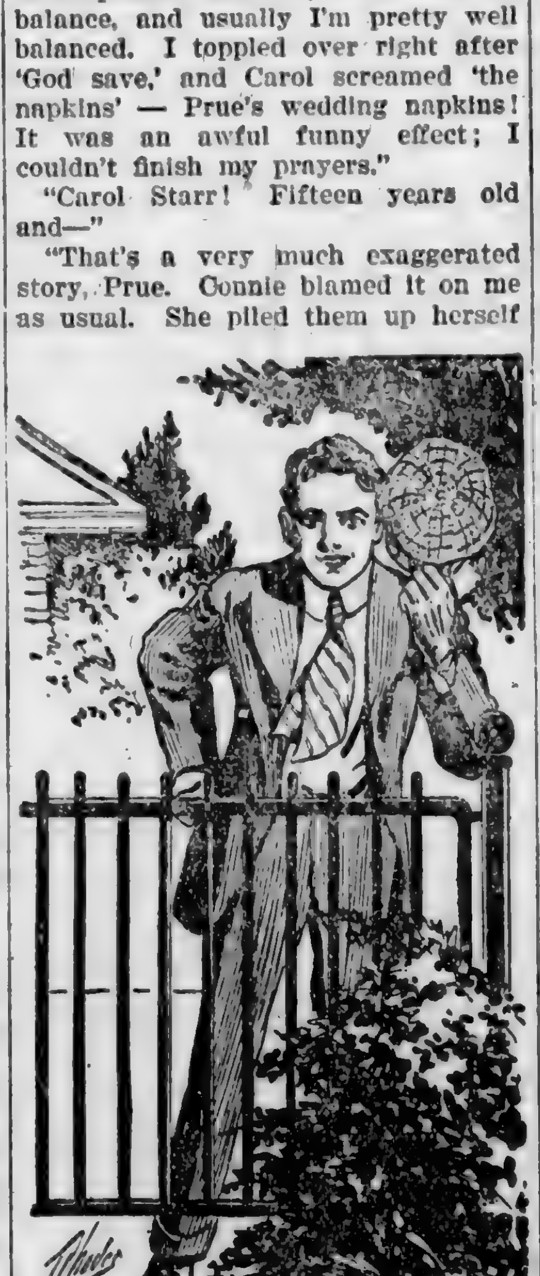
"Your eyes are bloodshot, Carol. They do look bad," Prudence examined them closely. "Now, Carol Starr, don't you touch another book or magazine until after the wedding. If you think I want a bloodshot bridesmaid, you're mistaken."

They all turned to look across the yard at Connie, just turning in. Connie always walked, as Carol said, "as if she mostly wasn't there." But she usually "arrived" by the time she got within speaking distance of her sister.

"Goodness, Prue, aren't you going to do anything but eat after you move to Des Moines? Carol and I were counting the napkins last night—was it a hundred and seventy-six, Carol, or—some awful number I know. Carol piled them up in two piles and we kneeled on them to say our prayers, and—I can't say for sure, but I think Carol pushed me. Anyhow, I lost my balance, and usually I'm pretty well balanced. I toppled over right after 'God save,' and Carol screamed 'the napkins' — Prue's wedding napkins! It was an awful funny effect; I couldn't finish my prayers."

"Carol Starr! Fifteen years old and—"

"That's a very much exaggerated story, Prue. Connie blamed it on me as usual. She piled them up herself to see if there were two feet of them—she put her stockings on the floor first so the dust wouldn't rub them off. It was Lark's turn to sweep and you know how Lark sweeps, and Connie was very careful, indeed, and—"



But at the Gate He Paused to Call Back.

"Come on, Fairy, and see the veil!"

"The veil! Did it come?"

With a joyous, undignified whoop the parsonage girls scrambled to their feet and rushed indoors in a fine Kilkenny jumble. Aunt Grace looked after them, thoughtfully, smiling for a second, and then with a girlish shrug of her slender shoulders she slipped out and followed them inside.

The twins were undeniably lazy, and slept as late of mornings as the parsonage law allowed. So it was that when Lark skipped into the dining room, three minutes late for breakfast, she found the whole family, with the exception of Carol, well in the midst of their meal.

"She was sick," she began quickly, then, interrupting herself—"Oh, good morning! Beg pardon for forgetting my manners. But Carol was sick, Prudence, and I hope you and Fairy are ashamed of yourselves—and auntie, too—for making fun of her. She couldn't sleep all night, and rolled and tossed, and her head hurt and she talked in her sleep, and—"

"I thought she didn't sleep."

"Well, she didn't sleep much, but when she did she mumbled and said things and—"

Then the dining-room door opened again, and Carol—her hair about her shoulders, her feet bare, enveloped in a soft, clinging kimono of faded blue—stalked majestically into the room. There was woe in her eyes, and her voice was tragic.

"It is gone," she said. "It is gone!"

Her appearance was uncanny, to say the least, and the family gazed at her with some concern, despite the fact that Carol's vagaries were so common as usually to elicit small respect.

"Gone!" she cried, striking her palms together. "Gone!"

"If you do anything to spoil that wedding, papa'll whip you, if you are fifteen years old," said Fairy.

Lark sprang to her sister's side. "What's gone, Carrie?" she pleaded with tears. "What's gone? Are you out of your head?"

"No! Out of my complexion," was the dramatic answer.

Even Lark fell back, for the moment stunned. "Y-your complexion," she faltered.

"Look! Look at me, Lark. Don't you see? My complexion is gone—my beautiful complexion that I loved. Look at me! Oh, I would gladly have sacrificed a leg, or an arm, a—rib or an eye, but not my dear complexion!"

Sure enough, now that they looked carefully, they could indeed perceive that the usual soft creaminess of Carol's skin was prickled and sparred with ugly red splotches. Her eyes were watery, shot with blood. For a time they gazed in silence, then they burst into laughter.

"Pie!" cried Fairy. "It's raspberry pie, coming out, Carol!"

The corners of Carol's lips twitched slightly, and it was with difficulty that she maintained her wounded regal bearing. But Lark, always quick to resent an indignity to this twin of her heart, turned upon them angrily.

"Fairy Starr! You are a wicked, unfeeling thing! You sit there and laugh and talk about pie when Carol is sick and suffering—her lovely complexion all ruined, and it was the joy of my life, that complexion was. Papa—why don't you do something?"

But he only laughed harder than ever. "If there's anything more preposterous than Carol's vanity because of her beauty, it's Lark's vanity for her," he said.

Aunt Grace drew Carol to her side, and examined the ruined complexion closely. Then she smiled, but there was regret in her eyes.

"Well, Carol, you've spoiled your part of the wedding sure enough. You've got the measles."

Then came the silence of utter horror.

"Not the measles," begged Carol, wounded afresh. "Give me diphtheria, or smallpox, or—or even leprosy, and I'll bear it bravely and with a smile, but it shall not be said that Carol's measles spoiled the wedding."

"Oh, Carol," wailed Prudence, "don't have the measles—please don't. I've waited all my life for this wedding—don't spoil it."

"Well, I always said it was a mistake," said Fairy. "A big wedding—"

"Oh, Fairy, please don't tell me that again. I know it so well. Papa, whatever shall we do? Maybe Jerry hasn't had them either."

"Why, it's easily arranged," said Lark. "We'll just postpone the wedding until Carol's quite well again."

"Bad luck," said Connie.

"Too much work," said Fairy.

"Well, she can't get married without Carol, can she?" ejaculated Lark.

"Are you sure it's measles, Aunt Grace?"

"Yes, it's measles."

"Then," said Fairy, "we'll get Alice Bird or Katie Free to bridesmaid with Lark. They are the same size and either will do all right. She can wear Carol's dress. You won't mind that, will you, Carol?"

"No," said Carol moodily, "of course I won't. The only real embroidery dress I ever had in my life—and haven't got that yet! But go ahead and get anybody you like. I'm hoodooed, that's what it is. It's a punishment because you and Jim cheated yesterday, Lark."

"What did you do?" asked Connie. "You seem to be getting the punishment!"

"Shall we have Alice or Katie? Which do you prefer, Lark?"

"You'll have to get them both," was the stoic answer. "I won't bridesmaid without Carol."

"Don't be silly, Lark. You'll have to."

"Then wait for Carol."

"Papa, you must make her."

Carol's "uplifting" work among the erring has an amusing ending—a bishop and a minister make strange acquaintances.

Advice for Husbands.

Most words of wisdom that fall from the pens of experts on the subject of love are written for women. Apparently these little sermons are written with the idea that only man's love is worth keeping and that woman's cannot possibly last.

We are told that man must never be bored by trifling domesticities, but instead be encouraged to talk about his business, and so on. Why should it be addressed to one sex only?

Why not say to husbands: Remember that women are women and that their great need is for love. Love is their vocation, the thing they do best, their greatest need in life. Why should the wife be expected to listen admiringly to the husband's tale of routing of a commercial rival when he does not show an equal courtesy when she describes her experiences of the day?—San Francisco Chronicle.

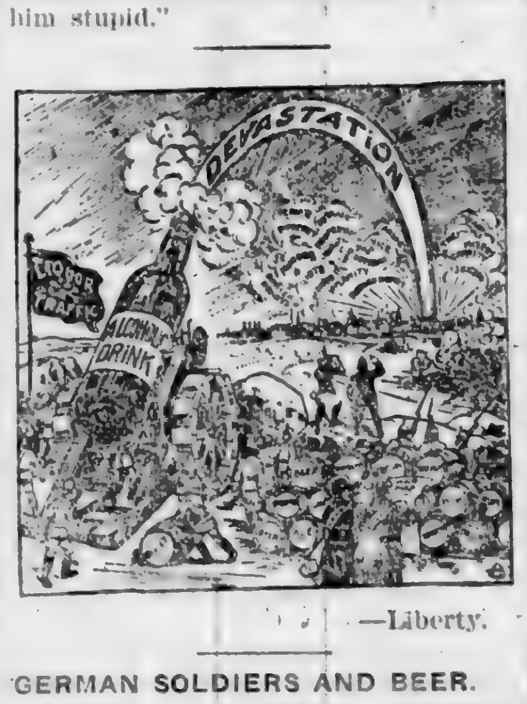
BEER AND STUPIDITY.

"The most sinister thing about beer is its apparent harmlessness," says Dr. Edwin F. Bowers. "Whisky, wine, gin, brandy and other so-called 'hard drinks' long hid behind the Biblical bulwark, 'for the stomach's sake.' At last science and common sense combined to prove that they have no peculiar medicinal value. Then beer picked up the fallen banner. The 'food values' of beer and ale have been proclaimed so widely and entertainingly that the average person fatuously believes in them. Besides, beer is supposedly the beverage of that truly neutral country lying between sobriety and inebriety. It is the cup of compromise. 'I can drink beer all night without feeling it,' is a common enough remark.

"But can you?

"Modern scientific research has shown that, contrary to general belief, beer is proportionately much more noxious than are wines or liquors. The Bremen Anti-Alcohol congress, a conclave of many of the most famous physicians in Europe, concluded that, while spirituous liquors make a man brutal and dulls his judgment, an adequate amount of beer makes him slow-witted, and abolishes judgment. While wine or brandy in sufficient quantity makes a man crazy, beer tends to make him stupid."



—Liberty.

GERMAN SOLDIERS AND BEER.

According to Edward Landsberg, head of the United States Brewing company of Chicago, Germany has a ruling that two-thirds of all the beer made in the empire must go to the men at the front. Each German soldier has a daily allowance of one gallon of beer. "We do not know if this statement is true," says the American Issue, "but if it is, it explains the ravages committed by the Germans in Belgium and northern France. It explains the butchery and mutilation of babies and the unspeakable crimes committed on helpless women and bears out the declaration of science and medicine that beer is a brutalizer.

"If these horrors result from a beer diet, then in the name of America keep beer away from our soldiers!"

THE FIRST FRUITS OF PROHIBITION.

One city jail to let; owing to prohibition there is no further use for it. Net saving to the ratepayers of Vancouver, $10,000 a year.

We told you so.

For the first 12 days in September on which the police courts were open there were 86 convictions for drunkenness. For the corresponding period in October, prohibition month, the total convictions were seven.

We told you so. But only in part. Prohibition's results, as exhibited in the reduction of the number of law breakers are better even than we hoped.—Vancouver (B. C.) World.

BARS INTOXICANTS.

The governor of the territory of Hawaii, Hon. Lucius Eugene Pinkham, has decreed that liquors shall be banished from the official banquets given by him. He showed his sincerity in the matter at the dinner recently given in honor of the commission from Japan en route to Washington.

CHANGE THEIR TUNE.

When the breweries and distilleries were after farmers' votes,
They boasted how much rye they used,
and barley, corn, and oats;
But when prohibition threatened they cried with might and main,
"Oh, spare our trade, dear people, we use hardly any grain!"

THE FARMER IS NOT WORRYING.

The saloon advocates cry; "If you vote out the saloons there will be a panic, the farmer will get nothing for his corn." In the past three years we have voted out of business 244,000 booze joints and the farmer receives more for his corn than ever.—Billy Sunday.

BANK DEPOSITS SOAR.

It is estimated that in the two months after Utah went dry Salt Lake City bank deposits increased 8 per cent, or more than $1,000,000. One bank alone reported an increase of $200,000.

ST. LOUIS GETTING READY.

Mayor Kiel of St. Louis has said that his city would not suffer a great economic shock if the nation went dry, as St. Louis brewers are now putting out substitutes for beer and making nonintoxicating drinks.

Had To Give Up

Was Almost Frantic With the Pain and Suffering of Kidney Complaint. Doan's Made Her Well.

Mrs. Lydia Shuster, 1838 Margaret St., Frankford, Pa., says: "A cold started my kidney trouble. My back began to ache and got sore and lame. My joints and ankles became swollen and painful and it felt as if needles were sticking into them. I finally had to give up and went from bad to worse.

"My kidneys didn't act right and the secretions were scanty and distressing. I had awful dizzy spells when everything before me turned black; one time I couldn't see for twenty minutes. Awful pains in my head set me almost frantic and I was so nervous, I couldn't stand the least noise. How I suffered! Often I didn't care whether I lived or died.

Mrs. Shuster

"I couldn't sleep on account of the terrible pains in my back and head. Nothing seemed to do me a bit of good until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. I could soon see they were helping me; the backache stopped, my kidneys were regulated and I no longer had any dizzy spells or rheumatic pains. I still take Doan's occasionally and they keep my kidneys in good health."

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER

Has been used for all ailments that are caused by a disordered stomach and inactive liver, such as sick headache, constipation, sour stomach, nervous indigestion, fermentation of food, palpitation of the heart caused by gases in the stomach. August Flower is a gentle laxative, regulates digestion both in stomach and intestines, cleans and sweetens the stomach and alimentary canal, stimulates the liver to secrete the bile and impurities from the blood. Sold in all civilized countries. 30 and 90 cent bottles.—Adv.

Cost of Feeding Nippon's Soldiers.

It costs about 43 sen a day (about 22 cents) to feed a private in Japan's Second imperial body-guard regiment, according to an officer quoted in Yomiuri, a venacular paper. Of this, 17 sen goes for a quart of rice and barley (30 per cent barley) and 18 sen for meat and vegetables. The sum is not as small as it seems, as everything is one-third under market price when bought for the army. For breakfast, in addition to the cereal, bean soup is served, and for lunch and supper the menu includes vegetables and fish or meat. Cooking and distribution is carefully done by a staff of 20 men, including three lieutenants, three sergeants and 14 privates—or one cook for every 90 men in a regiment of 1,800. Unused food is sold to cheap eating houses, the money thus gained being spent for extra dishes on festive occasions.

BANK BOOK

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

Not just to have one, nor merely for the purpose of saying she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account--and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and individual attention to such accounts.

Red Cross Department

The Thanksgiving Hunting Club organized for the benefit of the Red Cross, was a great success. When it comes to hard work for a worthy cause our men are in no ways outstanced by "the female of the species." This is as it should be and we appreciate their co-operation. The results of the hunt are as follows:—Skunk, 1; fox squirrels, [illegible]; squirrels, 17; rabbits, 59; owls, [illegible]. This is an excellent showing and the best part is that at auction the kill brought $25.05. This has been donated to the Red Cross and they have the sincere thanks of all our workers.

The local chapter of the Red Cross made a shipment of goods to Mrs. John W. Thompson of Garrett, and thence to the ware house at Wayne. The following articles were in the consignment:—

6 hot water-bag covers
6 bed shirts
16 prs. bed socks
1 pr. pajamas
6 nightinggales
6 knitted wash cloths
14 prs. knitted socks
2 prs. wristlets
4 sleeveless sweaters
1 helmet
1 scarf

The Newville branch put in the following:—

6 bed shirts
6 prs. pajamas
6 nightingales
8 prs. bed socks
1 pr. knitted socks
1 pr. wristlets

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Dufresnay's Christmas Awakening

ON Christmas morning of the year 1681 M. Dufresnay's apartments were in some confusion. Monsieur himself as he slept on a spindle legged sofa was not the very image of order. His rose colored satin coat was under his head, and his silk stockinged calves dangled over the end of his all too brief bed. The cards of yesterday and yesternight bestrewed the floor.

He was disturbed by the insistent tinkling of a bell. Dufresnay groaned and struggled to his feet.

On opening the door he beheld a very beautiful young lady quaintly disguised as a working woman and carrying a large basket such as laundresses use. Dufresnay retreated in confusion, bowing profoundly and wrestling with his coat.

"I pray you pardon me, mademoiselle. I did not expect a—a vision!"

"And I pray you, monsieur, not to mock me," she replied, with a wry little smile. "The last time I came your servant said you had no money. You owe me 17 livres."

"I Did Not Expect a Vision!"

Dufresnay gazed in speechless incredulity for a moment and then burst out laughing.

"A merry Christmas to you, mademoiselle!" he cried. "Is the basket for me?"

"I wish you also a merry Christmas. But please, please listen to me. Perhaps the wine is not yet out of your head. But I must have money today. Surely you can understand?"

Dufresnay partially mustered his wits and attempted an elaborate compliment.

"I have seen all the shepherdesses of our Arcadian Versailles and— By the goddess of the laundry, you are not crying! The basket is very heavy. And here are actual shirts!"

He looked in comic perplexity from the basket to the girl. Then he said gently, "Has no one ever told you how beautiful you are?"

"Certainly you are not the first to flatter me nor the first that failed to pay me, but," she added, and her eyes filled with tears, "I had better hopes of you. Fine words will not help me."

"I know they will not. What have I that will bring 17 livres? This ring?"

"But that is a wedding ring."

"My mother's. And it is for my wife. It is for you."

"That is a cruel jest. And I thought you were so different. You have never seen me before, but I live not far away, and I have often seen you. You are not yourself now or you would not mock me so."

"I was never myself before," insisted Dufresnay.

At this moment a stately personage appeared in the doorway and rang the bell with great vigor.

Dufresnay greeted him with delight.

"Is his majesty returned to Paris? No? He is well?"

Turning to the girl, he said: "I am, as perhaps you know, the king's poor kinsman, as poor as he is rich. M. Ribot has been the bearer of many good gifts. Monsieur, mademoiselle is my betrothed."

"Ahem! M. Dufresnay, his majesty intrusted me with this Christmas present for you—this purse of gold, 500 louis, I believe, and this commission creating you valet de chambre du roi, with a stipend of 100,000 livres per annum. I congratulate you, monsieur. As I have many other commissions to execute for his gracious majesty, I must humbly take my leave."

"Present my grateful thanks and Christmas wishes to his majesty."

M. Ribot made his departure with somewhat the air of one who gladly takes leave of questionable company.

"May I also congratulate you, monsieur?" timidly ventured the girl. "You can pay me now," she added rather tamely.

"You see my establishment—how I live. Could not the order of these apartments be improved? Will you abandon me amid such ruins? The abbe who ministers in the church yonder is my good friend."

"Why, he is also my abbe!"

"Wonderful! White lambs and black are alike his care. I am a most unlucky gamester. And you can give me better luck than ever came of winning. On my honor, I love you. And the abbe will be very glad to see us. Shall we not make the good old man happy?"

"If you will, monsieur."—W. R. Van Deusen in New York Evening Sun.

A Christmas Prayer.

God grant no little child may go
With hungry heart or empty hand—
Give this thy world one radiant day
To understand, to understand.

Give us the fitting word to say,
The spendthrift smile, the brave caress;
Disclose our hearts and give us now
The courage of our tenderness!

Lord, we are old with toil and tears,
Our souls are veiled with various art,
Yet still the little children keep
Thine ancient simpleness of heart—

And they alone of all thy breath
May bind the burning angel's eyes
And, striking laughter from the sword,
Retrace the years to paradise.

They are so brave with love and dreams,
So eager eyed and, ah, so dear!
I think we must return them now
The faith they bore across the year.

I think that we must give them now
The spendthrift smile, the kindly word,
That earth may keep its ancient hope
And we thy full commandments, Lord.

On Active Service with the American Expeditionary Force
11-3, 1917.

Dear Folks,—

After a long time am again able to write you a few lines. We all arrived safely abroad. The trip was rather tiresome and many of the boys were pretty sea sick. But I was only about one-half day. It seems so much different here. Everything is as green as springtime here. The scenery is very beautiful. Our camp is about two miles out of a town of about 30,000. The buildings are of the old fashion, but are quite pretty. We stay in barracks of seventy men each. The ocean is only five Kilometers away. I was up to town, last night, and you may believe that the Americans over here has some fun trying to understand the language. It is hard to get good candy here, so tell Letha she can send over some fudge, as I have a sweet tooth. I am feeling fine and sure hope you are all well. Has Calvin gone with the Engineer yet? There are some here. Answer soon. Your son,

Mrs. Esther Engle is now a patient at the Saranac, New York, hospital for tuberculor patients. She arrived there a week ago Saturday for treaement, and is well pleased with the place and the courtesies extended her. Mrs. Engle will stay at the hospital from 6 months to one year.

Mrs James Harter was taken to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Frank Ginder, four miles north of town, on Wednesday of last week, in the Kinsey Ambulance. Mrs. Harter has been an invalid for a long time, and her daughter will care for her. Mr. Harter will remain here and attend to the dray business for a few months at least.

Another Death

Harlow and Emanuel Ulm received word of the death of their sister, Mrs. George Sturgis, which occurred Saturday at 1 o'clock at her home in Sturgis, Mich. She was also an aunt of the three Jackson brothers. Emanuel Ulm and son John, attended the funeral at Sturgis, Monday.

George Wade died Sunday forenoon at eleven o'clock at his residence just north of the B. & O., tracks of a complication of diseases. He leaves besides the widow, who is an invalid; four sons, Roy, of St. Joe; Lloyd, of Spencerville; Clifford of Maridian, Mich; and Stearl of Coburntown; and four daughters—Mrs. Gertrude Scott and Mrs. Bertha Coburn, of Hicksville; Mrs. Myrtle Cole, of Hillsdale, Mich; and Mrs. Jessie Benjamin, of Grabill; also four brothers and one sister, all of whom reside in Michigan. Funeral was held from the home Wednesday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock. Interment in White City cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Wade became residents of St. Joe about two weeks ago, having moved here from their farm east of Spencerville.

Farmers' Short Course

The Annual Farmers' Short Course will be held at Purdue University January 14-18, 1918. The program, now being completed, promises to be the strongest ever offered to Indiana people. Food Production and Conservation will be the main theme, and will be discussed by some of the most prominent men and women of America.

Men, women, boys and girls are called upon at this time to produce and conserve more food-stuffs. They are also called upon to do a larger and better work in 1918 than in any previous year. The Farmers' Short Course offers an excellent opportunity for our people to get helpful information on all food problems.

Send to Purdue University, La-Fayette, Indiana, for program, premium lists, and other information.

Association Meetings held during Short Course Week are as follows:

Indiana Corn Growers' Association, January 16, 1918.

Indiana Home Economics Association, January 17, 1918.

Indiana Live Stock Breeders' Association, January 17, 1918.

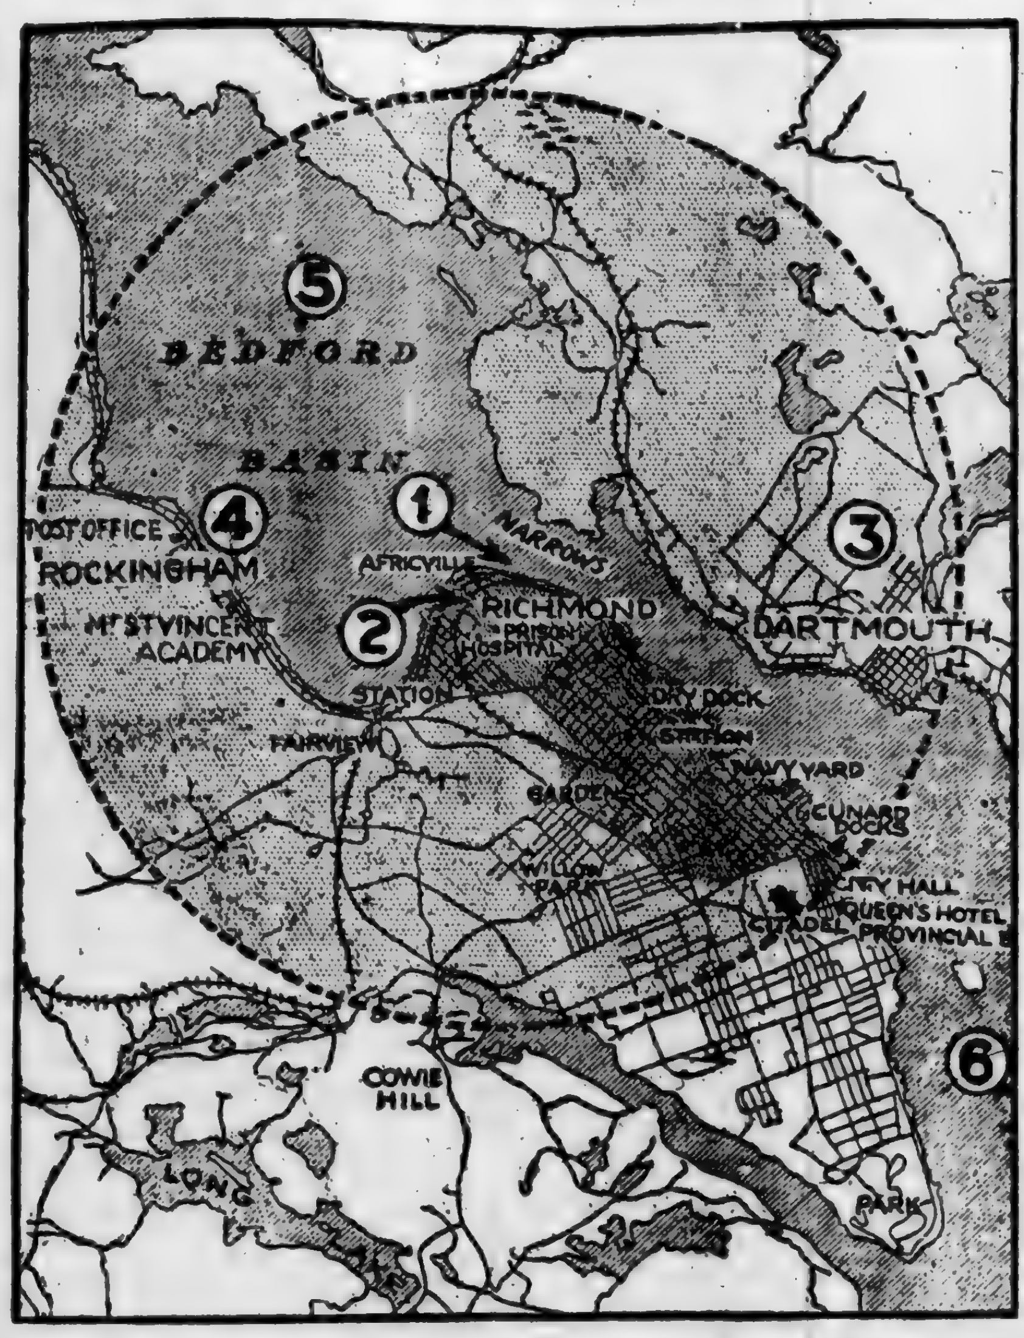
The official statement issued in London says the British troops withdrew to the southwest of Nouvelles-sur-L'Escaur and Bourion wood. The British have advanced slightly their lines southwest of La Vacquerie on the Cambrai front.

SCENE OF MUNITION EXPLOSION AT HALIFAX



1—Approximate location of collision between the Mont Blanc, French munitions ship, and the Ioma, a Belgian relief steamer. The Mont Blanc blew up. 2—Richmond, the section of Halifax which was practically wiped out by the explosion and fire. The darkened districts covers more than two and one-half square miles. 3—Dartmouth, where there also was heavy destruction of life and property. 4—Rockingham, where there was some damage. 5 and 6—The two harbors of Halifax, in which many ships were damaged and members of their crews killed or injured.

WORST DISASTER IN MANY YEARS

Catastrophe at Halifax Appalling in the Loss of Life and Property.

BIG PART OF CITY IN RUINS

Fire Following Rain of Explosives Completes Destruction—Port and Harbor One of the Most Valued of British Naval Posts.

Outside the toll of life claimed on land and sea by the great war, the catastrophe at Halifax is by far the greatest disaster in many years.

Numerous explosions have occurred in munition plants in this country and Europe, but the Halifax disaster is the most tragic explosion, in the number of lives lost, in the last quarter century. Indeed, few catastrophes of any nature have probably exceeded it in the number of dead.

Pilot Frank Mackie of the Mont Blanc declared that the collision resulted from a confusion of whistles sounded by the Ioma, causing a collision with the Mont Blanc, which arrived at a United States Atlantic port on November 9, laden with 3,000 tons of munitions for France. She was in bound from New York when she was rammed by the Belgian relief ship Ioma.

Flames Caught Benzine.

The impact set fire to a deck load of benzine on the French ship and the flames quickly communicated with the munitions, resulting in a practical bombardment of the city.

The zone of destruction in Halifax itself extended from the North street railway station as far north as Africville to Bedford basin and covered an area of about two square miles in the section known as Richmond. The buildings which were not demolished by the force of the terrific explosion were destroyed by the fire which followed.

District Densely Populated.

The devastated district was the older part of Halifax and thickly populated. It contained, in addition to Citadel hill, many churches and schools, the railway station, government dockyard, Wellington barracks, Admiralty House (the official residence of the admiral in command of the North American British squadron), the military hospital, post office, provisional parliament building, city hall, the ordnance department, most of the department stores, all of the telegraph and cable offices and a few hotels.

The better residence district was almost unharmed. It lies southward from the Queens, and includes most of the churches, including St. Mary's Roman Catholic cathedral.

In the fire-swept section were the parliament buildings, post office, three newspaper offices, Royal Bank of Canada, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Bank of Nova Scotia, Bank of British North America and the Bank of Montreal.

Other structures destroyed are Dalhousie college, two Roman Catholic convents, the Presbyterian Theological college, the government technical college, 42 churches and 80 factories, including iron foundries, breweries, distilleries and two sugar refineries.

FAMOUS FOR BEAUTY.

One of the oldest of Canadian cities, Halifax also is one of the most picturesque. It has two principal beauty spots, Point Pleasant park and the Public Gardens. The first lies between the North Arm, a fiord three miles long, and the harbor proper. The North Arm is the cruising basin for canoes and pleasure craft of small size.

Two hundred acres of land make up Point Pleasant park, and the woods have been left in a wild state. The roads are splendid. They were built for military purposes. The park has a pair of magnificent iron gates given to the city by Sir William Young, a former chief justice of the province. They are set at the head of Young avenue, one of the principal roads of the park.

A mile from Young avenue gates are the Public Gardens, the most cultivated spot in Canada, and said to be its most beautiful garden. An area of 20 acres is thus given up for purpose of pleasure right in the heart of the city. When the land was originally taken up for park purposes it lay on the outskirts of the town, and was a hunting field. It is laid out in formal flower beds, a band stand and precise walks.

Like Bit of London.

A dozen public buildings, each with a history, also tended to soften the lines of "the garrison city." Houses originally built of wood and stucco and later of stone and brick and patterned after the English style, give the visitor the impression that Halifax is a corner of London itself, lifted and transplanted in Nova Scotia.

From the citadel a beautiful view of the entire city and harbor is given. Facing the water front, one looking from the fortress may see the entire business district of Halifax lying parallel to the docks and extending back almost a mile from the water front. On three sides of the citadel the residence section slopes away to the water, which almost surrounds the promontory.

Haligonians always took the greatest pride in their public buildings. In the point of age, Old Martello Tower, built during the earliest days of the city's history, is second only to St. Paul's church. It was used as an outpost when settlers were unable to leave the fortifications of the colony without taking chances of being scalped by the Indians.

Other Noted Buildings.

The Provincial Building, the Government House, the City Hall, the Dominion Building and the new Customs House were among the edifices of which the natives of Halifax boasted.

HALIFAX EXPLOSION WORST EVER KNOWN.

The following big explosions have taken place in recent years:

FEBRUARY 1, 1911—Railroad station in New York; cars containing twenty tons of dynamite. Twenty-five killed, 125 injured; $2,000,000 damage.

MARCH 7, 1913—British freighter Alum Chine, in Baltimore harbor; carrying explosives. Forty killed; 300 injured; $400,000 damage.

JULY 30, 1916—Black Tom Island, New Jersey; trains loaded with explosives; seven killed, $10,000,000 damage.

JANUARY 13, 1917—Munitions plant of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company, of Kingsland, N. J. Seventeen killed; $2,000,000 damage.

JANUARY 21, 1917—Munitions plant in London. Seventy killed; 277 injured; damage, 200,000 pounds.

APRIL 12, 1917—Eddystone Ammunition Corporation, Eddystone, Pa. Two hundred killed; $1,000,000 damage.

Other buildings of prominence are the Dalhousie College, Provincial Museum, Academy of Music, Y. M. C. A. Building, Odd Fellows' Temple and the three principal hotels, Halifax, Prince George and Queen's.

Among the famous edifices of the city is the St. Paul's Episcopal Church, said to be the oldest Protestant church built in North America. It was constructed in Boston in 1750, a year after the town was founded, and carried in schooners to Halifax, where the parts were put together. The story is told that when Cornwallis wrote the Earl of Halifax he wanted to build a church the earl replied by sending to Canada the architect who built St. Peter's in London.

The architect patterned the desired church exactly after St. Peter's. When parts arrived the colonists often had to lay down their implements and take to their guns to drive off the Indians, who made frequent attacks upon the workers.

St. Matthew's Presbyterian Church, which was built during the late years of the eighteenth century, was destroyed by fire in 1857, only to be rebuilt.

Cathedral Also Noted.

One of the most beautiful buildings in the city is the St. Mary's Catholic Cathedral. With a tall white spire extending upward, it is visible for miles.

Religion of all denominations seems to thrive in Nova Scotia, for in a recent census of religions only 543 persons were listed as belonging to no sect. At present there are 129,000 Roman Catholics, 106,000 Presbyterians, 83,000 Baptists, 66,000 Anglicans, 57,000 Methodists and a few thousand spread through the Adventists, Disciples and Jews. Of the latter there were 437.

Eighty years ago, when the province was small and practically uninhabited, the Presbyterians were the largest body, although there was a flourishing colony of Roman Catholics at Cape Breton. The Baptists then were an inconsiderable body of poor peasants with badly educated teachers and preachers. Today the Baptists stand third in the list of denominations.

One of World's Best Harbors.

"Halifax has one of the finest harbors in the world and is the chief Canadian gateway for exports. It is the capital of Nova Scotia, with a population of 60,000. The city is three miles long and a mile wide; is built on the eastern slope of a small peninsula.

"It is a garrison city and has eleven forts and batteries, including the Citadel, once one of the strongest fortifications in America.

"The harbor is open all year. Its inner haven is Bedford Basin, 20 miles in circumference, in which the collision and explosion occurred. I have seen as many as 140 ocean vessels in the basin at once.

"Vast new wharves and railway terminals are being constructed by the government at a cost of $30,000,000, but these are near the tip of the peninsula at the south, and evidently were not harmed.

"Halifax is 616 miles nearer Liverpool than is New York for trans-Atlantic liners. It is 600 miles from New York.

Founded By Cornwallis in 1749.

"Colonel Edward Cornwallis left Britain in 1749 and founded the city. The French armada gathered there in 1757 bent on demolishing Louisburg, only to meet disaster through storm and plague. Howe went to Halifax with his men after they were defeated at Boston. Great numbers of royalists from New York found refuge there in the revolution. Halifax was the chief British base of supplies.

"One hundred and six warships made harbor there in 1812. The expedition that burnt Washington started from Halifax. And it was there the Shannon sailed with her prize, the Chesapeake."

U. S. NOW AT WAR WITH AUSTRIA

PRESIDENT WILSON SIGNS RESOLUTION PASSED BL THE HOUSE AND SENATE.

ONLY ONE NEGATIVE VOTE

New York Socialists Opposed to Act—Senator LaFollette Absent When Final Vote Is Taken, But Denies Evading Issue.

Washington, Dec. 10.—The United States is at war with the Austrian empire.

The final act between America and Germany's strongest ally was enacted at 5:03 o'clock Friday afternoon when President Wilson placed his signature to the resolution passed by the senate and house declaring the existence of a state of war between the United States and Austria.

President Wilson's signature to the resolution followed those of Vice President Marshall, presiding officer of the senate, and Champ Clark, speaker of the house.

The resolution in the senate was adopted by a vote of 74 to 0, Senator La Follette not voting, he having withdrawn just before the roll call was started.

Senators Gronna of North Dakota, Norris of Nebraska and Vardaman of Mississippi, who voted against the German war declaration, supported the resolution. Senator La Follette of Wisconsin left during the speechmaking, and did not cast his vote.

Some time after the voting was over La Follette returned to the senate chamber and announced that he would have voted against the Austrian war declaration had he been present, unless it had been amended to provide that the United States would not be a party to any agreement to take any territory held by Austria prior to August 1, 1914.

Denies Evading Vote.

Senator La Follette explained that his absence at the voting was due to the fact that he had expected the debate to continue until late in the day, and that he had gone to his office to perfect an amendment when the resolution was passed. He denied that he had any intention of absenting himself from the chamber to escape voting.

Socialist Cast Negative Vote.

The house, after considerable debate, adopted the senate resolution by a vote of 363 to 1, Representative London, Socialist, of New York casting the negative vote.

Chairman Stone of the senate foreign relations committee presented the resolution and moved its immediate adoption.

Besides the reasons that Austria is Germany's active ally and as such has committed warlike acts against the United States, Senator Stone declared there was the further reason that inasmuch as Italy, France and Belgium comprised one battle front, American troops might at any time be facing Austrians.

Senator Stone made no reference to Turkish or Bulgarian relations.

Washington, Dec. 8.—The text of the joint resolution declaring war on Austria follows:

"Joint resolution.

"Declaring that a state of war exists between the imperial and royal Austro-Hungarian government and the government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same.

"Whereas, The imperial and royal Austro-Hungarian government has committed repeated acts of war against the government and the people of the United States of America; therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America, in congress assembled, That a state of war is hereby declared to exist between the United States of America and the imperial and royal Austro-Hungarian government; and that the president be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the government to carry on war against the imperial and royal Austro-Hungarian government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the congress of the United States.

"CHAMP CLARK,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives.
"THOMAS MARSHALL,
"Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate.
"Approved 7th December, 1917.
"WOODROW WILSON."

TROTZKY RICH MAN NOW

Recently Worked as Reporter in New York at Salary of Thirty-Two Dollars.

London, Dec. 10.—The Daily Express correspondent at Geneva says he learns from a Russian revolutionist that Leon Trotzky was up to June, 1914, employed as a reporter by a small East side New York newspaper at a salary of $32 a week and that Trotzky is now worth more than $500,000.

PRICES DURING CIVIL WAR

Sugar $58 a Barrel, Rice $31.38 a Barrel, Tobacco, Tea and Coffee Much Higher Than Now.

High as prices are, it may be some consolation to know that they are still below the Civil war records: Sugar then sold for $58 a barrel, rice at $31.38 a barrel, tobacco at more than double the present price, and tea at over $100 for a 25-pound chest as compared with the present price of about $20. Coffee was then four times as high as it is at present, says Leslie's.

If the difficulty in getting hold of sugar makes the American people realize we are at war, and inspires in them a willingness to follow Mr. Hoover's suggestions as to economizing in the use of certain foods, it will have accomplished some good.

While complaining of food scarcity, it is well for our people to know how little food others have. The German ration contains .41 of a pound of body building protein as compared with 1.08 in the standard ration. The German ration is not sufficient to maintain bodily health and vigor, but the civil population in the occupied districts of France and Belgium have to exist on even less than this.

Easier Job.

"So you're now in the meat department?"

"Yes, thank goodness!" replied the former ribbon clerk. "The ladies never try to match spare ribs or steak."

WILSON DEMANDS WAR ON AUSTRIA

President Declares Our Sole Object Now Is to Win the War.

UNITED TO GAIN VICTORY

Every Resource of the Nation Must Be Co-ordinated in the One Object to Pursue the War to Ultimate and Complete Victory.

Washington, Dec. 4.—President Wilson in his message to congress pledged America to war to victory and asked that Austria-Hungary be listed among America's enemies to remove this "embarrassing obstacle that stands in our way." The message follows:

"Gentlemen of the Congress—Eight months have elapsed since I last had the honor of addressing you. They have been months crowded with events of immense and grave significance for us. I shall undertake to detail or even to summarize these events. The practical particulars of the part we have played in them will be laid before you in the reports of the executive departments. I shall discuss only our present outlook upon these vast affairs, our present duties, and the immediate means of accomplishing the objects we shall hold always in view.

"I shall not go back to debate the causes of the war. The intolerable wrongs done and planned against us by the sinister masters of Germany have long since become too grossly obvious and odious to every true American to need to be rehearsed. But I shall ask you to consider again and with a very grave scrutiny our objectives and the measures by which we mean to attain them; for the purpose of discussion here in this place is action, and our action must move straight towards definite ends.

Must Win the War.

"Our object is, of course, to win the war; and we shall not slacken or suffer ourselves to be diverted until it is won. But it is worth while asking and answering the question: When shall we consider the war won?

"From one point of view it is not necessary to broach this fundamental matter. I do not doubt that the American people know what the war is about and what sort of an outcome they will regard as a realization of their purpose in it. As a nation we are united in spirit and intention. I pay little heed to those who tell me otherwise. I hear the voices of dissent—who does not? I hear the criticism and the clamour of the noisy, thoughtless and troublesome. I also see men here and there fling themselves in impotent disloyalty against the calm, indomitable power of the nation. I hear men debate peace who understand neither its nature nor the way in which we obtain it with uplifted eyes and unbroken spirits. But I known that none of these speaks for the nation. They do not touch the heart of anything. They may safely be left to strut their uneasy hour and be forgotten.

No Peace by Compromise.

"But from another point of view I believe that it is necessary to say plainly what we here at the seat of action consider the war to be for and what part we mean to play in the settlement of its searching issues.

"We are the spokesmen of the American people, and they have a right to know whether their purpose is ours. They desire peace by the overcoming of evil, by the defeat once for all of the sinister forces that interrupt peace and render it impossible, and they wish to know how closely our thought runs with theirs, and what action we propose. They are impatient with those who desire peace by any sort of compromise—deeply and indignantly impatient—but they will be equally impatient with us if we do not make it plain to them what our objectives are and what we are planning for in seeking to make conquest of peace by arms.

Menace Must Be Crushed.

"I believe that I speak for them when I say two things: First, that this intolerable thing of which the masters of Germany have shown us the ugly face, this menace of combined intrigue and force which we now see so clearly as the German power, a Thing without conscience or honor or capacity for covenanted peace, must be crushed and, if it is not utterly brought to an end, at least shut out from the friendly intercourse of the nations; and, second, when this Thing and its power are indeed defeated and the time comes that we can discuss peace—when the German people have spokesmen whose words we can believe and when those spokesmen are ready in the name of their people to accept the common judgment of the nations as to what shall henceforth be the bases of law and of covenant for the life of the world—we shall be willing and glad to pay the full price for peace, and pay it ungrudgingly. We know what that price will be. It will be full, impartial justice—justice done at every point and to every nation that the final settlement must affect, our enemies as well as our friends.

Final and Convincing Lesson.

"You catch with me, the voices of humanity that are in the air. They grow daily more audible, more articulate, more persuasive, and they come from the hearts of men everywhere. They insist that the war shall not end in vindictive action of any kind; that no nation or people shall be robbed or punished because the irresponsible rulers of a single country have themselves done deep and damnable wrong. It is this thought that has been expressed in the formula 'No annexations, no contributions, no punitive indemnities.' Just because this crude formula expresses the instinctive judgment as to right of plain men everywhere, it has been made diligent use of by the masters of German intrigue to lead the people of Russia astray—and the people of every country their agents could reach, in order that a premature peace might be brought about before autocracy has been taught its final and convincing lesson, and the people of the world put in control of their own destinies."

Right as the Arbiter.

"But the fact that a wrong use has been made of a just idea is no reason why a right use should not be made of it. It ought to be brought under the patronage of its real friends. Let it be said again that autocracy must first be shown the utter futility of its claims to power or leadership in the modern world. It is impossible to apply any standard of justice so long as such forces are unchecked and undefeated as the present masters of Germany command. Not until this has been done can Right be set up as arbiter and peacemaker among the nations. But when that has been done—as, God willing, it assuredly will be—we shall at last be free to do an unprecedented thing, and this the time to avow our purpose to do it. We shall be free to base peace on generosity and justice, to the exclusion of all selfish claims to advantage even on the part of the victors.

To Win War Our Present Task.

"Let there be no misunderstanding. Our present and immediate task is to win the war, and nothing shall turn us aside from it until it is accomplished. Every power and resource we possess, whether of men, of money, or of materials, is being devoted and will continue to be devoted to that purpose until it is achieved. Those who desire to bring peace about before that purpose is achieved I counsel to carry their advice elsewhere. We will not entertain it. We shall regard the war as won only when the German people say to us, through properly accredited representatives, that they are ready to agree to a settlement based upon justice and the reparation of the wrongs their rulers have done. They have done a wrong to Belgium which must be repaired. They have established a power over other lands and people than their own—over the great empire of Austria-Hungary, other hitherto free Balkan states, over Turkey, and within Asia—which must be relinquished.

Must End German Autocracy.

"Germany's success by skill, by industry, by knowledge, by enterprise, we did not grudge or oppose, but admired, rather. She had built up for herself a real empire of trade and influence, secured by the peace of the world. We were content to abide the rivalries of manufacture, science and commerce that were involved for us in her success and stand or fall as we had or did not have the brains and the initiative to surpass her. But at the moment when she had conspicuously won her triumphs of peace she threw them away, to establish in their stead what the world will no longer permit to be established, military and political domination by arms, by which to oust where she could not excel the rivals she most feared and hated. The peace we make must remedy that wrong. It must deliver the once fair lands and happy peoples of Belgium and northern France from the Prussian conquest and the Prussian menace, but it must also deliver the peoples of Austria-Hungary, the peoples of the Balkans, and the peoples of Turkey, alike in Europe and in Asia, from the impudent and alien dominion of the Prussian military and commercial autocracy.

To Manage Their Own Affairs.

"We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to re-arrange the Austro-Hungarian empire. It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands, in all matters, great or small. We shall hope to secure for the peoples of the Balkan peninsula and for the people of the Turkish empire the right and opportunity to make their own lives safe; their own fortunes secure against oppression or injustice and free from the dictation of foreign courts or parties.

"And our attitude and purpose with regard to Germany herself are of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German empire; no interference with her internal affairs. We should deem either the one or the other absolutely unjustifiable, absolutely contrary to the principles we have professed to live by and to hold most sacred throughout our life as a nation.

German People Deceived.

"The people of Germany are being told by the men whom they now permit to deceive them and to act as their masters that they are fighting for the very life and existence of their empire; a war of desperate self-defense against deliberate aggression. Nothing could be more grossly or wantonly false, and we must seek by the utmost openness and candor as to our real aims to convince them of its falseness. We are in fact fighting for their emancipation from fear, along with our, own—from the fear as well as from the fact of unjust attack by neighbors or rivals or schemers after world empire. No one is threatening the existence of or the independence or the peaceful enterprise of th German empire.

Not Again to Be Trusted.

"The worst that can happen to the German people is this, that if they should still, after the war is over, continue to be obligated to live under ambitious and intriguing masters interested to disturb the peace of the world, men or classes of men whom the other peoples of the world could not trust, it might be impossible to admit them to the partnership of nations which must henceforth guarantee the world's peace. That partnership must be a partnership of peoples, not a mere partnership of governments. It might be impossible, also, in such untoward circumstances, to admit Germany to the free economic intercourse which must inevitably spring out of the other partnerships of a real peace. But there would be no aggression in that; and such a situation, inevitable because of distrust, would in the very nature of things sooner or later cure itself, by processes which would assuredly set in.

Wrongs Must Be Righted.

"The wrongs, the very deep wrongs, committed in this war will have to be righted. That of course. But they cannot and must not be righted by the commission of similar wrongs against Germany and her allies.

"The world will not permit the commission of similar wrongs as a means of reparation and settlement. Statesmen must by this time have learned that the opinion of the world is everywhere wide awake and fully comprehends the issues involved. No representative of any self-governed nation will dare disregard it by attempting any such covenants of selfishness and compromise as were entered into at the congress of Vienna. The thought of the plain people here and everywhere throughout the world, the people who enjoy no privilege and have very simple and unsophisticated standards of right and wrong, is the air all governments must henceforth breathe if they would live. It is in the full disclosing light of that thought that all policies must be conceived and executed in this mid-day hour of the world's life.

People Have No Say.

"German rulers have been able to upset the peace of the world only because the German people were not suffered under their tutelage to share the comradeship of the other peoples of the world either in thought or in purpose. They were allowed to have no opinion of their own which might be set up as a rule of conduct for those who exercised authority over them. But the congress that concludes this war will feel the full strength of the tides that run now in the hearts and consciences of freedom everywhere. Its conclusions will run with these tides.

"All these things have been true from the very beginning of this stupendous war; and I cannot help thinking that if they had been made plain at the very outset the sympathy and enthusiasm of the Russian people might have been once for all enlisted on the side of the allies, suspicion and distrust swept away, and a real and lasting union of purpose effected. Had they believed these things at the very moment of their revolution and had they been confirmed in that belief since, the sad reverses which have recently marked the progress of their affairs towards an ordered and stable government of freemen might have been avoided.

"The Russian people have been poisoned by the very same falsehoods that have kept the German people in the dark, and the poison has been administered by the very same hands. The only possible antidote is the truth. It cannot be uttered too plainly or too often.

Freedom of the Seas.

"From every point of view, therefore, it has seemed to be my duty to speak these declarations of purpose, to add these specific interpretations to what I took the liberty of saying to the senate in January. Our entrance into the war has not altered our attitude towards the settlement that must come when it is over. When I said in January that the nations of the world were entitled not only to free pathways upon the sea but also to assured and unmolested access to those pathways I was thinking, and I am thinking now, not of the smaller and weaker nations alone, which need our countenance and support, but also of the great and powerful nations, and of our present enemies as well as our present associates in the war. I was thinking, and am thinking now, of Austria herself, among the rest, as well as of Serbia and of Holand. Justice and equality of rights can be had only at a great price. We are seeking permanent, not temporary, foundations for the peace of the world and must seek this candidly and fearlessly. As always, the right will prove to be expedient.

Declare War on Austria.

"What shall we do, then, to push this great war of freedom and just to its righteous conclusion? We must clear away with a thorough hand all impediments to success and we must make every adjustment of law that will facilitate the full and free use of our whole capacity and force as a fighting unit.

"One very embarrassing obstacle that stands in our way is that we are at war with Germany but not with her allies. I, therefore, very earnestly recommend that the congress immediately declare the United States in a state of war with Austria-Hungary. Does it seem strange to you that this should be the conclusion of the argument I have just addressed to you? It is not. It is in fact the inevitable logic of what I have said. Austria-Hungary is for the time being not her own mistress, but simply the vassal of the German government. We must face the facts as they are and act upon them without sentiment in this stern business. The government of Austria-Hungary is not acting upon its own initiative or in response to the wishes and feelings of its own peoples, but as the instrument of another nation. We must meet its force with our own and regard the central powers as but one. The war can be successfully conducted in no other way.

As to Turkey and Bulgaria.

"The same logic would lead also to a declaration of war against Turkey and Bulgaria. They also are the tools of Germany. But they are mere tools and do not yet stand in the direct path of our necessary action. We shall go wherever the necessities of this war carry us, but it seems to me that we should go only where immediate and practical considerations land us and not heed any others.

"The financial and military measures which must be adopted will suggest themselves as the war and its undertakings develop, but I will take the liberty of proposing to you certain other acts of legislation which seem to me to be needed for the support of the war and for the release of our whole force and energy.

"It will be necessary to extend in certain particulars the legislation of the last session with regard to alien enemies; and also necessary, I believe, to create a very definite and particular control over the entrance and departure of all persons into and from the United States.

"Legislation should be enacted defining as a criminal offense every willful violation of the presidential proclamations relating to alien enemies promulgated under section 4067 of the Revised Statutes and providing appropriate punishments; and women as well as men, should be included under the terms of the acts placing restraints upon alien enemies. It is likely that as time goes on many alien enemies will be willing to be fed and housed at the expense of the government in the detention camps, and it would be the purpose of legislation I have suggested to confine offenders among them in penitentiaries and other similar institutions where they could be made to work as other criminals do.

Go Further in Fixing Prices.

"Recent experience has convinced me that the congress must go further in authorizing the government to set limits to prices. The law of supply and demand, I am sorry to say, has been replaced by the law of unrestrained selfishness. While we have eliminated profiteering in several branches of industry, it still runs impudently rampant in others. The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice, that while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase, and similar iniquities obtain on all sides.

"It is imperatively necessary that the consideration of the full use of the water power of the country and also the consideration of the systematic and yet economical development of such of the natural resources of the country as are still under the control of the federal government should be immediately resumed and affirmatively and constructively dealt with at the earliest possible moment. The pressing need of such legislation is daily becoming more obvious.

A Word to the Lawmakers.

"The legislation proposed at the last session with regard to regulated combinations among our exporters, in order to provide for our foreign trade a more effective organization and method of co-operation, ought by all means to be completed at this session.

"And I beg that the members of the house of representatives will permit me to express the opinion that it will be impossible to deal in any but a very wasteful and extravagant fashion with the enormous appropriations of the public moneys which must continue to be made, if the war is to be properly sustained, unless the house will consent to return to its former practice of initiating and preparing all appropriation bills through a single committee, in order that responsibility may be centered, expenditures standardized and made uniform and waste and duplication as much as possible avoided.

"Additional legislation may also become necessary before the present congress again adjourns in order to effect the most efficient co-ordination and operation of the railway and other transportation systems of the country; but to that I shall, if circumstances should demand, call the attention of the congress upon another occasion.

Concentrate on Winning War.

"If I have overlooked anything that ought to be done for the more effective conduct of the war, your own counsels will supply the omission. What I am perfectly clear about is that in the present session of the congress our whole attention and energy should be concentrated on the vigorous, rapid and successful prosecution of the great task of winning the war.

"We can do this with all the greater zeal and enthusiasm because we know that for us this as a war of high principle, debased by no selfish ambition of conquest or spoliation; because we know, and all the world knows, that we have been forced into it to save the very institutions we live under from corruption and destruction. The purposes of the central powers strike straight at the very heart of everything we believe in; their methods of warfare outrage every principle of humanity and of knightly honor; their intrigue has corrupted the very thought and spirit of many of our people; their sinister and secret diplomacy has sought to take our very territory away from us and disrupt the union of the states. Our safety would be at an end, our honor forever sullied and brought into contempt were we to permit their triumph. They are striking at the very existence of democracy and liberty.

Cause Is Just and Holy.

"It is because it is for us a war of high, disinterested purpose, in which all the free peoples of the world are banded together for the vindication of right, a war for the preservation of our nation, and of all that it has held dear of principle and of purpose, that we felt ourselves doubly constrained to purpose for its outcome only that which is righteous and of irreproachable intention, for our foes as well as for our friends. The cause being just and holy, the settlement must be of like motive and quality. For this we can fight, but for nothing less noble or less worthy of our traditions. For this cause we entered the war and for this cause will we battle until the last gun is fired.

"I have spoken plainly, because this seems to me the time when it is most necessary to speak plainly, in order that all the world may know that even in the heat and ardor of the struggle and when our whole thought is of carrying the war through to its end we have not forgotten any ideal or principle for which the name of America has been held in honor among the nations and for which it has been our glory to contend in the great generations that went before us. A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened, and they see. The hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favor, I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of his own justice and mercy."

The Mystery Explained.

Clifton Hess, an employee of the Pennsylvania railroad at Shelbyville, Ind., relates the Indianapolis News, looked out the window of the freight depot the other day and noticed a woman. A half hour later he looked again and still saw the woman. She had changed her position only slightly, moving down the railroad track a few feet. She seemed to be strolling leisurely along, covering about a foot a minute.

Curious to determine the reason for her actions, Hess walked outside to get a better view. Then it was all explained. The woman had a big Rhode Island Red rooster with a string tied to his leg. There had evidently been a leaky car of wheat along the railroad, and the rooster, oblivious to all else, was calmly filling his craw while the woman kept up with the procession.

Later on during the day the good news must have spread, for there appeared on the scene several other chickens with owners attached to them by strings. As the ground became clean the procession slowly moved from view.

Punishment for Greedy Millers.

The milling committee of the food administration recently announced that it will punish flour millers who boost their profits above the figures approved by Commissioner Hoover.

North Vernon.—A home-talent show at the Jennings theater brought $224.60, which will be contributed for a mess fund for Jennings county soldiers at Camp Zachary Taylor.

Delphi.—Mrs. Hannah Fogle, who lives southeast of Rossville, has sold her farm for $16,000 and has invested the amount in Liberty bonds.

Winamac.—The First Trust and Savings bank of Winamac opened its doors for business. The building and fixtures cost $20,000. The bank is capitalized at $40,000.

Greencastle.—James L. Browning, former county treasurer, has sold his 188-acre farm near Fillmore to J. S. Hagers of Mt. Sterling, Ky., for $23,500. The deal was for cash.

Nashville.—The citizens of Nashville have contributed $400 to obtain a canning factory. If they are successful in getting the factory it will be the only industry in the county.

Petersburg.—The town board of Winslow has granted a gas franchise to the Bement Oil company. The oil company has made arrangements for the immediate piping of gas into the town.

Warsaw.—The Warsaw and Goshen Gas companies, which are owned by the same corporation, have been placed under one management. E. G. Jones has been made superintendent of both plants.

Alexandria.—The coal situation has been greatly improved in Alexandria by the systematic work of the state coal administrator. Local dealers say they are able to get coal this winter much faster and much better than last year.

Indianapolis. — Retail grocers throughout Indiana are called upon to limit sugar sales to two pounds per week per family by H. E. Barnard, state food administrator. Mr. Barnard predicts an increasing sugar shortage for the next few weeks.

Porter.—Homesickness was the reason assigned by Private Van of Traverse City, Mich., as the motive that impelled him to desert from an army cantonment in Georgia. He was arrested and will be returned to the Georgia camp.

North Vernon.—An all-day service, with talks by former pastors, marked the rededication of the First Methodist church at Vernon Sunday.

Petersburg.—S. J. Haines has been appointed a member of the city council to take the place of his son, Harry Haines, who died November 6, the day he was re-elected. Mr. Haines is a Republican, as was his son.

Danville.—The Hendricks County Fanciers' association will not be able to hold its annual show unless the county council makes its annual appropriation to finance the show. The council failed to make the appropriation at its last meeting.

Peru.—The Peru Chamber of Commerce has elected officers as follows: President, A. O. Gallahan; vice president, Arthur Simon; treasurer, Lloyd Smith; directors, A. S. Barnett, Jesse T. Stevens, Henry S. Bailey, Frank Weeks and Max Kraus. Dudley H. Brattin is secretary.

Evansville.—Foote's lake, in Posey county, a few miles west of here, is to be drained and the land will be converted into farms. The lake will be drained into Black river early next spring. Foote's lake is one of the largest lakes in southern Indiana and has long been a favorite resort for anglers.

Bicknell.—The Panhandle Coal company of this city has leased several hundred acres of land north of the city and will sink its third mine in that vicinity. This is an undeveloped field, and one of the richest in this part of the county.

Goshen.—Frank Cehring of Millersburg, a bridge carpenter, was killed instantly at Indiana Harbor when a bridge collapsed and he was struck by a steel girder.

Fort Wayne.—Lester Casebere, aged twenty-one, of Butler, was killed instantly when a fast New York Central train struck the automobile in which he was returning home. His companion, Milliard Tyson, suffered broken legs, serious cuts about the body and internal injuries. He is not expected to recover.

Bloomington. — Arthur Tee, aged twenty-four, and John Tracy, aged twenty-six, both were shot accidentally by Tracy while hunting. Tracy was carrying a cocked gun, which was discharged when he fell into a ditch.

Hagerstown.—Ed Beeson, a farmer, suffered a broken leg when he was bringing a drove of hogs to the station for shipment. One of the hogs becoming unmanageable, Beeson called to his son to hit it with the stick he was carrying. The boy, however, threw a stone at the hog, hitting his father instead and breaking his leg just below the knee.

PIDGIN ENGLISH IS POPULAR

In China the Lingo Is Used by Both Servants and Employers in Speaking to Each Other.

In China servants speak pidgin, or business, English to their employers; and servants from different parts of China will use this weird language in speaking to each other. The formation of the sentence is the same as in Chinese; the language itself is an extraordinary mixture of English, Portuguese, French and Chinese. Some of the phrases, says Mrs. De Burgh Daly in An Irishwoman in China, are very quaint and amusing.

A bishop is called "No. 1, top side joss pidgin man." "Top side" means heaven, "joss," god, "pidgin," business.

There is a story of two men who came to call upon the king of Siam when he was staying in Shanghai. They entered the hotel and asked the proprietor, a courteous American, if his majesty were at home.

"Boy," called the proprietor, "one piecee king have got?"

"Have got, sir," replied the boy cheerfully.

"His majesty is at home, gentlemen," translated the proprietor.

One day, says Mrs. Daly, a large party assembled on a steamer to bid farewell to homeward-bound friends. Wishing to make certain that the steamer should not carry us off, we informed the steward in excellent Mandarin that he was to come and warn us of her departure. He stared blankly. Some one tried Ningpo dialect—no use; Shanghai—still a blank stare. At last my husband called out:

"Boy!"

"Yessir."

"Wantchee walkee can come talkee! Savvee?"

"All right, sir; my savvee."

Servants quickly find out our likes and dislikes in food, and act accordingly. A friend of mine was fond of snipe, and often ordered them for dinner. One evening, when an unexpected guest arrived, she told Boy that since there were not enough snipe she would not eat one. Presently Boy nudged her and remarked in a loud whisper:

"Missee can have snipe; one piecee man no chow!"

The Difference.

Everyone who enjoys nature thinks that the principal thing to the tree is the fruit, but in point of fact the principal thing to it is the seed. Herein lies the difference between them that create and them that enjoy.—Nietzsche.

Christmas Tree For the Birds

Mr. and Mrs. Song Sparrow, the Misses Flicker, Cock Robin, Miss Jennie Wren, Sir Woodpecker and other members of the feathered Four Hundred who were lured by warm days at beginning of one winter into stopping with us, only to find themselves sadly hit later by the high cost of living, were thrown into a flutter of excitement by cards issued by Miss Louise Laidlaw of Sands Point, N. Y., to a birds' Christmas tree party.

It was held in the bird sanctuary on the Laidlaw place, near the commodious home built for bird tenants in a sheltering elm there. The tree was the finest ever.

For days little Miss Louise was busy in the pauses of her lessons, stringing cranberries, popcorn, nuts and other dainties beloved of birds. Strings of red skinned apples, cut into tiny pieces convenient for birds to peck at, were a prominent feature of the decorations, and so were bacon rinds and lumps of suet, which are good to keep warmth in the little bodies when the cold creeps under their feathered coats.

The Birds' Christmas Tree.

Miss Louise, who spent most of her time in the country, studied the ways of the birds and their likings, and she knew that they are as strongly attracted by bright colored things as are children. That is why the tree was made pretty with gay tinted berries.

There was a large attendance, and no birds were turned away, no matter how shabby their coats or disreputable their reputations. The blustering little English sparrows were welcomed with the rest, although they tried to bully the others. Even grouchy old Sir Crow was permitted to peck a bit.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

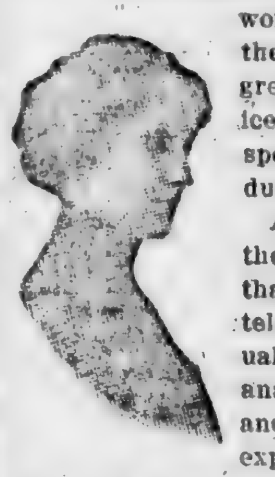
WOMEN OF INDIANA HAVE LARGE PART

Much Depends Upon Their Cooperation if Allies Win the War.

BETTY BLYTHE WRITES

Some Suggestions of What Must Be Done if America Does Her Part for Freedom.



Here's something every woman in Indiana will want to know about. It's the thrilling story of how the Hoosier women have banded themselves into a great army of service, ready to respond instantly to duty.

And it's more the first call to war than that—for it tells every individual woman in Indiana what her state and her government expects her to do—and tells her why she should do it quickly.

"What are the women doing?" The question was put to Will H. Hayes, chairman of the State Council of Defense. For reply he turned to a card file and showed me FIFTY THOUSAND names of Indiana women who have pledged loyal support to their government and have agreed to give as much time as possible to helping to win the war.

But wait—there's no thrill in fifty thousand. We must have hundreds of thousands.

"Go talk to Mrs. Carlisle about it—she'll tell you what the women are doing," said Mr. Hayes.

Mrs. Anne Studebaker Carlisle, of South Bend, Ind., is the woman member of the Defense Council and the chairman of the Woman's Section. I found her in her office at the State House, with a corps of assistants working out the details of an organization that will reach out and gather in every woman and young girl in the state. Already there is a chairman and working organization in every county and pretty soon there won't be even a wayside farm left without information concerning the part that Hoosier women are expected to play in winning the war.

And I want to tell all you other women that it's the biggest thing we have ever undertaken.

And get this fact firmly fixed in your minds—THE WAR CANNOT BE WON WITHOUT OUR HELP.

It is not enough to send our boys away with brave smiles.

Ah, no, we've only set our feet in the first steps of the thorny path that is leading us slowly—but surely—to victory. The young soldiers have made the supreme sacrifice; they are giving their lives. But the mothers have given their sons—THEIR supreme sacrifice and now they're making sacrifices and giving every minute of their time to war work. Warm clothing must be knitted, food must be saved to follow the soldiers to the trenches. Red Cross supplies must be hurried forward—for each mother fears that HER boy may be the next victim of the terrible Hun.

And when that's all done there is more work. For business must continue and government contracts must be filled on time and thousands upon thousands of women must take the places of those boys who have marched away, heads up and faces grim with the determination to make the world safe for THEIR mothers and sisters, so that the unutterable things that have happened overseas can never happen again to the women of this world.

And while they are making the world safe we women are going to keep Indiana safe and prosperous for them to come home to. We intend to keep the wheels of industry going round, if need be, and we're organizing right this minute.

Do you know what I have been wishing, ever since I knew about Mrs. Carlisle's Indiana women's army for service—why that Germany could see, in real life, this compact, forceful army—thousands strong—backing up with every atom of strength our boys at the front!

But we must first dress up our lines a bit. We must hurry and fill up the ranks, for who knows how soon there may be a hurry up call from the government. Don't think that because we have been at war six months and there has been no definite call for women's work, other than Red Cross and knitting, etc., that we can continue on in our present placid contentment.

As sure as the sun shines, there will come to us that awful day—God grant it may be long delayed—when the fate of the world will be in our hands, when superhuman action on our part can alone save use from a fate worse than death.

Some day the crisis will come and your heart will all but stop beating from the horror. It has come to each of our allies—it will come to us.

Oh, wake up! WAKE UP! The Hun is at our very door.

When he threw his first crushing strength at England it left her weak and helpless. The men were called to action—nobody was left to "carry on."

Then the women rallied with a courage and efficiency that has won the admiration of the world. "We'll save our country," they said, and they have made good their word.

But months were lost in organizing the women and thousands of soldiers lost their lives because the country was not ready.

Indiana women were among the first to learn their lesson—they are getting ready now. When the call comes, they will stand forth in solid ranks, ready to meet whatever emergency may befall.

And oh, you great mother hearts of Indiana! Here's one heart-breaking duty that's coming. Some day there will come back to us maimed and broken men—and then's when you will be glad that you have signed your service cards as a member of the great Hoosier army of women, for then you will be ready to go to work to help care for those boys as they come.

The first thing that is asked of you is very simple. The government wants every woman, no matter what her position or circumstances, to register. Cards for this purpose are now being distributed by the Committee on Enrollment and Woman's Service, and Mrs. Carlisle announces that the force of the state-wide organization which she is now perfecting will be put behind a drive to secure the names of every woman in the state, and it is probable that the precinct chairmen in every community will conduct a house to house canvass.

The government wants to know who and what and where the women of America are. This is a matter on which there is absolutely no definite information, and such a register is one of the vital things necessary to help win the war. It is an admitted fact that neither France nor England could continue the war without the help of the women—nor could Germany fight another minute without them.

Registration is voluntary on the part of the women and does not mean that they are rendering themselves liable for arbitrary service. It simply means that the government wants to know—must know—with unquestioned accuracy, how many loyal women it can count on. When a woman registers it means that she's backing her government to the finish of this war—that she can be counted on to help

Again, such a register will furnish a list of women to whom the government can turn for instant action in emergency. There are thousands of women in Indiana, for example, who are in a position to take paid positions in order to release men for the fighting line. There are many who will loyally give a hand in helping to complete war contracts if needed.

All right—but there will be no time when emergency arises to seek out these willing workers. But with a register at hand, they can be reached in an hour's time.

If you can give but an hour's service a day or week, register for that. There are cooking, knitting, Red Cross work, and numberless other things that are as necessary as sending bullets to the front.

And remember that now—this very day—some of our boys are dying "over there." Cannot we, safe in our cozy, protected homes, give one hour to back them up?

Prudence Says So

By

Author of "Prudence of the Parsonage"

(Copyright. The Bobbs-Merrill Company.)

CAROL'S "UPLIFTING" WORK AMONG THE ERRING HAS AN AMUSING ENDING—THE BISHOP AND THE PASTOR MAKE SOME STRANGE ACQUAINTANCES

Synopsis.—The story opens in the home of the Rev. Mr. Starr where Prudence, his eldest daughter and feminine head of the house, consisting of her father, herself, her sister Fairy, the twins—Carol and Lark—and Connie, the youngest, are awaiting the arrival of their aunt Grace. Liveliness of the smaller members of the family results disastrously for their appearance. Carol and Lark investigate Christian Science. Prudence postpones her wedding when Carol catches measles.

CHAPTER III—Continued.

"No," said Prudence slowly, with a white face. "We'll postpone it. I won't get married without the whole family."

"I said right from the start—"

"Oh, yes, Fairy, we know what you said," interjected Carol. "We know how you'll get married. First man that gets moonshine enough into his head to propose to you, you'll trot him post haste to the justice before he thinks twice."

In the end, the wedding was postponed a couple of months—for both Connie and Fairy took the measles. But when at last the wedding party, marshaled by Connie with a huge white basket of flowers, trailed down the time-honored aisle of the Methodist church, it was without one dissenting voice pronounced the crowning achievement of Mr. Starr's whole pastorate.

"I was proud of us, Lark," Carol told her twin, after it was over, and Prudence had gone, and the girls had wept themselves weak on each other's shoulders. "We get so in the habit of doing things wrong that I half expected myself to pipe up ahead of father with the ceremony. It seems—awful—without Prudence—but it's a satisfaction to know that she was the best-married bride Mount Mark has ever seen."

"Jerry looked awfully handsome, didn't he? Did you notice how he glowed at Prudence? I wish you were artistic, Carol, so you could illustrate my books. Jerry'd make a fine illustration."

"We looked nice, too. We're not a bad-looking bunch, when you come right down to facts. Of course it is fine to be as smart as you are, Larkie, but I'm not jealous. We're mighty lucky to have both beauty and brains in our twinship—and since one can't have both, I may say I'd just as lief be pretty. It's so much easier."

"Carol!"

"What?"

"We're nearly grown up now. We'll have to begin to settle down. Prudence says so."

For a few seconds Carol wavered, tremulous. Then she said pluckily, "All right. Just wait till I powder my nose, will you? It gets so shiny when I cry."

"Carol!"

"What?"

"Isn't the house still?"

"Yes—ghastly."

"I never thought Prudence was much of a chatterbox, but—listen! There isn't a sound."

Carol held out a hand, and Lark clutched it desperately.

"Let's—let's go find the folks. This is awful! Little old Prudence is gone!"

CHAPTER IV.

The Serenade.

A subject that never failed to arouse the sarcasm and the ire of Fairy was that of the Slaughter-house quartet. This was composed of four young men—men quite outside the pale as far as the parsonage was concerned—the disreputable characters of the community, familiar in the local jail for frequent bursts of intoxication. They slouched, they smoked, they lounged, they leered. The churches knew them not. They were the slum element, the Bowery of Mount Mark, Iowa.

Prudence, in her day, had passed them by with a shy, slight nod and a glance of tender pity. Fairy and Lark, and even Connie, sailed by with high heads and scornful eyes—haughty, proud, icily removed. But Carol, by some weird and inexplicable fancy, treated them with sweet and gracious solicitude, quite friendly. Her smile as she passed was as sweet as for her dearest friend. Her "Good morning—isn't this glorious weather?" was as affably cordial as her "Breakfast is ready, papa!"

This was the one subject of dispute between the twins.

"Oh, please don't, Carol, it does make me so ashamed," Lark entreated.

"You mustn't be narrow-minded, Larkie," Carol argued. "We're minister's girls, and we've got to be a good influence—an encouragement to the—er, weak and erring, you know. Maybe my smiles will be an inspiration to them."

And on this point Carol stood firm even against the tears of her precious twin.

One evening at the dinner table Fairy said, with a mocking smile, "How are your Slaughter-house friends today, Carol? I see by last night's paper that Guy Fletsher is just out after his last thirty days up. Did he find his incarceration trying?"

"I didn't discuss it with him," Carol said indignantly. "I never talk to them. I just say 'Good morning' in Christian charity."

Aunt Grace's eyes were smiling as always, but for the first time Carol felt that the smiles were at, instead of with, her.

"You would laugh to see her, Aunt Grace," Fairy explained. "They are generally half intoxicated, sometimes wholly. And Carol trips by, clean, white and shining. They are always lounging against the store windows or posts for support, bleary-eyed, dissipated, swaggery, staggery. Carol nods and smiles as only Carol can, 'Good morning, boys! Isn't this a lovely day? Are you feeling well?' And they grin at her and sway ingratiatingly against one another, and say, 'Mornin', Carol.' Carol is the only really decent person in town that has anything to do with them."

"Carol means all right," declared Lark angrily.

"Yes, indeed," assented Fairy. "They call them the Slaughter-house quartet, auntie, because whenever they are sober enough to walk without police assistance, they wander through the streets slaughtering the peace and serenity of the quiet town with their rendition of all the late, disgraceful sentimental ditties. They are in many ways striking characters. I do not wholly misunderstand their attraction for romantic Carol. They are something like the troubadours of old—only more so."

Carol's face was crimson. "I don't like them," she cried, "but I'm sorry for them. I want to show them that the decent element, we Christians, are sorry for them and want to make them better."

"Carol wants to be an influence," Fairy continued. "Of course it is a little embarrassing for the rest of us to have her on such friendly terms with the most unmentionable characters in all Mount Mark. But Carol is like so many reformers—in the presence of one great truth she has eyes for it only, ignoring a thousand other, greater truths."

"I am sorry for them," Carol repeated, more weakly abashed by the presence of the united family. Fairy's dissertations on this subject had usually occurred in private.

Mr. Starr mentally resolved that he would talk this over with Carol when the others were not present, for he knew from her face and her voice that she was really sensitive on the subject. And he knew, too, that it is difficult to explain to the very young that the finest of ideas are not applicable to all cases by all people. But it happened that he was spared the necessity of dealing with Carol privately, for matters adjusted themselves without his assistance.

The second night following was an eventful one in the parsonage. One of the bishops of the church was in Mount Mark for a business conference with the religious leaders, and was to spend the night at the parsonage. The meeting was called for eight-thirty for the convenience of the business men concerned, and was to be held in the church offices. The men left early, followed shortly by Fairy, who designed to spend the evening at the Averys' home, testing their supply of winter apples. The twins and Connie, with the newest and most thrilling book Mr. Carnegie afforded the town, went upstairs to lie on the bed and take turns reading aloud. And for a few hours the parsonage was as calm and peaceful as though it were not designed for the housing of merry minister's daughters.

Aunt Grace sat downstairs darning stockings. The girls' intentions had been the best in the world, but in less than a year the family darning had fallen entirely into the capable and willing hands of the gentle chaperon.

It was half past ten. And suddenly, from beneath the peach trees clustered on the south side of the parsonage, a burst of melody arose.

"Good morning, Carrie, how are you this morning?"

The girls sat up abruptly, staring at one another, as the curious, ugly song wafted in upon them. Conviction dawned slowly, sadly, but unquestionably.

The Slaughter-house quartet was serenading Carol in return for her winsome smiles!

Carol herself was literally struck dumb. Her face grew crimson, then white. In her heart she repeated psalms of thanksgiving that Fairy was away, and that her father and the bishop would not be in until this colossal disaster was over.

Connie was mortified. It seemed like a wholesale parsonage insult. Lark, after the first awful realization, lay back on the bed and rolled convulsively.

The rollicking strains of "Budweiser" were swung gayly out upon the night.

Carol writhed in anguish. The serenade was bad enough, but this unmerciful mocking derision of her adored twin was unendurable.

Then the quartet waxed sentimental. They sang, and not badly, a few old Southern melodies, and started slowly around the corner of the house, still singing.

It has been said that Aunt Grace was always kind, always gentle, unsuspicious and without guile. She had heard the serenade, and promptly concluded that it was the work of some of the high-school boys, who were unanimously devoted to Carol. She had a big box of chocolates upstairs, for Connie's birthday celebration. She could get them and make lemonade and—

She opened the door softly and stepped out, directly in the path of the startled youths. Full of her hospitable intent, she was not discerning as parsonage people need to be.

"Come in, boys," she said, cordially, "the girls will be down in a minute."

The appearance of a guardian angel summoning them to paradise could not have confounded them more utterly. They stumbled all over one another in trying to back away from her. She laughed softly.

"Don't be bashful. We enjoyed it very much. Yes, come right in."

Undoubtedly they would have declined if only they could have thought of the proper method of doing so. As it was, they only succeeded in shambling through the parsonage door, instinctively concealing their half-smoked cigarettes beneath their fingers.

Aunt Grace ushered them into the pleasant living room, and ran up to summon her nieces.

Left alone, the boys looked at one another with amazement and with grief, and the leader, the touching tenor, said with true musical fervor, "Well, this is a go!"

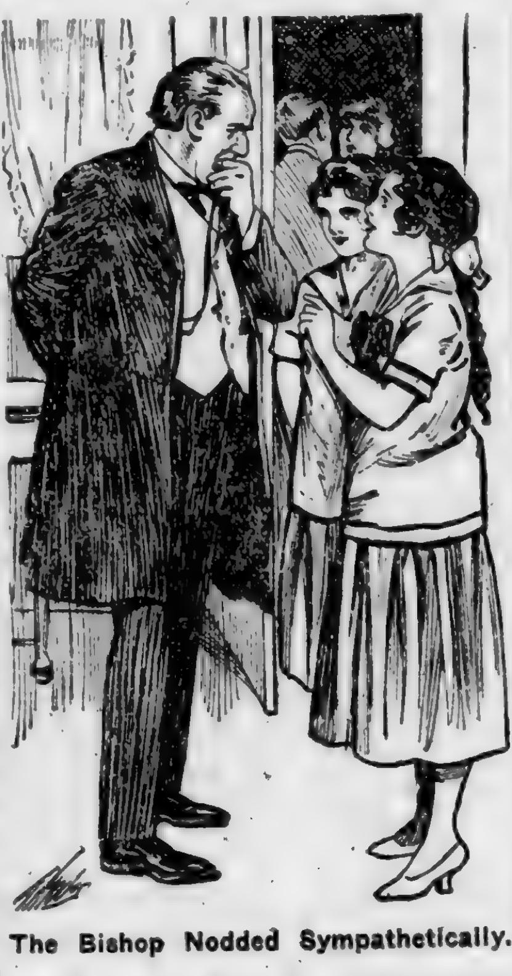
In the meantime, the girls, with horror, had heard their aunt's invitation. What in the world did she mean? Was it a trick between her and Fairy? Had they hired the awful Slaughterers to bring this disgrace upon the parsonage? Sternly they faced her when she opened their door.

"Come down, girls—I invited them in. I'm going to make lemonade and serve my nice chocolates. Hurry down."

"You invited them in!" echoed Connie.

"The Slaughter-house quartette," hissed Lark.

Then Aunt Grace whirled about and stared at them. "Mercy!" she whispered, remembering for the first time Fairy's work. "Mercy! Is it—that? I thought it was high school boys and—mercy!"



The Bishop Nodded Sympathetically.

"Mercy is good!" said Carol grimly.

"You'll have to put them out," suggested Connie.

"I can't! How can I?—How did I know?—what on earth— Oh, Carol whatever made you smile at them?" she wailed helplessly. "You know how men are when they are smiled at! The bishop—"

"You'll have to get them out before the bishop comes back," said Carol. "You must. And if any of you ever give this away to father or Fairy I'll—"

"You'd better go down a minute, girls," urged their aunt. "That will be the easiest way. I'll just pass the candy and invite them to come again and then they'll go. Hurry now, and we'll get rid of them before the others come. Be as decent as you can, and it'll soon be over."

Thus adjured, with the dignity of the bishop and the laughter of Fairy ever in their thoughts, the girls arose and went down, proudly, calmly, loftily. Their inborn senses of humor came to their assistance when they entered the living room. The Slaughter boys looked far more slaughtered than slaughtering. They sat limply in their chairs, nervously twitching their yellowed slimy fingers, their dull eyes intent upon the worn spots in the carpet. It was funny! Even Carol smiled, not the serene sweet smile that melted hearts, but the grim hard smile of the joker when the tables are turned! She flattered herself that this wretched travesty on parsonage courtesy would be ended before there were any further witnesses to her downfall from her proud fine heights, but she was doomed to disappointment. Fairy, on the Averys' porch, had heard the serenade. After the first shock, and after the helpless laughter that followed, she bade her friends good night.

"Oh, I've just got to go," she said. "It's a joke on Carol. I wouldn't miss it for twenty-five bushels of apples—even as good as these are."

Her eyes twinkling with delight, she ran home and waited behind the rose bushes until the moment for her appearance seemed at hand. Then she stepped into the room where her outraged sisters were stoically passing precious and luscious chocolates to tobacco-saturated youths.

"Good evening," she said. "The Averys and I enjoyed the concert, too. I do love to hear music outdoors on still nights like these. Carol, maybe your friends would like a drink. Are there any lemons, auntie? We might have a little lemonade."

Carol writhed helplessly. "I'll make it," she said, and rushed to the kitchen to vent her fury by shaking the very life out of the lemons. But she did not waste time. Her father's twinkles were nearly as bad as Fairy's own—and the bishop!

"I'd wish it would choke 'em if it wouldn't take so long," she muttered passionately, as she hurried in with the pitcher and glasses, ready to serve the "slums" with her own chaste hands.

She was just serving the melting tenor when she heard her father's voice in the hall.

"Too late," she said aloud, and with such despair in her voice that Fairy relented and mentally promised to "see her through."

Mr. Starr's eyes twinkled freely when he saw the guests in his home, and the gentle bishop's puzzled interest nearly sent them all off into laughter. Fairy had no idea of the young men's names, but she said, quickly, to spare Carol:

"We have been serenaded tonight, doctor—you just missed it. These are the Mount Mark troubadours. You are lucky to get here in time for the lemonade."

But when she saw the bishop glance concernedly from the yellow fingers to the dull eyes and the brown-streaked mouths, her gravity nearly forsook her. The Slaughterers, already dashed to the ground by embarrassment, were entirely routed by the presence of the bishop. With incoherent apologies, they rose to their unsteady feet and in a cloud of breezy odors, made their escape.

Mr. Starr laughed a little, Aunt Grace put her arm protectingly about Carol's rigid shoulders, and the bishop said, "Well, well, well," with gentle inquiry.

"We call them the Slaughter-house quartette," Fairy began cheerfully. "They are the lower strata of Mount Mark, and they make the nights hideous with their choice selection of popular airs. The parsonage is divided about them. Some of us think we should treat them with proud and cold disdain. Some think we should regard them with a tender, gentle, er—smiling pity. And evidently they appreciated the smiles, for they gave us a serenade in return for them. Aunt Grace did not know their history, so she invited them in, thinking they were just ordinary schoolboys. It is home mission work run aground."

The bishop nodded sympathetically. "One has to be so careful," he said. "So extremely careful with characters like those. No doubt they meant well by their serenade, but—girls especially have to be very careful. I think as a rule it is safer to let men show the tender pity and women the fine disdain. I don't imagine they would come serenading your father and me! You carried it off beautifully, girls. I am sure your father was proud of you. I was myself. I'm glad you are Methodists. Not many girls so young could handle a difficult matter as neatly as you did."

"Yes," said Mr. Starr, but his eyes twinkled toward Carol once more; "yes, indeed, I think we are well cleared of a disagreeable business."

But Carol looked at Fairy with such humble, passionate gratitude that tears came to Fairy's eyes and she turned quickly away.

"Carol is a sweet girl," she thought. "I wonder if things will work out for her just right—to make her as happy as she ought to be. She's so—lovely."

Carol goes to the assistance of Lark when dire tribulations threaten—a near-painful incident becomes a comedy.

New Metal Discovered.

A new metal has been discovered in the Nelson mining district of British Columbia by Andrew G. French, and it has been named Canadium. It is allied to the platinum group and occurs pure in the form of grain and short crystalline rods, and also an alloy, and assays give three ounces or less to the ton.

Canadium has a brilliant luster, and, like gold and silver and platinum, does not oxidize when exposed to the air; it is softer than platinum and its melting point is a great deal lower. The physical and chemical properties of the metal are to be studied at the chemical laboratory of the University of Glasgow.

Canadium is the first new metal to be discovered in anything more than infinitesimal quantities since 1885.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

TO THE MODERATE DRINKER.

"Nations, as well as individuals, are accepting the unquestioned nervous damage of alcohol," says Rr. Robert S. Carroll in his book, "The Mastery of Nervousness." Many appalling and distorted statements have been made to frighten the drinker from his cups. But it would seem that when a committee appointed by a government to investigate the harmful effects of alcohol reports that the drinker's life is shortened 25 minutes by every glass of alcoholic liquor, even the reckless would hesitate. Six years are knocked off the earthly existence of the average drinker. The tippler answers that it is his own life that he is shortening, and if he pleases to so live and die, he alone is hurt. There is another thing to be considered:

"Three out of four of the offspring of average drinkers show inherited defects, chiefly of the nervous system. Many an intense, unhappy, miserable, high-strung neurotic of today is the defective daughter of a genial, jovial, easy-going, old-school gentleman whose mint juleps of good-fellowship burn hot in the brains of his children. Numbers of fearsome epileptics go through lives of fierce uncertainty, the unhappy products of a single ancestral spree. These innocent victims are condemned, before birth, to live with nervous systems attuned to discord, capable of expressing life only through minor strains, hopelessly deficient—pitiable, depressed, morbid, blighted lives."

THE WINNING ARGUMENT.

"It is idle to argue from prophecy, when we may argue from history," pithily said Sidney Lanier. What has really happened as the result of dry law is of more value as prohibition argument than all the prognostications of liquor advocates in and for territory now wet. In a recent campaign issue the Union Signal gives column after column to this worth-while history argument. First-hand testimony from 14 dry states (there was no space for more) proves that prohibition is a boon and a blessing socially and economically; that it increases man power and money power. "The success argument," says the editor, "is the winning factor in present-day prohibition campaigns. It effectually silences the liquorites." That argument is abundantly supplied by enthusiastic statements continually given out by governors, attorney generals, mayors, sheriffs, bankers, by business managers, labor commissioners, and prominent residents of prohibition states.

DRY BITS.

Grammar à la prohibition:
Dry: Comparative.
Dryer: Superlative.
Bone dry: In 1920 the United States will be in the superlative condition.

The constitution of the United States gives to each man the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

The liquor institution sends man to death, slavery and the pursuit of wretchedness.

St. Paul wrote to Timothy to use a little wine for his stomach's sake. A good many Timothys since then have too eagerly followed this advice and have gone to seed.

LIQUOR AND LABOR.

A department superintendent of one of the big tire factories in Akron, O., uses 60 men in each shift. They are making gas masks, miners' respirators, and other vital war material. That department is working only two shifts a day instead of three, because of the scarcity of labor. They pay off on Friday. On one Saturday only six of the sixty men in one shift reported for work. "Ninety per cent of our labor troubles are due to booze," says this superintendent. If the government would shut down on the liquor traffic we could increase our output enormously. There is no lack of labor. The only trouble is to keep it working full time."

PASSING OF THE PENITENTIARY.

Citizens of Colorado are inquiring what is to become of the state penitentiary a few years hence. Despite the increase in population the prison quota, Warden Tynan says, has been reduced since prohibition went into effect at the rate of ten a month. Should this same ratio be maintained the penitentiary will be emptied in less than six years.

Other dry states face similar situations. If Kansas were not providing for federal prisoners and prisoners from other states, most of her penal institutions would be closing up.

Best Soldier a Middleweight.

It isn't the big 170 pounders that the examining boards, who have been choosing recruits for the new National army, greet with enthusiasm, says Milestones. It's the lithe chap who weighs about 140 and hasn't a pound to spare that is the real prize for military service.

Tests made at Princeton and in the training camps go to show that, weight for weight, a man of this build handles himself more effectively. He scores relatively low in strength tests, but remarkably high in endurance. He is adaptable when it comes to the modifications of diet that life in camp makes necessary and he can stand inspection with full equipment on a hot day and smile, while the big fellow wilts and falls out.

The Poilu Magnificent.

After one of the battles near Verdun a poilu who had distinguished himself for conspicuous gallantry was called over by an officer. "Of what religion are you?" he asked. A GREAT DISCOVERY

(By J. H. Watson, M. D.)

Swollen hands, ankles, feet are due to a dropsical condition, often caused by disordered kidneys. Naturally when the kidneys are deranged the blood is filled with poisonous waste matter, which settles in the feet, ankles and wrist: or under the eyes in bag-like formations.

As a remedy for those easily recognized symptoms of inflammation caused by uric acid—as scalding urine, backache and frequent urination, as well as sediment in the urine, or if uric acid in the blood has caused rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, gout, it is simply wonderful how quickly An-u-ric acts; the pains and stiffness rapidly disappear, for Anuric, (double strength), is many times more potent than lithia and often eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. Status of Arab Nation.

The Arab nation is without money or natural resources. Its territory contains neither mineral nor external agricultural wealth—but the redemption of Mesopotamia will afford the Arab of the future opportunity for aggrandizement. There, under semi-independence, after barrages on the Tigris and Euphrates have been built by British energy and cash, Bagdad may rise to a higher scale of learning, splendor and wealth than under the caliphat of Haroun al Raschid.

Of the entire outcome from the war, therefore, notes a correspondent, the Arab renaissance is assuredly not the least momentous. Historically, it will mark the advent of a new era; ethnologically it becomes a charming study of futurists of literature.

Collecting Military Stamps.

Collectors in the United States are now gathering postmarks of letters sent from the American camps in France, which are stamped "U. S. Army Postal Service." They figure that if anything definite results from the peace talk, the expeditionary force's postmark will be valuable because of its comparative rarity, as they believe that most of the letters coming to the United States from the soldiers abroad are sent to close friends and relatives who, for sentimental reasons will save the missives, envelopes and all.

Why That Lame Back?

Morning lameness, sharp twinges when bending, or an all-day backache; each is cause enough to suspect kidney trouble. Get after the cause. Help the kidneys. We Americans go it too hard. We overdo, overeat and neglect our sleep and exercise and so we are fast becoming a nation of kidney sufferers. 72% more deaths than in 1890 is the 1910 census story. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands recommend them.

An Ohio Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

J. H. Truebe, 342 Harvard St., Youngstown, O., says: "Three physicians said I was in such bad shape with kidney complaint I couldn't live six months. For nine months I was confined to the house, most of the time in bed. My limbs were terribly swollen and my back pained acutely. The kidney secretions were scanty and I had awful dizzy spells. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me and the cure has been permanent for years."

It's the Same Everywhere

Delphos, Ohio.—"I had doctored a good deal for ten years. I often took different kinds of medicine for kidney or bladder trouble which the doctor thought I might have, but I never got any better. Sometimes I would have to arise 3 or 4 times at night. Never any pain, just uneasiness. I had a soreness in my back and an awful weak back and I wanted to see if Anuric would benefit me so I sent 10 cents to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for a trial package. I felt better from the first, so I went to the druggist and got a small package of the tablets and took all of them and was not troubled any more. After that I can say Anuric is just as advertised."—MRS. C. L. CRAMER.—Adv.

SPIDERS BRING GOOD LUCK

Quaint Portuguese Superstitions Still Linger—Believe Whistling at Night Communication With Evil Spirit.

The Portugese never kill a spider that comes into the house, for it means they are going to receive a letter that will bring good news, according to a correspondent.

When the left palm itches it means you are to receive money, and the Portuguese men spit on the lam and thrust it into their pocket, while the women who have no pockets content themselves by rubbing the palm on wood.

The Portuguese never whistle at night, because that would be communicating with the devil; and those who talk to themselves also communicate with the devil in doing so.

If the wind should blow open the door of the house, no one should ever say, even in a joke, "Come in," as people often do, for the devil is liable to walk in.

If the first child born to a family is a girl and resembles the father, she is sure to have good luck all through life.

If a black cat comes to your house, it means good luck; but if it happens to be a white cat then there will be a death in the family.

One of the customs in the Azores was the "telling of cantos." Story tellers would visit the different houses at night and spend the whole evening telling the most awful ghost and witch stories, some that had been handed down for generations. In Provincetown it was customary at night in the winter for the purpose of "telling cantos."

In making bread the Portuguese women always make a cross with the final pat in kneading and say a prayer, or else the bread will not come out well.

Let the persons who think wheatless and meatless days are a hardship listen to the venerable men and women whose memories take them back to the Civil war, says the Anaconda (Mont.) Standard.

Roasted barley, parched corn, chicory roots, and even dandelion roots, dried and roasted, were used as coffee substitutes. White or granulated sugars were a rarity, and only on the table for company. Brown sugar and old-fashioned black molasses, bread and honey and even bread and ham fat were considered pretty good enough for all but the old people. In those days nearly every family in town kept a cow. Those who didn't, as a rule, went without milk. The papers of that day emphasized the fact that coffee and tea were more nutritious when used without milk.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 16

NEHEMIAH ENFORCES THE LAW OF THE SABBATH.

LESSON TEXT—Nehemiah 13:15-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.—Exod. 20:8.

Nehemiah remained in Jerusalem twelve years, from B. C. 444 to B. C. 432. He was then recalled and was in Persia some years, perhaps five or seven, but returned about B. C. 425, the year Artaxerxes died, for we know that he returned by permission of that king. Therefore, the date of this lesson would be sometime in the summer or early autumn of 426 or 427 B. C., 16 or 18 years following last Sunday's lesson.

In the section, vv. 10-14, we see that the gifts for the house of God and the Levites, who led in worship, had been neglected. Whenever the house of God and its service of worship is neglected, we may expect that the Sabbath day and the worship of God will also soon fall into contempt. Ezra has dropped out of our history without a him as to his end.

I. "Remember" (v. 14) the Neglect of God's House. (vv. 1-14). The neglect of God's house grew up out of the incursion of heathenism into Jewish life. Nehemiah realized that the purity of the race depended upon absolute separation from the mixed multitude. (v. 3). Nehemiah also confronted the difficulty of having a priest, (vv. 4, 5), who had defiled himself and also desecrated the temple, and finally the portion for the support of the priest and the temple worship had been withheld. (v. 10).

II. "Remember" (v. 12) the Sabbath Day. (vv. 15-22). Nehemiah's next and most difficult reform was regarding the fourth commandment. He at once set about to learn the facts; then relates what he saw (v. 15). The record also tells how he testified against them in that they were selling merchandise on the Sabbath day. He contended with the nobles that they had done evil on the Sabbath day. (v. 17). He testified against them that the merchants and sellers of ware had lodged about and within Jerusalem. (vv. 20, 21). The root of the trouble with Judah was that they forgot God's word and followed the devices and desires of their own hearts. The Jewish Sabbath in its outward form on the exact day of the week is not binding upon Gentile Christians (Col. 2:16, 17). It was given to Israel as a people, (Deut. 5:1, 2), as a memorial of their deliverance out of the land of Egypt and the house of bondage. (Deut. 5:6). The Christian, by the death of Christ, is made dead to the letter of the law of Moses, (Deut. 7:4), but the principle of the Sabbath is older than even the law of Moses and is as binding upon the Christian believer as are the many other principles which underlie the Mosaic law. In its exact form, the seventh day, the observance of the Sabbath belongs to the old order and not to the Christian order. Christ, who rose from the dead (Rom. 7:4), rose on the first day of the week, and we, as joined to Christ, are not under obligations to the Mosaic law, but to Christ. Therefore, the Lord's day, the resurrection day, the first day of the week, (Rev. 1:10; John 21:20; 1:19-26; Acts 27), is the day of privilege, not of obligation and is more sacred to us than the Sabbath day of these Jews. The Jews in Nehemiah's time showed their contempt of the Lord's day by making it a day of profit, hence this exhortation which we see set forth in this section. This should be a warning and an exhortation to us in these days of a secularized Sabbath.

III. "Remember" (v. 29) the Holy Priesthood. (vv. 23-31). In this section we see that the priesthood had even defiled themselves with women, and again this Nehemiah entered upon a cleansing process, (vv. 30-31). The use of this word "remember" in verses 14, 22 and 29 gives strong emphasis to the three cardinal sins against which Nehemiah was battling.

IV. Summary: As in Nehemiah's time, so now, Sabbath desecration is the surest road to national ruin, and a large proportion of our present calamity can be traced to growing irreverence for the Lord's day. Jesus swept away the cobwebs of Sabbath irreverence, but did not tear down the house. He kept the principle, but removed the barnacles with which the Pharisees and Jews had encumbered it. Jesus taught that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, (Mark 2:27, 28), and he set himself as an example in this regard, for he is Lord of that day as well as the other days of the week.

HELPED ITALY INTO WAR

D'Annunzio, Poet-Aviator, Alleged to Have Inflamed Minds of People, Declaration Following.

Perhaps more than any one individual, D'Annunzio, the poet-aviator, helped to bring Italy into the war. This is an aspect of his career not by any means generally understood, says the New York Evening Post.

In the spring of 1915 Italy was still uncertain as to her final decision. Giolitti, advocate of peace, while no longer in control of the government, still retained enormous political power. The action of the country was as yet doubtful, when this maker of overwrought, sensuous, poetry and prose, the writer who had been termed the last word in decadent and hothouse literature, landed on his native soil after a five-years' absence, and commenced his crusade. The ostensible reason for his visit was an address he had to make at Quarto, where 55 years before Garibaldi had embarked with his valiant "thousand;" the real object his desire to drive Italy into the war. From Quarto his trip to Rome was a triumphal progress, punctuated with impassional oratory. He arrived in Rome just in time to forestall Giolitti, who had forced the Salandra cabinet to announce its resignation.

One hundred and fifty thousand people welcomed D'Annunzio in the Piazza delle Terme. In the chamber of deputies he was hailed as the country's savior, and the Italian parliament of war. Surely a strange Tyrtaeus, but one not afraid to sacrifice his life on behalf of his country.

BOSCHEE'S GERMAN SYRUP

Why use ordinary cough remedies, when Boschee's German Syrup has been used so successfully for fifty-one years in all parts of the United States for coughs, bronchitis, colds settled in the throat, especially lung troubles. It gives the patient a good night's rest, free from coughing, with easy expectoration in the morning, gives nature a chance to soothe the inflamed parts, throw off the disease, helping the patient to regain his health. Sold in all civilized countries. 30 and 90 cent bottles.—Adv.

Banana Cheap and Nutritious.

During the year 1917 more than six billion bananas were imported into North America. Three of these bananas weigh about a pound and cost generally about five cents. At five cents a pound bananas may claim to be as cheap and nutritious a food as any on the market at present prices.

"Has Psmythe got a new car?"

"Well, he calls it a car, but I'd call it a thunderbolt."

"What kind of a car is it?"

"It's this kind of a car: The man who is driving it says: 'Isn't that a fine view ahead of us?' And you say: 'Yes, wasn't it!'"

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

Not just to have one, nor merely for the purpose of saying she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and individual attention to such accounts.

Red Cross Department

Mrs. Dunkle's duties have become too arduous and so Mrs. Elmer Hart and Mrs. G. M. Barney will attend to the cutting of garments. However Mrs. Dunkle will continue to buy, inspect and prepare the shipments.

Under the direction of Mrs. Chas. Koch, the Ration Heaters for soldiers in service, are being made by the pupils in the Grammar Room of this school. These are made by rolling twelve thicknesses of newspapers, cut in one and a half inch lengths and boiled in parafin four minutes. These will burn 35 minutes and make sufficient heat to boil a tin of soup or pot of coffee.

Hereafter the sewing room will be open on Wednesday afternoon of each week. This change is on account of the Thursday bi-monthly meetings of the Ladies Aid of the Christian Church and also the Thursday monthly meetings of the Lutheran Ladies Aid. There was a splendid turn out of ladies in the work room, last week, but we want still more. Come and sew, knit or snip. We have a supply of waste cuttings that must be snipped to make another shipment of pillows. We also want more sewing machines. Is there not someone who will let us use their machine for a little while?

We have this week received a special bulletin from Washington, D. C., and it makes the following statement:

"Secretary Baker and Secretary Daniels wish the people of the country to know that under no circumstances do they want to discourage our good women from knitting or otherwise voluntarily providing through the Red Cross comforts for our soldiers and sailors.

On the contrary both Secretary Baker and Secretary Daniels wish it clearly understood that they greatly appreciate all the voluntary efforts that are being made through the Red Cross to bring comfort to our fighting men, and thank the women of our country for this patriotic work. They request the newspapers to give the widest publicity to this expression.

Of the Red Cross work the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette says in part: "because he who fires upon a Red Cross flag fires on Christ.

We have just turned the pages of the report of the Red Cross of America and marveled at the enormousness of its task, the marvels of its achievements and trembled in the contemplation of what it yet must do. And as we lay the report aside the word comes to us that the golden stream has not poured in as rapidly as it must pour out, and that this wonderful organization, performing the tenderest work that humanity can do in war, is in actual need.

After all isn't this a sad reflection on the nation?

But instead of regrets that word merely calls for action. We have been too prone to look upon the work of the Red Cross women of our own communities lightly. We have signally failed to realize what part they play—must play. We do not pause to think that because these women work in their own home towns many a boy will be comfortable who might otherwise be cold; many a wounded soldier will live who might otherwise die."

The following is an extract from a letter received from Mrs. L. Joslin, Treas, of the Newville R. C. Class:

"Our donations to date are as follows:

Newville Christian B. S.	$16 35
" U. B. Bible School	14 10
Mr. Curtis Washler	1.00
Mr. Simon Chubb	.25
Pythian Sisters	6.00
Total	$37.70

Will get the money to you as soon as I can. We had twenty-six at our sewing room yesterday."

Now is there anything wrong with Newville? If there is we don't see it. This is a splendid showing and their Sunday Schools and lodge are the first in our territory to make donations.

The Spanish Santa Claus.

In Spain, however, it is not Santa Claus, but one of the three kings, no less a person, indeed, than Balthasar, who is the purveyor of gifts. He is always represented as a negro, even in the pictures of the old masters, and as such he survives in Spanish legend. On the eve of the Epiphany the children leave their shoes and boots out in some convenient spot near the chimney, to find them laden with gifts in the morning. Boots, in fact, preceded the stocking everywhere, the superior advantages of the latter as a receptacle having been a recent discovery. In Belgium to this day the children give their shoes an extra fine polish on Christmas eve, fill them with hay, oats or carrots for Santa Claus' white horse and put them on the table or set them in the fireplace. The room is then carefully closed and the door locked. In the morning a strange thing is found to have occurred. The furniture is all turned topsy turvy, the fodder has been removed from the shoes, and in its place the good little children find all sorts of nice things and the bad ones only rods made of birch. In other localities baskets, dishes and wooden ware are made the receptacles. But the elasticity of the stocking, its adaptability and the fact that, while it preserves the individuality of the owner like a shoe, it may yet be cleaned and made ready for the reception of edible presents—these characteristics have caused it to grow into general favor among the juvenile votaries of Santa Claus.

Derived From Days of Yore.

It is a beautiful arrangement and derived from the days of yore that this festival, which commemorates the announcement of the religion of peace and love, has been made the season for gathering together of family connections and drawing closer again those bands of kindred hearts which the cares and pleasures and sorrows of the world are continually operating to cast loose, of calling back the children of a family who have launched forth in life and wandered widely asunder, once more to assemble about the paternal hearth, that rallying place of the affections, there to grow young and loving again.—Washington Irving.

LOCAL ITEMS IN BRIEF.

Mrs. Mary Todd, of Albion, returned home last week, after visiting her sister, Mrs. Harlow Ulm and husband, a few days.

Mrs. Anna Dilley returned home Saturday after visiting relatives at Auburn, Waterloo and Auburn Junction for the past few weeks.

What the Christmas "Waits" Sing

SANTA CLAUS being about to desert the city streets for his annual reindeer ride over the roofs, the "waits" prepare to sing their centuries old carols.

In several American cities has been revived the beautiful old custom of the "waits" going about from house to house singing the familiar old songs. Light the Christmas candles in your window if you want them to stop before your home!

God rest you merry, gentlemen; let nothing you dismay—

they will surely sing that, perhaps the best known of all old English carols. And this too:

Hark! The herald angels sing,
Glory to the newborn king.

And, of course, "O Little Town of Bethlehem."

Perhaps, too, they will sing what is said to be the earliest known Christmas carol, dating from the Anglo-Norman days of the thirteenth century, which begins:

Lordlings, listen to our lay—
We have come from far away
To seek Christmas.
In this mansion we are told
He his yearly feasts doth hold;
'Tis today!
May joy come from God above
To all those who Christmas love.

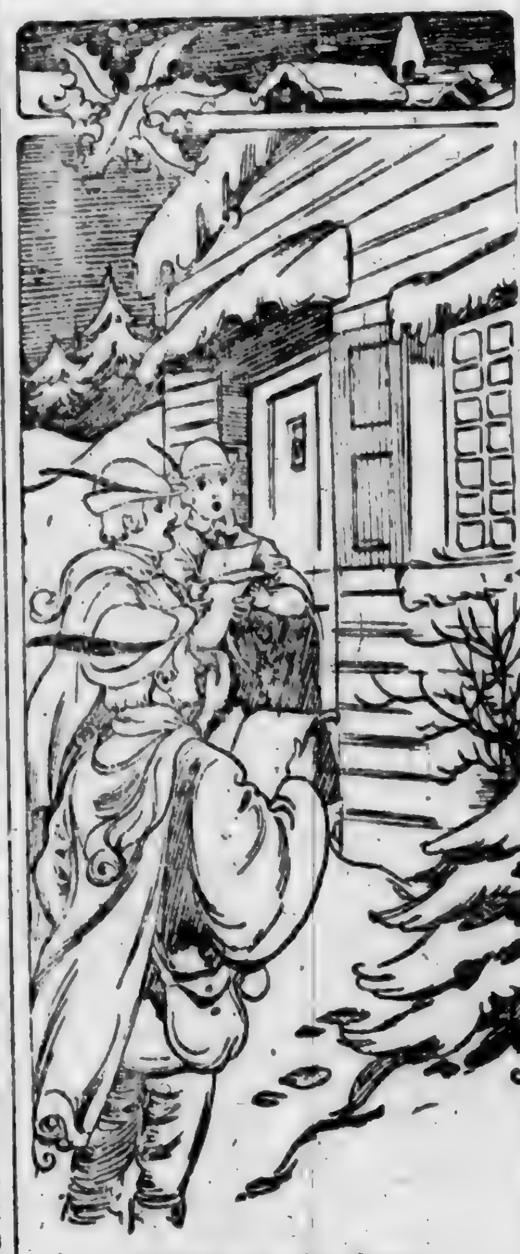
This carol ends with the toast of those days:

"Here, then, I bid you all wassail, cursed be he who will not say drinkhail." "Wassail" meaning your health and "drinkhail" being the usual and courteous acknowledgment.

One of the best known of all the old carols, although not one of the oldest, was written by Nahum Tate in 1703 and is called the "Song of the Angels." It begins:

While shepherds watched their flocks
by night,
All seated on the ground,
The angel of the Lord came down
And glory shone around.

Many are the carols in which Britain's ancient holly figures. "Then drink to the holly berry," pledges one writer of songs, while another in "Under the Holy Bough" summons "All ye who have scorned each other or injured friend or brother, come gather here."



Singing at the Doors.

And then there's that grand old hymn "Adeste Fideles," sung in every church in this land and in others, at this Christmas season:

Oh, come, all ye faithful,
Joyful and triumphant!
Come ye, oh, come ye to Bethlehem!

Christmas would not be Christmas, of course, if the "waits" were to neglect one other of the most beautiful of old carols:

Holy night, peaceful night!
Through the darkness beams a light
Holy night, peaceful night!
Through the darkness beams a light.
Yonder, where they sweet vigils keep
O'er the babe who, in silent sleep,
Rests in heavenly peace,
Rests in heavenly peace.

If there are any of you who have in mind an after Christmas dinner evening of song to the accompaniment of a harpsichord, a spinet, a lute or a piano or even the modern and much advertised disk machine, it might be well to try this on the company:

"Hark the Herald Angels Sing."
Hark! The herald angels sing,
Glory to the newborn king;
Peace on earth and mercy mild,
God and sinners reconciled!
Joyful, all ye nations, rise,
Join the triumph of the skies,
With the angelic host proclaim
Christ is born in Bethlehem.
Hark! The herald angles sing,
Glory to the newborn king!

Appealing to Sun. Schools

The Indiana Sunday School association, with headquarters at Indianapolis, is asking the 5,400 schools under its jurisdiction to give up their usual Christmas luxuries this year and get down to a war basis by eliminating gifts of toys, candy and decorating trees and to give the money which goes for these things to a fund for the 400,000 destitute and starving war orphans of Armenia and Syria, who have been deported to the deserts of northern Arabia.

The money of the Indiana schools will go into the national fund of $1,000,000 which the Sunday schools of the United States are raising and this becomes a part of a general national fund of $30,000,000 for the relief of stricken Armenians and Syrians, whose homes have been destroyed and who have been banished from the Holy Land. Since the two peoples are without a government, the United States government can not make a loan to them, as has been done to Belgium and other countries.

It is believed that after they have heard the heart-stirring stories of how the Armenian and Syrian children are living out doors, sleeping on the ground and using grass and whatever vegetation they can find for food, the Hoosier children will promptly vote to forego their usual Christmas candy, toys and trees that the money may go into the war orphan's relief fund.

Since each Indiana Sunday school spends at least $5 or $10 for Christmas luxuries for the children, it is estimated by the Indiana association that $25,000 or more can be raised for the homeless, hungry children of the Holy Land.

No nations have suffered from the war as have the Armenians and Syrians. At least 1,000,000 of them have been killed by the barbarious Turks or have perished on their way into exile. In the streets of Jerusalem, along the old Jericho road which Christ made immortal by his parable of the Good Samaritan, and beyond the river Jordan into the Syrian desert the ancient races of Christianity are praying to America for help. By giving up their Christmas luxuries to the relief fund, the Sunday schools of Indiana will re-enact the old story of the good samaritan in a most practical way.

Shilling is Defeated.

The case of Chas. Freeburn against J. R. Shilling for the collection of $165 for wheat sold St. Joe Mills, was heard Monday before Judge Link. The court finds sufficient evidence against Mr. Shilling that he was made Trustee, consequently a judgment for the amount was rendered the plaintiff.

A motion for a new trial was asked in the case of Adrian Washler, in which a judgment of $200 was rendered him against J. R. Shilling and Chas. T. Bayman, by jury, was overuled by the Judge, in both cases. J. M. Life, was attorney for the plaintiff.

For a Dry U. S.

Things are taking on a more encouraging outlook for a dry U. S. The National Prohibition Amendment is now up to the state legislatures for action, being necessary for three-fourth to ratify this action to make it a part of the constitution. One year after such approval, "the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes," will be prohibited. The drys have already laid plans for fights in Ohio, Missouri, Massachusetts and Kentucky, now wet states. Much territory in all of them, it was pointed out, has long been forbidden ground for John Barleycorn. About 85 per cent. of Massachusetts is dry under option.

It's Christmas Time Again

There's a fire in the grate and a light in the hall,
For it's Christmas time again,
And the sleighbells ring and the children call,
For it's Christmas time again.
It's time for a Christian land to raise
Her loudest paeans of love and praise
For the Holy Babe of the Bethlehem days,
For it's Christmas time again.

There's a wreath of green at the windowpane,
For it's Christmas time again,
And the church bells echo the glad refrain,
For it's Christmas time again.
Oh, it's time to turn with the golden smile
To the friend we doubted and scorned awhile,
To rid our hearts of their greed and guile!
For it's Christmas time again.

—Lalia Mitchell in Ladies' Home Journal.

Passing Christmas Eve Outdoors

WE all slept under the stars, as usual, on Christmas eve. To shut oneself up in a room from the delicious South African night is simply to miss one of the joys of living. "No one knows the stars who has not slept, as the French happily put it, a la belle etoile. He may know all their names and distances and magnitudes and yet be ignorant of what alone concerns mankind—their serene and gladsome influence on the mind." Stevenson surely would have loved Rhodesia for its nights alone.

One great advantage of the long drought from which we had been suffering—in Rhodesia one must needs be an optimist or die—is that there were practically no mosquitoes and very few flies, so that the stuffiness of a mosquito curtain was unnecessary.

The night was cool and silent, except for the distant howl of a jackal and the occasional hoot of an owl. About five o'clock the life of day began to stir, and the sun gradually turned the mopani and mimosa trees to a golden green and bathed us in the scent of mimosa blossom, the go-away bird called impertinently from a bush close by, and two green parrakeets flew over our heads.

Then one little sleeper after another rubbed his eyes and crept to the foot of the bed to fathom the treasures of the Christmas stocking. As the sun rose higher tongues were loosened, and soon crackers cracked, and trumpets, six of them, were heralding the morn, if not exactly in the manner of the angels.

The noise worried no one. But when we had had enough we dispersed to seek baths, and some of us were even energetic enough to have a round of golf before breakfast.—"The Heart of the Veld," by Madeline Alston.

"BOXING DAY"

AMERICANS go back to the "grind" on the day after Christmas, smoking the cigars that the wife chose because of the "pretty bands," but the Englishman observes boxing day that day. The name would lead one to suppose something in the nature of a fistic encounter, but the supposition is wide of the mark. The "boxing" means simply boxes—the neat little packages presented to the housemaid, the cook, the postman, the policeman, the railway conductor, the dustman. The boxes are now generally quite round, about the size of a fifty cent piece in the great number of cases, and are as much silver as the government thinks best to put into a two shilling piece or a half crown.

CHRISTMAS REUNIONS

HOW many families whose members have been dispersed and scattered far and wide in the restless struggles of life are on this day reunited and meet once again in that happy state of companionship and mutual good will which is a source of such pure and unalloyed delight and one so incompatible with the cares and sorrows of the world that the religious belief of the most civilized nations and the rude traditions of the roughest savages alike number it among the first joys of a future condition of existence provided for the blest and happy! How many old recollections and how many dormant sympathies does Christmas time awaken!—Charles Dickens.

Here's Wishing You A Merry Christmas And A Happy New Year

A CHRISTMAS LULLABY

Half an hour before midnight on Christmas eve in Mexico the "Litany of the God Child" is sung. It is after this that the world-famous lullaby song of all Mexico, the "Roro," is heard. Every Mexican mother knows this "Rock-a-bye" song, which is supposedly for the soothing of the infant Jesus. In time and tune it is not unlike the American song, "Old Gray Goose."

Many other nations besides the Mexicans have their Christmas songs, but not many have distinctive Yuletide lullabies.

BEST CHRISTMAS GIFT

"A fountain pen," answered an enthusiastic young philosopher to the question, "What was your best Christmas gift?"

"I had a hundred-dollar watch given to me once," he added, "but even that isn't as necessary as a fountain pen. If you get the right kind you simply wouldn't be caught dead without it. It never leaks. It never clogs. It'll write a clear, steady line on any old paper. It'd be cheap at $10, and it only cost $2.50."

"What are you doing now?" I asked.

"Selling fountain pens," he said.—New York World.

Reviving Old Time Yule Customs

SPECIAL efforts are being made by women in many communities to spread a revival of the old customs regarding Christmas. Some years ago a Boston woman with a touch of antiquarian spirit managed to stimulate Boston to revive a pretty Yuletide custom by celebrating its coming by singing carols in the streets and by illuminating the houses through the placing of candles in the windows. Other cities emulated Boston in this matter. In Carlisle, Pa., a community Christmas tree was lighted in the public square, and its glowing joy was continued all along the streets by lighted candles placed in the windows, many of which showed in the middle of the rooms so lighted up, displayed to the passersby in the night, private Christmas trees, the glitter and beauty of which thus were shared with all.

An objection to this attempt at gladness—at least so far as concerns the use of candles—has been the risk of fire. But these days of electricity or even of gas seem to minimize the idea of danger, and there are different devices that may be applied to do away with all risk in the carrying out of the friendly suggestion. It is advised therefore that "the gladness and brightness of the home on Christmas eve be not kept behind closed blinds," and to that end it is suggested that the light from every window, whatever its nature, be permitted to shine into the streets until midnight. The idea of light is associated with all that is good in life. The glow of the crackling Yule log betokened the hospitality ready to greet the stranger at that time, but there was more to it than that. Light in days gone by was supposed to keep off evil spirits.—Sallie Wistar in Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The Christmas Bird

ROASTED swan was the Christmas piece de resistance in Chaucer's day, but this dish gave place to the peacock, and the peacock in its turn was conquered by the turkey, when Capt. John Smith, fresh from his Virginian wars, came home to tell the amazed English folk of the bird that he saw parading the new world forests, "exactly like a proud Turk showing off before his harem."

When the peacock was in its glory at Christmastide its plumage was generally restored to the roasted bird and its beak gilded. Sometimes the whole bird was covered with gold leaf and a strip of cotton, saturated with spirit, set alight in its beak—a relic possibly, with the English snapdragon and blazing pudding, of the fire worship of pagan days. A lady of noble birth and great beauty was always chosen to bear the bird into the banqueting hall. In the days of tournaments it was over the peacock that the knights, with uplifted swords, swore their oaths of chivalry and valor. The last record of such fare seems to have been not upon a Christmas, but at the banquet given by the duke of Granada to the duke of Clarence, afterward William IV of England.

It must be admitted that golden peacocks and boars' heads have most alluring sounds to one with a jaded appetite, and the England of old, with its roistering carol singers, seems a most attractive land to have lived in. But the Englishman of today is more than well content to have his carols sung by a little cockney lad, to laugh at the pantomimes in his magnificently comfortable theaters and to feast at home on turkey, mince pie and the blazing pudding.

The Mother's Christmas Gift

It never comes to Christmas but I think about the times
We used to save our pennies and our nickels and our dimes,
And we bunched them all together, even little baby brother
Put in something for the present that we always gave to mother.

We began to talk about it very early in December,
'Twas a very serious matter to us children, I remember,
And we used to whisper nightly our suggestions to each other,
For by nothing cheap and tawdry could we show our love for mother.

Hers must be a gift of beauty, fit to symbolize her ways;
It must represent the sweetness and the love that marked her days.
It must be the best our money, all combined, had power to buy,
And be somethiag that she longed for; nothing else would satisfy.

Then it mattered not the token, once the purchase had been made.
It was smuggled home and hidden and with other treasures laid,
And we placed our present proudly in her lap on Christmas day,
And we smothered her with kisses and we laughed her tears away.

It never comes to Christmas but I think about the times
We used to save our pennies and our nickels and our dimes,
And the only folks I envy are the sisters and the brothers
Who still have the precious privilege of buying for their mothers.

—American Boy.

Here's a Merry Christmas Game

THE old English game of tip requires the use of enough assorted Christmas candies, nuts, raisins and other dainties to make a small pile upon a table, also a pair of sugar tongs. One of the party is chosen, who must retire to another room, while the remaining players decide upon one of the dainties in the pile to be known as "tip." The chosen person is then recalled and with the tongs removes pieces from the pile, trying to avoid the piece named Tip, of which, however, he does not know the location. All pieces removed belong to him unless he moves "tip," when all must be returned to the pile and the turn passes to the next player, who retires to the other room while another "tip" is named. A player may pass his turn when, after drawing several pieces, he wants to avoid the possibility of losing them through drawing "tip." The game continues until the pile disappears.

CONQUEST AND KULTUR

There are races which are incapable of attaining a high humanity, incapable of influencing the world. Such nations are destined to hew wood and draw water for dominant nations. If they cannot fill this inferior office, they must perish.

To a far greater extent than the French and English—races continually talking of freedom—we Germans have made such progress in social equalization that we may consider ourselves far beyond the Romans: and this in spite of the hostile Western powers.

We notice with anger and horror how the British nation in its entirety has shown itself false, cruel, and criminal, just as the French have proved themselves in the treatment of their prisoners barbarians.

I for my part am convinced that the French are doomed to perdition, and I feel myself free of every emotion of regret. Politically France may still exist for centuries, but the nation is so dependent for its life on admixture that after the life of a few generations it will be no more.—Professor Rudolph Huch, in Tagliche Rundschau, of Berlin.

TO REDUCE FRAUD AND ARSON LOSSES

State Fire Marshal Sends Out Warning to Insurance Companies of Indiana.

BLAMES AGENTS IN PART

Declares That Searching Investigations Will Be Made and Agents Examined Under Oath—Information to Be Published.

Indianapolis.—In an attempt to cut down fraud and arson claims for insurance in Indiana, H. H. Friedley, state fire marshal, has addressed a letter to all fire insurance companies operating in the state in which he warns against overinsurance. The letter, in part, follows:

"It is well known by underwriters that overinsurance given indiscriminately is a breeder of arson. The undersigned has known this truth in a limited way for 30 years in operating for one company, but he never fully realized what a scourge it is until it became his official duty to impartially investigate all causes that lead up to crime itself.

"It is now easy for a man of any kind of character to bolster up his standing by more insurance than his values justify. If it was not his original intention to pursue this plan, the tempter soon comes to him and he finds the local agent or solicitor, with his commission interest, the ready tool in making the unsuspecting insurance company the means to the end. Not only does he purpose recouping on his original investment, but has full knowledge that he has more than a gambling chance to make a handsome profit. The fire comes and the claim follows—all under the most flagrant unbusinesslike circumstances.

Points Out Clear Duty.

"A party such as this should not have had insurance above values. It was clearly the duty of the local agent or solicitor to have made a thorough investigation both as to values insured and business character of the party before placing his company and the public in jeopardy.

"Now, this office is using its best efforts to suppress the crime of arson; the public press, courts and prosecutors evince a most laudable interest in this matter and I can safely say to you that we have the backing of the good people of Indiana to an extent that I did not dream could be secured (as an evidence of which we have thus far had nine trials and nine convictions); and it is my purpose to merit their continued confidence by not only prosecuting the guilty perpetrators, but going to the root of the evil. I am going to call things by their right names, a spade will be a spade, an aider and abettor of this crime will be so called. If the insurance companies, local agents and solicitors fail to co-operate, it will be my plan to call attention to the situations and the result will be that somebody will get some merited publicity.

Will Be Made of Record.

"I am, therefore, instructing the arson investigators connected with this office to examine under oath the agent or solicitor that places the line and make him tell of his connection therewith. If it is shown that he either intentionally or negligently aided and abetted the crime by placing more insurance than values, or giving insurance to parties not worthy of it, the fact will be made of record in this office for public inspection and the public advised through our Bulletin to the press.

"I already have in this office records of transactions that would make an underwriter that had any regard for his standing hang his head in shame. There will be more of them if companies, local agents and solicitors do not wake up and stop the nefarious practice. By proper care on lines named, the arson losses can be reduced 75 per cent in Indiana, and if they are to continue as at present, the public has the right to know who the incompetents and abettors are."

Tree Man to Visit Counties.

Charles C. Deam, acting state forester, has visited three counties and established co-operation between county commissioners and the state forestry board in the matter of reforestation. He will endeavor to arouse interest in Jackson, Lawrence and Orange counties by having the county commissioners of the counties set out trees on parts of the county farms. The state board will supply seedlings if county officials will see that the young trees are set out and cared for properly. Mr. Deam stated that the state had supplied 10,000 trees to the state farm at Putnamville. Most of the trees are ash and yellow poplar.

Work of Children's Aid Body.

The Children's Aid association, in a report just made public, shows what its eight departments have been doing. Each department has a superintendent and all are under the direction of Frank D. Loomis, general secretary. The association proceeds on the theory, the report shows, that poverty cannot be cured by passing out dollars, food and clothing, but constructive help must be the principle. Thus each child—and its parents, if it has any—is put on a basis to become self-supporting.

Indiana Veteran Fund Plans.

The committee of Governor Goodrich's staff in charge of the governor's Indiana veteran fund is reporting progress daily in preparing its forces for effective work throughout the state and it is expected that the organization will be completed within the next few weeks. It is desired to enlist the services of local organizations, as well as individuals able to give the necessary time and attention to the cause.

Sponsors of the fund realize that on returning home from the war against Germany, Indiana's fighting men should receive any help that they may need in order to be able to take up again their civilian occupations. Those that may be legless, or armless, or eyeless, it is pointed out, have it owing to them from the public to be taught to do some work within their limited capacities.

Only by Co-Operation.

"These conditions can be brought about only by the co-operation of loyal Hoosiers along with those who foresaw the necessity of at once raising the money to defray the expense of such a campaign," said a member of the committee. "It is hoped that every resident of the state will consider himself a part of this organization and offer to help in the preliminary work.

"Compared with the privations and hardships which must be endured by our boys at the front, our home affairs, so far removed from the fierce field of battle, must be as paradise itself. Then let every Indianan give to the full of his comparative plenty toward this worthy cause. The committee asks you to dive down deep in your pockets and give with the assurance that you are helping your own sons—the boys who have successfully fought your battles for you."

For use in buying and equipping ambulances the committee is endeavoring to raise money immediately. This, of course, is preliminary to the establishment of the permanent work called for in the demobilization plan—permanent at least until every man returned to the state's borders is firmly established in his future work.

"Don't wait to be asked, but try to be among those who are glad to volunteer to do the asking themselves," was the way it was expressed by Homer McKee, publicity director of the committee. "Money is what we need and the sooner we have it the faster we can raise more."

All contributions should be forwarded to Maj. Felix M. McWhirter, People's State bank, Indianapolis, who is the treasurer of the Governor's Indiana veteran fund and who will receipt for all subscriptions.

Boone County Farmer Warned.

H. E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, wrote a letter to William Binford, a Boone county farmer, that was intended to make Binford sit up and look around.

Some one sent a letter to the federal food administration at Washington saying that Binford owns a 500-acre farm, which he declines to cultivate and which he has refused to rent except at an exorbitant price. The letter also said that Binford was holding 3,000 bushels of corn that was in danger of ruin. The federal food administrator called Mr. Barnard's attention to the case.

Violation of the Law.

The state administrator told Binford that he must either cultivate the farm and raise crops on it or permit some one else to do so. Land that is capable of producing food crops must not be permited to remain idle merely because of consideration of selfish interests, Mr. Barnard pointed out in his communication, adding that if Binford was holding corn and permitting it to spoil he was violating the food control law and subjecting himself to punishment.

"This is not the first time the Binford case has come to our notice," Mr. Barnard said, in speaking of the matter, "and it is not the only case of the kind in the state. We are going after them."

Mr. Barnard also received a letter from A. H. Perfect & Co., wholesale grocers at Fort Wayne, asking whether farmers are permitted under the law to put away meat sufficient to meet their needs for the entire year, and whether farmers had the right to store wheat in a mill and take out enough flour to last all season.

Ruling on the Subject.

In answer Mr. Barnard said that farmers are not permitted to store a sufficient amount of wheat to provide flour for the entire season, but that they must sell their wheat and buy their flour. He also said that a farmer may not have more than one barrel of flour on hand at any one time, and that families living in cities and towns are limited to one 25-pound sack of flour at any one time.

The administration ruled, however, that a farmer had the right to butcher his own cattle or hogs and put away enough meat to supply his own family for the season.

Townsend Appointed Judge.

Howard L. Townsend of Fort Wayne has been appointed by Governor Goodrich to succeed the late Judge Richard Erwin on the supreme court bench. Mr. Townsend is a Republican and has been well-known as a lawyer in Fort Wayne for years. Mr. Erwin was a Democrat. Governor Goodrich is expected to appoint either Deacon Roach of Delphi, Republican chairman of the Ninth district, or John G. Bryson of Brazil to be secretary of state to succeed Edward Jackson, commissioned a captain in the United States army.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Terre Haute.—S. H. McClary, fuel administrator, has sent to Evans Woollen, state fuel administrator, a schedule of prices on basket coal for confirmation. McClary intends prosecuting every basket dealer who evades his figures, and A. E. Mogle, city sealer, has promised co-operation in running down unscrupulous dealers who give their customers short weight.

Greenburg.—Twenty-six-section men of the Big Four, who have been out on a strike for the last two weeks, have returned to work. The wage demand of the men has not been met, but their foremen have promised them an increase. They asked an increase from $2 to $3 a day, and time and a half for overtime and holidays, including Sundays.

Bluffton.—Grocers here have formed an organization to co-operate with the Indiana Retail Grocers' association in carrying out the Hoover food conservation plans. Officers of the organization are: Jesse Markley, president; James Foncannon, vice president; Dal Wandel, secretary, and John H. Painter, treasurer. A. Bogue of Rushville, assisted in starting the association.

Muncie. — The Citizens' Remedial Loan association has opened for business. One hundred and fifteen business men are stockholders, and the following are officers: Vincent W. Jones, president; Everett Moffitt, vice president; Charles E. Ellis, treasurer; J. Earl Fouts, secretary. The institution is designed to meet the needs of those who ordinarily would not be accommodated with loans by a bank.

Peru.—Max Kraus has been appointed receiver for the Crum Wiley Manufacturing company of this city. The company's plant has been idle for several weeks.

Peru.—On account of the coal shortage, all the Protestant churches have united in holding union prayer meeting.

Peru.—The Home Savings and Loan association of Peru has bought a four-story business block for its own use, paying J. E. Groth $23,000 for the building.

Boonville.—The state fire marshal has condemned the Willis Baker building in this city as a place for holding a large union tabernacle meeting, which has been in progress for several weeks.

Boonville.—Charles Harmon, a bookseller and stationer, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. His schedule shows his assets at $4,500 and liabilities at $4,300. Part of his creditors are secured. Philip Lutz, Jr., an attorney of this city, has been appointed receiver.

Cannelton.—Henry M. Clement, fuel commissioner, has issued the following schedule of prices for coal in Perry county, effective until April 1, 1918: Cannelton and Tell City, lump, 15 cents a bushel; mine run, 13 cents; nut and slack, 8 cents. Troy, lump, 14 cents; mine run, 12 cents; nut and slack, 8 cents. These figures, which include delivery, are for coal from Perry county mines, an additional cent a bushel being authorized on coal shipped in by rail. Jacob Zoercher of Tell City has been appointed assistant commissioner.

Brazil.—Practically all the grocers of Brazil have formed an agreement to co-operate with the commercial economy board of the national council of defense for curtailment of unnecessary expenses and deliveries and to release more men for war service. Only two deliveries will be made to one house each day, and a delivery charge of five cents has been added. A credit charge of one cent for every dollar will be made. To save light and fuel, the stores will close every evening at six o'clock except on Saturdays and on miners' pay nights.

New Albany.—Roy McPheeters, a farmer, was injured when an emery wheel burst while he was grinding an ax. A piece struck him in the face, driving four teeth into the upper part of his mouth.

Monticello.—Mrs. George Scripture, age fifty, of Wolcott, was burned fatally when some gasoline exploded and her clothing caught fire.

Evansville.—John H. Learneard, age eight, while climbing on an automobile truck belonging to the Model Milling company, fell under the wheels and was killed instantly.

Frankfort.—After 29 years of continuous service, L. C. McClurg of this city, has resigned as mail clerk on the Clover Leaf railroad, running between Toledo and St. Louis.

Crown Point.—Ray Seeley, surveyor of Lake county, who was indicted on the charge of using inferior material in the construction of roads, will be tried in Porter county by Judge B. Tuthill of Michigan City, a change of venue having been granted him.

Lafayette.—Brown Price, a, farmer, of Lebanon, and C. C. Cook, age thirty-three, a contractor of Darlington, were found unconscious in a hotel here by Miss Maude Nichols, the housekeeper.

Newcastle.—The Pennsylvania Railroad company has paid to Mrs. Hortense Woods the sum of $2,750 on account of the death of her husband, Thomas Woods. Woods was killed and Mrs. Woods was injured when a Pennsylvania train struck their automobile at Stout's crossing, east of Newcastle, on May 10.

Rushville.—Thomas Bottroff, former owner of the Enterprise mill at Milroy, who recently went through bankruptcy proceedings, is being tried in the Rush circuit court here on a charge of unlawfully removing and converting to his own use deposited grain.

GREATER EFFICIENCY. REDUCED COST

Grow Grain in Western Canada, Make Profits, and Show Greater Patriotism.

The nation-wide cry of "More Efficiency" has now reached even the most remote agricultural sections and there is a general interest amongst the farmers to increase their products and to reduce their expenses. The need of foodstuffs is greater than the world has ever before known, and every effort is being used to meet the world's food requirements, becoming more apparent every day. While it is true that this desire is attested by a general patriotism, there is an underlying factor in this extension work to secure some of the benefits that are being offered by a ready market at maximum prices. Wide-spread attention has been given to the opportunity in this respect in Western Canada, where fortunes are being made in a few crops out of grain at present prices.

It has been found that the open, level prairie can be cultivated for wheat and other small grains at a minimum price, and during the past few years the yields have been more than satisfactory. Wheat crops of forty bushel to the acre have been common in Western Canada in the last three or four years, and with a present available price of over $2.00 per bushel this means a return on investment and labor that cannot be duplicated elsewhere. This is made possible by the low priced lands that can be secured for grain growing. The range in price runs from $15 to $25 per acre, according to location and other local conditions. In this period of "more agricultural efficiency" it is apparent at a glance that the farmer on low priced but high grade lands, growing his grain at a minimum cost, is reaping a golden harvest with the highest percentage of profit.

The cultivator of high priced farm lands has a big handicap to overcome in computing his profits on a $200 an acre farm as compared with the agriculturist reaping as great, if not greater return from $25 an acre land.

It therefore becomes a question for the farmer himself to answer, whether he is doing himself and his country the best service, by devoting all his energies to working high priced land that yields no better return than land that can be secured at one-eighth the price. It is a case of getting either minimum or maximum quantity. Many have already decided on the alternative, and with their spare money invested in and now working Western Canada lands, they are allowed to speak for themselves. Apparently they are satisfied, for we learn of cases where on a $4,000 investment, in one year they have had their money back, with a profit of from 50% to 100%. Such is one of the steps in progressiveness now being demonstrated in the effort to create greater efficiency. The Canadian Government is using every effort to bring these conditions to the attention of the agricultural world, in order to secure the necessary increased grain production so greatly needed. The farmer in Western Canada is exempt from all personal taxes. His buildings, stock and implements are not assessed; and every encouragement is given to farmers to improve and increase their farm output. Reduced railway rates are being offered to new settlers to look over the country and to size up an unprecedented opportunity in farming.—Advertisement.

One Romance Ended.

Mother—Has Mr. Jinks proposed to you, Bella?

Bella—No, ma; but I think he was on the point of doing so last night. He asked me if you were going to live with me when I got married and I said "Yes."

Mother (excitedly)—And then what did he say?

Bella—He said "Good-by!"

Beams Gets Judgment

Attorney J. E. Pomeroy was in Fort Wayne Thursday where he represented Jack Beams of Spencerville, in a case against the Mier Hide & Fur Co. to recover for hides sold the company by Lee Chapman and two others of Spencerville who had stolen them from Mr. Beams. Mr. Beams asked for a judgement of $194.40 against the company, the case being heard before a jury in the Allen circuit court.

The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff, Mr. Beams securing a judgment for the full amount asked for.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and, makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

Revise Bread Prices.

Dr. H. A. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, Tuesday telegraphed county food administrators the following prices for bread in the state:

One-pound loaf, unwrapped, 7 cents wholesale; 8 cents retail. Wrapped, 8½ cents retail; two loaves for 17 cents.

Stanley Nelson, of Auburn, spent Thursday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Nelson.

St. JOE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The St. Joe schools are sure doing their part for the Red Cross work in the line of selling Red Cross Xmas seals, each room taking up the work with earnestness. The High School was divided into two teams and entered into a contest, with the provision that the loosing team entertain the winners in some manner.

The Basket Ball Team are practicing for their next game, which will be pulled off here, next Friday evening, with Waterloo High School.

Obituary

George Washington Wade was the oldest son of Thomas and Mary Wade, and was born Dec. 7th., 1852, at Sherlow, Paulding Co., Ohio, was united in marriage May 7th., 1873 to Sarah Jane Koch; to this union was born ten children, the first born, a son, dying in infancy, and the youngest son, Harry O., dying at the age of 2½ years. Besides the wife the following children survive, Gertrude Naoma, Myrtle Leona, Bertha May, Roy L., Lloyd O., Clifford M., Stearl E. and Jessie Mabel. He also leaves to mourn his departure 4 brother, 1 sister, 20 grandchildren and a host of friends.

He with his wife united with the Springfield M. P. Church, south of their home, about the year 1889, and lived all their married life, with the exception of about two years; on their farm south-east of Spencerville.

He enjoyed reasonably good health during his life until about 2½ years ago when he suffered a light stroke of apoplexy, which, with a complication of other diseases caused his death, which occurred at St. Joe, Dec. 9th, 1917, at the age of 65 years, and 2 days.

Funeral services were held from the home, Wednesday at 1 o'clock, conducted by Rev. Bryan. Elza Kinsey, funeral director. Burial in White City Cemetery, Spencerville, Ind.

CARD OF THANKS.

We take this opportunity to express our heartfelt gratitude to the many neighbors and friends, who so kindly assisted us in the sickness and death of our loved husband and father; also Rev. W. G. Bryan for his comforting words and the singers for the music. We would also thank all who brought flowers, and those who assisted with auto service.

THE FAMILY.

Among those who attended the funeral from out of town were, William Wade, Benjamin Wade, Clifford Wade, Ross Wade and son, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Cole, all of Michigan, Charles Benjamin and family of Grabill, Mr. and Mrs. Man Scott, Mr and Mrs. Del Coburn and children, Mr. and Mrs. Will Saylor, of Hicksville, Lloyd Wade, wife and children, Mr. and Mrs. James McKinley, Mr. and Mrs. John Benninghoff, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Volgert, of Spencerville, Mr. and Mrs. Cal Saylor of near the same place and Lloyd Coburn and wife of Garrett.

CAROL GOES TO THE ASSISTANCE OF LARK WHEN DEEP EMBARRASSMENT THREATENS AND A NEAR-PAINFUL INCIDENT BECOMES A COMEDY

Synopsis.—The story opens in the house of Rev. Mr. Starr, where Prudence, his eldest daughter and feminine head of the house, consisting of her father, herself, her sisters, Fairy, the twins—Carol and Lark—and Connie, the youngest, are awaiting the arrival of their aunt Grace. Liveliness of the smaller members of the family results disastrously for their appearance. Carol and Lark investigate Christian Science, Prudence postpones her wedding when Carol catches measles. Then Carol tries to convert the town roughnecks.

CHAPTER V.

—5—

Substitution.

The twins came in at dinner-time wrapped in unwonted silence. Lark's face was darkened by an anxious shadow, while Carol wore an expression of heroic determination.

"What's up?" Connie asked, when the rest of the family dismissed the matter with amused glances.

Lark sighed and looked at Carol, seeming to seek courage from the Spartan countenance.

Carol squared her shoulders.

"Well, go on," Connie urged. "Don't be silly. You know you're crazy to tell us about it, you only want to be coaxed."

Lark sighed again, and gazed appealingly at her stout-hearted twin. Carol never could resist the appeal of those pleading eyes.

"Larkie promised to speak a piece at the Sunday-school concert two weeks from tomorrow," she vouchsafed, as unconcernedly as possible.

"Mercy!" ejaculated Connie, with an astonishment that was not altogether complimentary.

"Careful, Larkie," cautioned Fairy. "You'll disgrace the parsonage if you don't watch out."

"Nonsense," declared their father, "Lark can speak as well as anybody if she just keeps a good grip on herself and doesn't get stage fright."

Aunt Grace smiled gently.

Connie frowned. "It's a risky business," she said. "Lark can't speak any more than a rabbit, and—"

"I know it," was the humble admission.

"Don't be a goose, Con," interrupted Carol. "Of course Lark can speak a piece. She must learn it, learn it, learn it, so she can rattle it off backwards with her eyes shut. That's the whole secret. Of course she can speak."

"How did it happen?" inquired Fairy.

"I don't know," Lark said sorrowfully. "Nothing was ever farther from my thoughts, I assure you. The first thing I knew, Mrs. Curtiss was thanking me for my promise, and Carol was marching me off like grim death."

Carol smiled, relieved now that the family commentary was over. "It was very natural. Mrs. Curtiss begged her to do it, and Lark refused. That always happens, every time the Sunday school gives an entertainment. But Mrs. Curtiss went on to say how badly the Sunday school needs the money, and how big a drawing card it would be for both of us twins to be on the program, one right after the other, and how well it would look for the parsonage, and it never occurred to me to warn Lark, for I never dreamed of her doing it."

"I thought it wouldn't hurt me to try it once," Lark volunteered in her own defense.

Aunt Grace nodded, with a smile of interested approval.

"I'm proud of you, Lark, quite proud of you," her father said warmly. "It's a big thing for you to make such a plunge—just fine."

"I'm proud of you now, too," Connie said darkly. "The question is, will we be proud of you after the concert?"

Lark sighed dolorously.

"Oh, pooh!" encouraged Carol. "Anybody can speak a silly little old piece like that. And it will look so nice to have our names right together on the program. It'll bring out all the high school folks, sure."

"Yes, they'll come to hear Lark, all right," Fairy smiled. "But she'll make it go, of course. And it will give Carol a chance to show her cleverness by telling her how to do it."

So as soon as supper was over, Carol said decidedly, "Now, Connie, you'll have to help me with the dishes the next two weeks, for Lark's got to practice on that piece. Lark, you must read it over, very thoughtfully first to get the meaning. Then just read it and read it and read it, a dozen times, a hundred times, over and over and over. And pretty soon you'll know it."

"I'll bet I don't," was the discouraging retort, as Lark, with pronounced distaste, took the slip of paper and sat down in the corner to read the "blooming thing," as she muttered crossly to herself.

Connie and Carol did up the dishes in dreadful silence, and then Carol returned to the charge. "How many times did you read it?"

"Fourteen and a half," was the patient answer. "It's a silly thing, Carol. There's no sense to it. 'The wind went drifting o'er the lea.'"

"Oh, that's not so bad," Carol said helpfully. "I've had pieces with worse lines than that. 'The imprint of a dainty foot,' for instance. When you say, 'The wind went drifting o'er the lea,' you must kind of let your voice glide along, very rhythmically, very—"

"Windily," suggested Connie, who remained to witness the exhibition.

"You keep still, Constance Starr, or you can get out of here! It's no laughing matter I can tell you, and you have to keep out or I won't help and then—"

"I'll keep still. But it ought to be windily, you know, since it's the wind. I meant it for a joke," she informed them. The twins had a very disheartening way of failing to recognize Connie's jokes—it took the life out of them.

"Now read it aloud, Lark, so I can see if you get the proper expression," Carol continued, when Connie was utterly subdued.

Lark obediently but unhappily read the quaint poem aloud and Carol said it was very good. "You must read it aloud often, very often. That'll give you a better idea of the accent. Now put it away, and don't look at it again tonight. If you keep it up too long you'll get so dead sick of it you can't speak it at all."

By the evening of the Sunday-school concert—they were concerting for the sake of a hundred-dollar subscription to church repairs—Lark had mastered her recitation so perfectly that the minds of the parsonage were nearly at peace. She still felt a deep resentment toward the situation, but this was partially counter-balanced by the satisfaction of seeing her name in print, directly beneath Carol's on the program.

Recitation .... Miss Carol Starr.
Recitation .... Miss Lark Starr.

It looked very well indeed, and the whole family took a proper interest in it. No one gave Carol's recitation a second thought. She always recited, and did it easily and well. It was quite a commonplace occurrence for her.

On the night of the concert she superintended Lark's dressing with maternal care. "You look all right," she said, "just fine. Now don't get scared, Lark. It's so silly. Remember that you know all those people by heart, you can talk a blue streak to any of them. There's no use—"

"But I can't talk a blue streak to the whole houseful at once," Lark protested. "It makes me have such a—hollow feeling—to see so many white faces gazing up, and it's hot, and—"

"Stop that," came the stern command. "You don't want to get cold feet before you start. If you do accidentally forget once or twice, don't worry. I know the piece as well as you do, and I can prompt you from behind without anyone noticing it. But you won't forget." She kissed her. "You'll do fine, Larkie, just as fine as you look, and it couldn't be better than that."

Just then Connie ran in. "Fairy wants to know if you are getting stage fright, Lark? My, you do look nice! Now, for goodness' sake, Lark, remember the parsonage, and don't make a fizzle of it."

"Who says fizzle?" demanded their father from the doorway. "Never say die, my girl. Why, Lark, I never saw you look so sweet. You have your hair fixed a new way, haven't you?"

"Carol did it," was the shy reply. "It does look nice, doesn't it? I'm not scared, father, not a bit—yet! But there's a hollow feeling— Have the boys come?"

"No, but they'll be here in a minute. Jim's late. I do get sore at Jim—I'd forty times rather go with him than Hartley—but he always puts off asking us until the last minute and then I have a date and you get him. I believe he does it on purpose. Come on down."

And Grace looked at the pale sweet face with gratified delight, and kissed her warmly. Her father walked around her, nodding approval.

"Aunt Grace," he said solemnly, "it's a wretched business, having a parsonage full of daughters. Just as soon as they reach the age of beauty, grace and charm, they turn their backs on their fathers and smile on fairer lads."

"You've got me, father," said Connie consolingly.

"And me—when Babbie's in Chicago," added Fairy.

"Yes, that's some help. Connie, be an old maid. Do! I implore you."

"Oh, Connie's got a beau already," said Carol. "It's the fat Allen boy. They don't have dates yet, but they've got an awful case on. He's going to make their living by traveling with a show. You'll have to put up with auntie—she's beyond the beauing stage!"

"Suits me," he said contentedly. "I am getting more than my deserts. Come on, Grace, we'll start."

"So will we, Connie," said Fairy.

But the boys came, both together, and the family group set out together. Carol and Hartley—one of her high-school admirers—led off by running a race down the parsonage walk. And Lark, old, worn and grave, brought up the rear with Jim Forrest. Jim was a favorite attendant of the twins. He had been graduated from high school the year previous, and was finishing off at the agricultural college in Ames. But Ames was not far from home, and he was still frequently on hand to squire the twins when squires were in demand.

For this broad-minded devotion the twins gave him a deep-seated gratitude and affection and he always stood high in their favor.

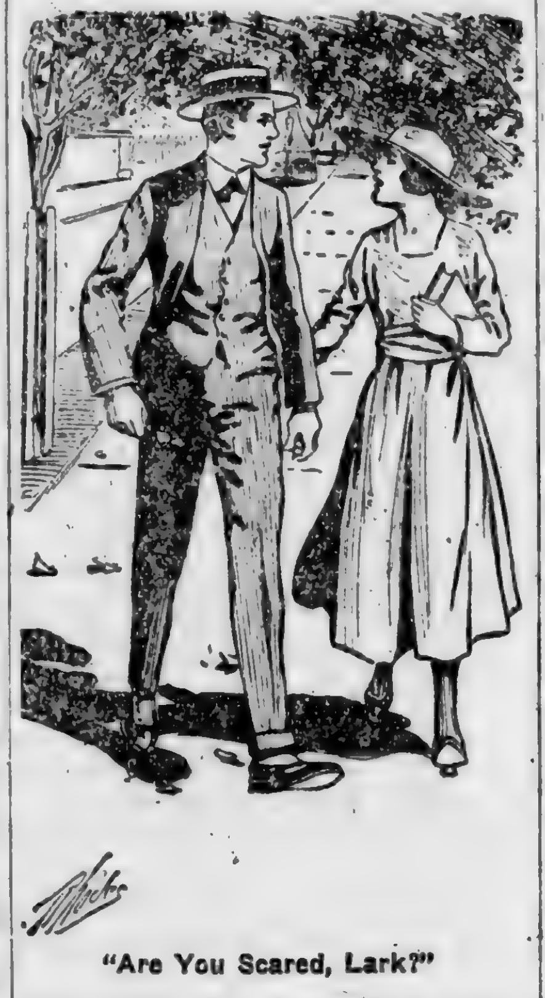
"Are you scared, Lark?" he asked her as they walked slowly down the street toward the church.

"I'm not scared, Jim," she answered solemnly, "but I'm perfectly cavernous, if you know what that means."

"I sure do know," he said fervently, "didn't I have to do a speech at the commencement exercises? There never was a completer cavern than I was that night. But I can't figure out why folks agree to do such things when they don't have to. I had to. It was compulsory."

Lark gazed at him with limpid troubled eyes. "I can't figure out, either. I don't know why I did. It was a mistake, some way."

At the church, which was gratifyingly crowded with Sunday school enthusiasts, the twins forsook their friends and slipped along the side aisle to the "dressing room"—commonly utilized as the storeroom for worn-out song books, Bibles and lesson sheets. There they sat in throbbing, quivering silence with the rest of the "entertainers," until the first strains of the piano solo broke forth, when they walked sedately out and took their seats along the side of the platform—an antediluvian custom which has long been discarded by everything but Sunday schools and graduating classes.



"Are You Scared, Lark?"

The program went along smoothly, with no more stumbles than is customary at such affairs, and nicely punctuated with hand clappings. When the superintendent read, "Recitation—Miss Carol Starr," the applause was enthusiastic, for Carol was a prime favorite in church and school and town. With sweet and charming nonchalance she tripped to the front of the platform and gave a graceful inclination of her proud young head in response to the applause. Then her voice rang out, and the room was hushed. Nobody ever worried when Carol spoke a piece. Things always went all right. And back to her place she walked, her face flushed, her heart swelling high with the gratification of a good deed well done.

"Carol," Lark whispered. "I—I'm scared."

Instantly the triumph left Carol's heart. "You're not," she whispered passionately, gripping her twin's hand closely, "you are not, you're all right."

Lark trembled more violently. Her head swayed a little. Bright flashes of light were blinding her eyes, and her ears were ringing. "I—can't," she muttered thickly. "I'm sick."

Carol leaned close to her and began a violent train of conversation, for the purpose of distracting her attention. Lark grew more pale.

"Recitation—Miss Lark Starr."

Again the applause rang out.

Lark did not move. "I can't," she whispered again. "I can't."

"Lark, Lark," begged Carol desperately, "You must go, you must. 'The wind went drifting o'er the lea,'—it's easy enough. Go on, Lark. You must."

Lark shook her head. "Mmmmm," she murmured indistinctly.

"Remember the parsonage," begged Carol. "Think of Prudence. Think of papa. Look, there he is, right down there. He's expecting you, Lark. You must!"

Lark tried to rise. She could not. She could not see her father's clear encouraging face for those queer flashes of light.

"You can," whispered Carol. "You can do anything, if you try. Prudence says so."

People were craning their necks, and peering curiously up to the second row where the twins sat side by side. The other performers nudged one another, smiling significantly.

"I can't," Lark whispered. "I'm sick."

"Lark—Lark," called the superintendent.

Carol sighed bitterly. Evidently it was up to her. With a grim face, she rose from her chair and started out on the platform. The superintendent stared at her, his lips parting. The people stared at her too, and smiled, and then laughed. Panic-stricken, her eyes sought her father's face. He nodded quickly, and his eyes approved.

"Good!" His lips formed the word, and Carol did not falter again. The applause was nearly drowned with laughter as Carol advanced for her second recitation.

"The wind went drifting o'er the lea," she began—her voice drifting properly on the words—and so on to the end of the piece.

Most of the audience, knowing Lark's temperament, had concluded that fear prevented her appearance, and understood that Carol had come to her twin's rescue for the reputation of the parsonage. The applause was deafening as she went back. It grew louder as she sat down with a comforting little grin at Lark. Then as the clapping continued, something of her natural impishness entered her heart.

"Lark," she whispered, "go out and make a bow."

"Mercy!" gasped Lark. "I didn't do anything."

"It was supposed to be you—go on, Lark! Hurry! You've got to! Think what a joke it will be."

Lark hesitated, but Carol's dominance was compelling.

"Do as I tell you," came the peremptory order, and Lark arose from her chair, stepped out before the astonished audience and made a slow and graceful bow.

This time the applause ran riot, for people of less experience than those of Mount Mark could tell that the twins were playing game. As it continued, Carol caught Larkin's hand in hers, and together they stepped out once more, laughing and bowing right and left.

Lark was the last one in that night, for she and Jim celebrated her defeat with two ice cream sodas apiece at the corner drug store.

"I disgraced the parsonage," she said meekly, as she stepped into the family circle, waiting to receive her.

"Indeed you didn't," said Fairy. "It was too bad, but Carol passed it off nicely, and then, turning it into a joke that way took all the embarrassment out of it. It was perfectly all right, and we weren't a bit ashamed."

"And you did look awfully sweet when you made your bow," Connie said warmly—for when a member of the family was down, no one ventured a laugh, laugh-loving though they were.

Curious to say, the odd little freak of substitution only endeared the twins to the people of Mount Mark the more.

"By ginger, you can't beat them bloomin' twins," said Harvey Reel, chuckling admiringly. And no one disagreed.

Circumstances induce Fairy to reveal her life's romance. The twins for a short period enjoy themselves hugely.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Puts It Up to the Judge.

One of the city judges, who was up for re-election, made a speech in New York, and after he had touched on patriotism and the various questions of civic virtue and the keeping of a good man on the bench, he said at the close of his speech that he was ready to answer any question propounded. At this point one of the members of the club arose. "Judge," began the questioner, "there's one thing that has always bothered me, and I hope you can settle it for me so that the other members of this club will see that I am right. This is it: Does or does not a straight flush beat four of a kind under any and all circumstances?"

British Columbia Shipbuilding.

The steel steamer War Dog, the first ship of its type to be built in British Columbia, was recently launched at Vancouver. The War Dog, with a length of 315 feet, is also the first steel cargo vessel to be built in that province. The contract was placed by a Japanese steamship company through an English firm. Since the steamer was launched she has been sold to a British firm.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

THE ENEMY ON LAND.

Mr. J. S. Strachey, editor of the Spectator (London), once an advocate of the drink traffic, has since the beginning of the war made prohibition the policy of his paper. In a recent public address he told this story:

"A city, though its armies were victorious, was in dire straits for food. Strict search was made to see that nothing that could be used for food should be wasted, and lo, a great store of barley and sugar was found. And the general thanked God that they were saved. There was enough barley and sugar to enable them to hold out till the re-victualling that was sure to come in a few months. The barley, mixed with corn, would make excellent bread and the sugar would save the children.

"'Alas,' said the civil authorities, 'all this barley and sugar must be turned into beer; we dare not touch it.'

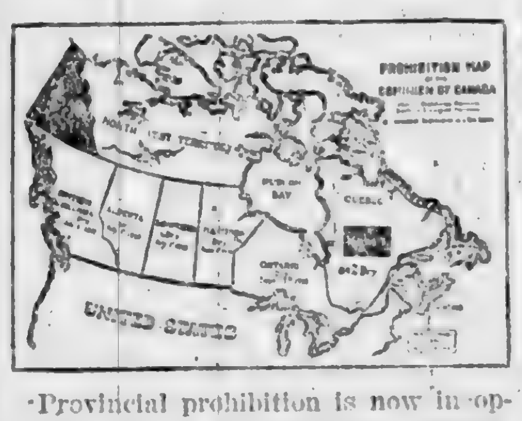
"The general, who was a simple soldier and did not understand politics, was angry. 'This is a town of sane people, not a lunatic asylum, nobody can be allowed to turn into beer what might be made into bread and so save the people.'

"But it was even so. The city fell and the conquerors drank the beer!"

Mr. Strachey hammered his point home with these words:

"The proper thing to do, the straight thing to do, the only honorable thing to do, is to stop the brewers and give the people bread. With famine facing the world, the government must stay the food destroyers on land as well as on sea, if we are to have victory."

CANADA'S WHITE MAP.



Provincial prohibition is now in operation in the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Prince Edward Islands, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick and British Columbia. At the time the above map was made the province of Quebec was 84 per cent dry. Since then Missisquoi county and the city of Quebec have voted dry. A proposal by Yukon territory to petition the Dominion parliament for territorial prohibition was defeated by the narrow margin of three votes. In the remaining part of the Dominion of Canada, generally known as the Northwest territories, the sale of liquor is prohibited, and strong drink may only be imported on special permits, specifying the kind and quantity of liquor which they cover.

TESTIMONY OF ARMY DOCTOR.

The use of alcohol results in much inefficiency. It is well understood by all who control large bodies of men that alcohol and effective work are incompatible. Abundant liquor means a full guardhouse and many court-martial cases. In the matter of target shooting, careful experiments conducted in Sweden showed an average of 40 per cent fewer hits by marksmen after one drink of brandy. Since alcohol markedly interferes with the mental processes, it is plain that decisions in military crises are apt to be faulty. Alcoholism and venereal diseases are closely allied.—Frank R. Keefer, M. D., Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army.

INTERFERENCE WITH PERSONAL LIBERTY.

The Chicago city council committee on health has refused to consider an application for a permit to open a shop dealing exclusively in horse meat. Is not this interfering with personal liberty, a man's right to eat or drink what he wants, and then remember, too, that horse meat will probably be sold anyway in some shops whether the permit is granted or not.—The Illinois Issue.

MISSOURI MASONS.

The Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the state of Missouri, at a meeting held in St. Louis September 19, passed amid cheers, a most drastic resolution in favor of bone-dry prohibition. The resolution provides for the expulsion from the order of any Mason signing a petition for a saloon or a saloonist's bond. The resolution passed by a vote of 1,180 to 360. Counted by lodges, the vote stood 236 to 72.

NO DIFFERENCE.

Distinguishing between alcohol in whisky and alcohol in beer is like distinguishing between smallpox in big splotches and smallpox in little splotches. Same old poison in either form.—American Issue.

KNOCK-OUT DROPS.

Alcohol is not a stimulant to the real man, but a form of "knock-out drops," putting the real civilized man out of business and releasing the primitive, latent savage.—Life Extension Institute.

WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

CANADIAN HONORED BY KING

Canada has grown with her railroads. When you do something big in Canadian railroading you do something big for Canada. The mother country recognizes this and takes delight in showing honor to the men who are developing Canada through her railroads.

So it came naturally that in King George's latest list of birthday honors a "Sir" was prefixed to the name of George Bury.

Sir George Bury, K. C. M. G., is vice president of the Canadian Pacific Railway company and director of all operations, which include over 18,000 miles of rail, 100,000 miles of telegraph, and the company's steamers which ply the waters of British Columbia's lakes, rivers and coast, as well as the Great Lakes.

He is distinctly a Canadian Pacific product. In the 34 years of his business life he has never spent one day outside the company's service except when he went to Russia recently at the request of Lloyd George to look the situation over and return recommendations as to what was most needed to make Russia's transportation system effective.

PLAN TO URGE WOMEN SUFFRAGE

The vanguard of leaders of the National Women's Suffrage association has arrived in Washington for the campaign to be opened immediately in favor of the enactment by congress this session of the federal suffrage amendment.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the association, will take personal charge of the campaign. She and other leaders of the association assert that, with the new leverage of women's votes in New York and the approaching election of 43 members of congress from that state, the National Suffrage association is confident of "putting through real business" early in the coming season.

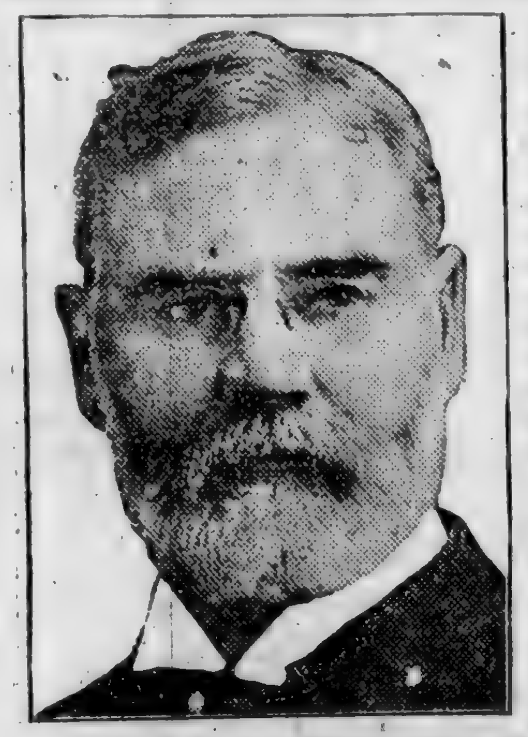
Women from every state are in Washington, representing comprehensive organizations in the congressional districts "back home" and the political force of the women voters in the West and in New York. These women, with delegations of suffragettes, have visited their respective representatives at their homes since congress adjourned in October, and will bring reports of the members' attitudes toward the federal amendment.

Under Mrs. Catt's generalship in Washington, they will be deployed upon congress to urge on any "convinced member" the political necessity of passing the federal amendment at once, in order that the women of the rest of the East and South may vote in the next presidential election along with the women of New York and the West.

BYNG KNOWN AS BRILLIANT SOLDIER

General, the Honorable Sir Julian Hedworth George Byng, K. C. B., K. C. M. G., who has won the honor of being mentioned in the official dispatches as the general in charge of the great drive of the British toward Cambrai, is a member of the "new school" in the British army. Whether or not it is true that General Byng is the original of "Colonel Rendezvous," the apostle of efficiency and national service in "Mr. Britling Sees It Through," an "apostle of efficiency" General Byng has always been. His army record has been one of steady successes, unmarked until now by any sensational acquisition of fame. He has been none the less popular among his men for the strictness of his insistence on discipline. He has moved ahead very quietly, training men and leading them. "The very best type of soldier," a young British officer here said of him, adding: "And outside the army no one has ever heard of him." Great things have been expected from General Byng. The boldness of present operations on the western front reflects the greatest credit on his initiative. Byng succeeded to the command of the Third army this year, when Sir Edmund Allenby left France to conduct the Palestine campaign.

GIVES UP HOUSE LEADERSHIP



Representative James R. Mann of Chicago will not lead the Republicans in their national political fight against the Democrats in this session of congress.

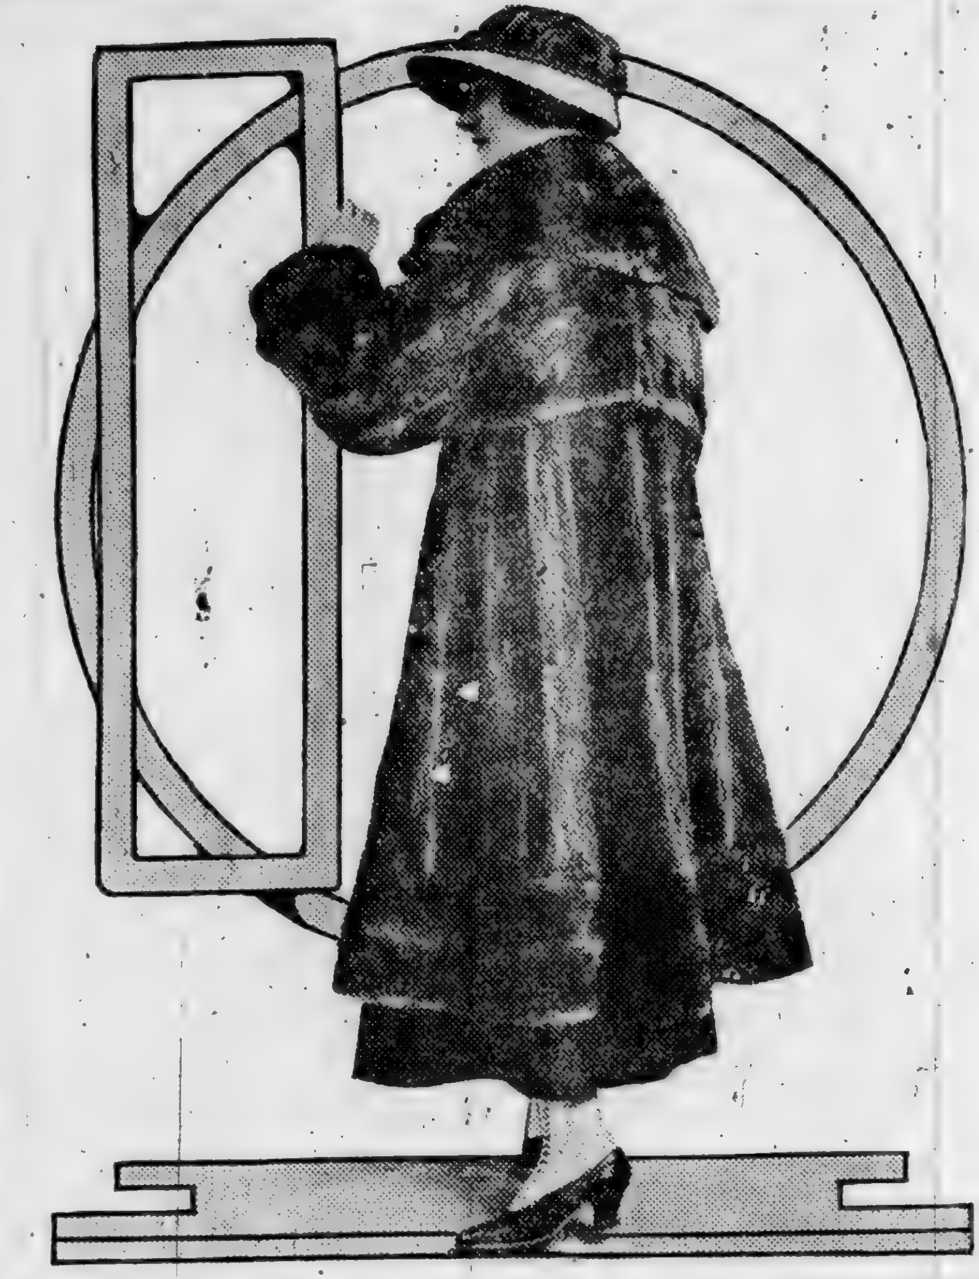
Ill health, resulting from overwork at the last session, takes Mr. Mann out of the fight. In conferences with Speaker Clark, Democratic congressional leader, it has been decided that Mr. Mann will throw off all executive burdens for the time being. Mr. Mann has been given indefinite leave of absence. He is going South for his health.

Representative Madden of Chicago will take up Mr. Mann's Chicago and Illinois work.

Republican leadership of the minority in the house will swing naturally to Representative Frederick H. Gillett of Massachusetts, ranking member of the house appropriations committee. This is house custom in the absence of an adverse dictum from the party caucus. Representative Wood of Iowa, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, said there was not contemplated a new Republican caucus to name a successor to Mr. Mann. The Republicans expect him to return.

Representative Gillett will be recognized as Republican floor leader by Speaker Clark in the absence of direct instructions to the contrary and possibly in the face of such instructions.

Promising Novelty in Fur Coats



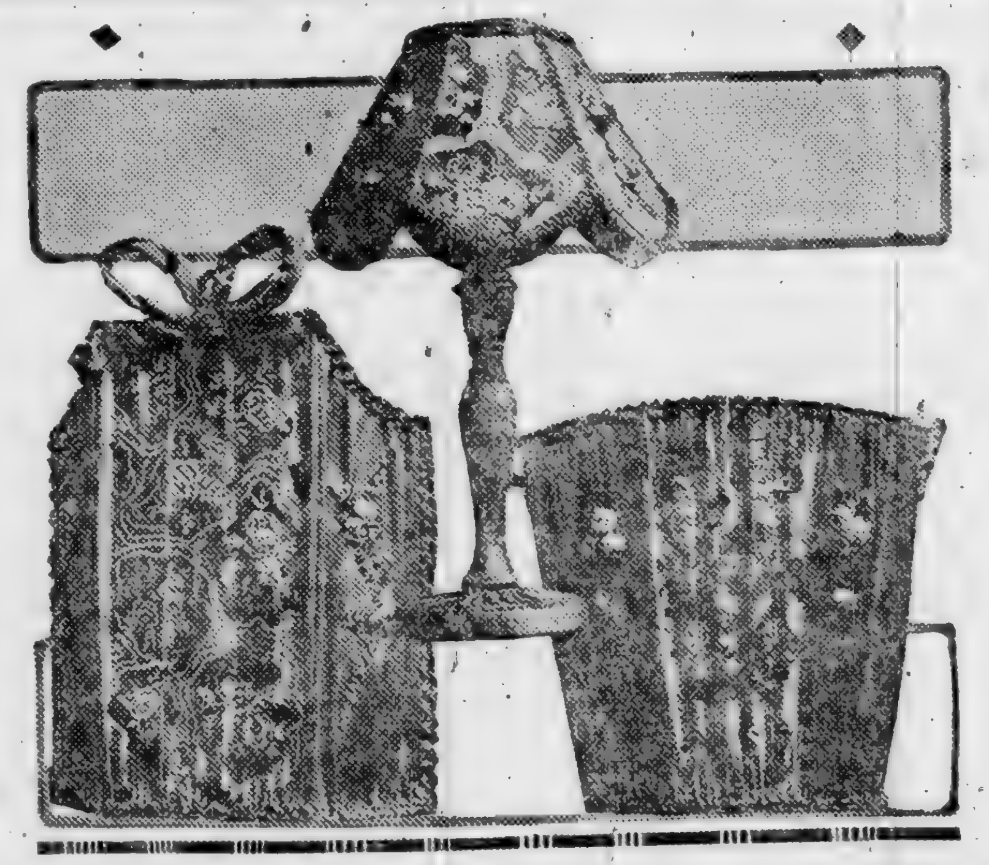
Things are seldom what they seem in furs, for furriers have gone far in the art of changing the appearance of pelts. They more than improve them, they change them utterly. Many a commonplace, familiar little animal departs this life bequeathing a skin that is soon lifted quite out of his class and it is the transformation worked by dying, clipping, piecing and plucking that make furs expensive. The ordinary muskrat, as an instance, becomes Hudson seal and deserves all the admiration it gets, along with the price it brings.

It is likely that undyed pelts are more durable than any others, although with good care most furs will give long service. This season some very handsome motor coats of natural muskrat have brought the merits of this fur to the front, and coats made of selected skins are worn on the street. They are handsome and a promising novelty likely to grow in popularity.

An example of a rich coat made of natural muskrat and very excellently designed, is shown in the illustration. The best skins were used for it and it is an ample affair with a full skirt portion in which the skins are set lengthwise. It is bordered with two rows of pelts by the simple expedient of placing them horizontally. The body of the coat, made in one with the sleeves, shows the pelts placed as in the border of the skirt, a single row of pelts make the cuffs, and a large, soft collar adds to its luxury. It looks as if its wearer might explore the Arctic ocean in comfort and it is certain zero weather will have no terrors for her.

Shorter coats, with less fullness, are more practical for street wear because they are less heavy to carry. They reach to the knees, fasten up very high at the neck and have already made a success that insures their appearance in greater numbers next winter. These coats are so attractive that there is no need for them to masquerade under a borrowed name—they vindicate the muskrat as the bearer of a handsome pelt.

Matched Set for the Boudoir



A lovely and dainty matched set, including a lamp shade, a telephone screen and a waste basket are an allurement that has been added to this year's holiday gifts. They are made of plain and brocaded satin ribbon and designed for milady's own rooms. But there is no reason why they should not be adopted to living rooms or to men's rooms as well. It is a matter of selecting the right colors and designs in the ribbon, and the details of finishing could be changed a little.

The set shown in the picture is made of plain rose-colored satin ribbon and a brocaded ribbon with rose-colored ground and figures in gray, rose, gold and soft green. In the lamp shade there are six panels alternating the plain and the figured ribbon. On each plain panel there is a little cluster of ribbon roses, repeating the colors in the brocade. Their foliage is suggested by the soft green ribbon, that joins a group of three to a single rose on each panel, and trails on beyond them.

The lamp standard, of wood or glass is covered with the plain ribbon, cut to fit it. Plaitings and ruchings of narrow rose colored satin ribbon, cover the seams in the shade and in the covering of the standard.

In the basket the panels of plain and brocaded ribbon are gathered, the screen made of one brocaded panel and two plain panels. In the basket there are six panels alternating as in the lamp shade. All the pieces are lined with plain rose-colored satin put on smoothly. The little screen is tall enough to conceal a telephone and finished with a shirred and wired bow of plain satin at the top of the central panel. Its three panels are sewed together along the edges.

For a living room gold braid might replace the plaitings and shirrings of ribbon and colors in the ribbons selected to harmonize with furnishings. But rose color has advantages and looks well with almost every other color. For a man's room strong contrasts and bold conventional figures might be chosen, using gold braid for finishing.

Julia Bottomley

The Accepted Decolletage.

Tradition is one thing and present fact is another, and it is evident that the majority of American women will accept the decolletage that is cut about three inches below the bend of the neck and runs away to the end of the shoulder, writes an authority.

It is seen on many of the French gowns and the best American originations. It is adopted for jumpers, for informal dinner frocks, and it prevails on the one-piece frock of serge, worsted or satin that has come dangerously near usurping the place of the tailored coat suit in the fall.

Pretty Velvet Frocks.

Very supple velvet makes some pretty and practical evening frocks. They are straight, clinging little models, quite untrimmed except perhaps for a flower or ornament somewhere about the bodice. In bright soft colors these are, coral, rose, celestial blue, apple green and orchid. These are for the girls, and for those not quite so young are models in velvets of darker tones, deep purple, sapphire and black. The low-cut neck and the sleevelessness of these give them a festive air despite their dark hues and simple lines. Or tulle takes a part in waist and sleeves, giving a lightening touch.

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

Not just to have one, nor merely for the purpose of saying she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and individual attention to such accounts.

Red Cross Department

In the great nation-wide, Christmas membership drive for the Red Cross, we have been notified that our Branch is expected to do its part. The Newville membership committee is working and now our attention turns to Concord Township. Last summer when we canvassed for membership, the work was done under difficulties for the war relief part of the Red Cross was practically new to us and not well understood. But now all is changed. You seldom pick up a newspaper or magazine that does not tell of the wonderful work of the Red Cross, the army of salvation. To sum it all up the people of this nation are divided into three classes: the patriots, the selfishly indifferent and the pro-Germans. Under which head will we put Concord Twp? We have always done our part, can we not continue? The time is fast coming when there will be but two classes, the patriots and the pro-Germans, and every man and woman in this community will be classed according to their words and deeds. Sympathy is a fine thing but without works it generally is of more benefit to the giver than to the receiver and in this case it does not assist our government to keep our boys warm and plenty of hospital supplies on hand. You people who so far have principally been occupied with finding fault with this organization locally and nationally, is it not time for you to pull your heads out of the sand. Wake up! Or are you going to wait until the paws of the war beast reach into your family and claw you out of your lethargy?

says "there has been too much of a disposition to cover up the copper heads—the names of the traitors have been whispered and not published. This is a serious mistake. It is to be hoped that if anyone this week indulges in this kind of talk that their names will be published to the world to the end that their neighbors may know them and despise them for what they are." Rev. Folsom elicited rousing cheers in the Ft. Wayne Palace Theatre when he made this statement: "Any man who without excuse turns down the Red Cross and refuses to join, take his name and brand him as pro-German."

We are expecting good results from our territory for we have an excellent committee. When seeking a chairman for this drive, Grover Curie was asked to take up the work. He readily consented to do all he could and would either act as chairman or secure "a better man." He immediately put it up to Henry Hathaway, Chief of the St. Joe Fire Department, and asked that they try to get the Fire Department to constitute the membership committee. Mr. Hathaway took up the plan with his usual enthusiasm for a good thing, called a meeting of the boys and the result is that we have a committee of twenty four good men with Mr. Hathaway, chairman and Mr. Curie, assistant. Our boys have never yet failed to "put across" their undertakings and we know if they do not succeed in putting Concord township where we belong it will be through no error of theirs.

WOMEN VOLUNTEER TO HELP WIN WAR

Betty Blythe Tells Why It Is Necessary for All To Register.

EVERY WOMAN CAN HELP

Council of Defense Seeks to Create Channel For Use of War Agencies.

And now let's see why the government is mobilizing the women of America—why it is asking every woman in Indiana to register with the Woman's Section of the State Council of Defense.

Perhaps you have been asking yourself that very question—of what practical use the mere signing of your name to a registration card?

Here's your answer:

It is of such vast importance that the government desires to obtain, as speedily as possible, a correct estimate of the woman power, and to do so it is putting to work the machinery of the Council of National Defense, and of your own Indiana State Council of Defense appointed by Governor James P. Goodrich, with headquarters in the State House at Indianapolis If you do not register, whether you can serve or not, you are not doing your bit to help win the war—you are a slacker.

A channel was needed to carry to the women the requests of the government.

The plan aimed to do one particular thing—to take in every woman Women's organizations in each state were asked to get together and form a permanent executive committee. The central state group should be duplicated in every county and every town, to pass on the word to the unorganized groups, so that all the clubs, associations, churches, social agencies, teachers and individuals should be drawn in.

In this State the Woman's Committee was made a section of the State Council of Defense, by Chairman Will H. Hays, and was put under the chairmanship of Mrs. Anne Studebaker, of South Bend.

Quarters are maintained in the State Defense Council rooms, and a secretarial force is constantly busy. By way of this executive committee the groups all over the state are to be kept in immediate touch with the national committee, and will receive from it direct such requests as the government may make.

The channel has been created, but it must be dug deeper and broader—and the absence of your name will render it less effective. It is the clearing house through which all woman's work will pass. And it is the agency by which the government is co-ordinating the nation's woman power.

The Woman's Committee will not be satisfied until it has in this state an organization so perfect that any piece of information or request from Washington can be spread over Indiana in twenty-four hours' time and reach practically every Indiana woman.

Already there is a woman's committee in every county of the state and these committees will appoint a local chairman for each community.

The important point is that every woman shall register. Preparations now are going forward for a statewide registration drive to begin January 1, that will enlist the help of every social and woman's club. If necessary a house to house canvass will be made.

If you are a housekeeper—the mother of little children—do not think that you are exempt from registration—for the government wants to know who you are, what you are and whether, in case of need, you can give any service to help win the war. The Woman's Committee is the agency appointed to gather this information for the government. It is expected that 100,000 signed registration cards will be in the hands of the State Council of Defense by the middle of January. Up to date 40,000 Indiana women have registered.

Woman's part is no longer purely of the hands and heart—she is being fitted into every part of the war program. Indeed, it is recognized that without her aid, it is impossible to win the war. She has been called into council by Washington, has been "recognized," and her brains requisitioned for war work. In fine, women have been given a definite part, although a wholly voluntary part, in all the great economic and social readjustments—in all the big war questions.

If you have not signed your registion card, hurry and sign—so you will be readily accessible when the information from Washington begins to flow through the channel, and you are asked to help in the way you want to help.

No business man in a town should allow a newspaper in his town to go without his name and business being mentioned somewhere in its columns. This applies to all kinds of business—general stores, drygoods, groceries, furniture dealers, manufacturing establishments, automobile, mechanics, professional men and in fact all classes of business men. This does not mean that you should have a whole or even quarter page ad in every issue of the paper, but your name and business should be mentioned if you do not use more than a two line space. A stranger picking up a newspaper should be able to tell just what businesses are represented by looking at the businesses mentioned in the paper. This is the best town advertiser. The man who does not advertise his business does an injustice to himself and his city. The man who insists on sharing the business that comes to town but refuses to advertise his business is not a valuable addition to any town —Ex.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

Dora's Resolution

"Wish you happy New Year!" called Dora from her pillow, to her sister Agnes, who stood before the dressing-table brushing her curls. "What makes you get up so early? It isn't breakfast time yet. It is so warm and cozy here in bed, I'm going to lie here and think up lots of good resolutions for the new year. Then I can write them out after breakfast. Why don't you make some resolutions, Agnes?"

"I don't know. I hadn't thought about it," replied the little girl. "I have been hurrying to get dressed, for I was afraid mamma would want me; Freddie has been crying all the morning."

"Fred is such a cry-baby!" returned Dora. "Well, perhaps I'd better get up, seeing you are all ready to go down. Tell mamma I am coming right away," and she crawled out of bed as Agnes closed the door.

Dora reached the dining room just as her mamma and sister set the breakfast on the table. Freddie had been restored to good humor, and everybody seemed very happy as they gathered around the first morning meal of the new year. Bright faces, merry voices and good wishes made it a charming family group.

Dora and Agnes cleared the table when the meal was finished, for there was no servant in the house, and the two sisters helped much with the work, that mamma might get more time to sew.

"Shall I wash or wipe the dishes?" asked Dora.

"Oh, I'll wash them, and you can wipe them," said Agnes, "for you'd rather, and I don't care."

"Well, then I'm going upstairs to write out my New Year's resolutions; I'll be down by the time you have the dishes ready to rinse," and Dora ran up to her room.

Dora spoiled several sheets of paper before she had her resolutions written to suit her. Finally she read them over with a certain degree of pride:

New Year's Resolutions of Dora Buckingham Prescott.

"I will get up early in the morning and help mamma with the breakfast.

"I will go to bed at night without making a fuss about it.

"I will dress Freddie every morning.

"I will take my turn at washing the dishes, even though I like better to wipe them.

"I will dust the parlor every day, and not leave it for Agnes.

"I will not forget to make the beds when it comes my week.

"I will take care of my bird every morning.

"I will amuse Freddie, and not be cross to him once this year.

"I will sew on my buttons without being told.

"I will not let Agnes do my share of the work, just because she is obliging.

"I will always be pleasant to everybody—"

"Dora, mamma wants you—"

"Oh, don't come bothering me now, Aggie!"

"Mamma wants you to see to Freddie."

"Oh, dear! Why can't you?"

"I've got to go down to the post office."

"Oh! Why, have you finished the dishes?"

"All done," said Agnes, with a little smile that had not a mite of superiority in it.

"But I meant to come and wipe them," said Dora, with a guilty flush.

"Never mind," said Agnes, "I knew you were busy."

"Dora followed her sister downstairs, thinking she would put the rooms in order and feed the canary before Agnes returned. But to her surprise, the parlor and sitting room were dusted, Dick was eating fresh seed with great relish, and it was ten o'clock. How long a time she had spent over those resolutions!

After making Baby Fred happy with a big block house, Dora slipped upstairs and brought down her paper of "New Year's Resolutions" and quietly laid it on the parlor fire.

"I'll keep my eyes and ears open, as Agnes does, and try to be as pleasant as she is. That will be better than writing out a thousand resolutions!"

New Year Song.

"New Year, true year,
What now are you bringing?
May day skies and butterflies,
And merry birds a-singing?
Frolic, play all the day,
Not an hour of school?"
But the merry echo,
The laughing New Year echo,
Only answered, "School!"

"New Year, true year,
What now are you bringing?
Summer roses springing gay,
Summer vines a-swinging?
Jest and sport, the merriest sort,
Never a thought of work?"
But the merry echo,
The laughing New Year echo,
Only answered, "Work!"

"New Year, true year,
What now are you bringing?
Autumn fruits all fire-ripe,
Autumn horns a-ringing?
Keen delight o' moonlight nights,
When dull folks are abed?
But the merry echo,
The laughing New Year echo,
Only answered, "Bed!"
—Laura E. Richards.

Old Year Adieu.

Old Father Time, with visage grim,
Marks finis on another year;
His harvest he has gathered in;
The swath was wide both far and near.

The strife of battle rages round
The ranks of fighters in the van,
But clashing arms and shouts resound
Of victor and of conquered man.

The aged sire, with trembling hands
And hoary lock of silvery white,
Perceives the passing of the sands,
The sunset's glow, the clouds of night.

Mayhap there is a vacant chair
At home, but recently resigned—
A loved one gone above to wear
The crown of bliss by angels twined.

The path to glory may not lead
With roses strewn about the feet,
But hope and strive by word and deed
Some soul to cheer. The New Year greet!
—T. J. Dehey in Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Satisfied.

A group of pleasant faced children were playing in the sunny corner of a dooryard on a bright New Year's day.

Susie was saying: "Yes, I know my doll is littler than yours, but I do love her so! She's my own dolly—my own dolly!" And she sung it over and over, cuddling her dolly close.

"Yes," said Lela, "my doll is bigger, but yours is ever so much prettier, for mine is only a cloth dolly, and yours is wax with real hair. I love to look at it, but I'm afraid to touch it for fear it would break. I suppose a dolly that won't break is the best. Mamma says I'm hard on dolls."

Roy was looking at Johnny, playing with his jumping-jack. Johnny said:

"I did want a rocking-horse, and I was most sure Santa Claus would bring me one. I thought he'd know I wanted one so much! But the jumping-jack is a dandy, though!" and he pulled the string hard.

The little figure turned two or three somersaults, and ended by standing on its head. Johnny giggled, and little Roy, looking a trifle sober, said: "Your johnny-jumper is awful nice, and I like to see you make him go it. I didn't get anything this year, but I hope times will be a lot better to our house next Christmas, and then I'll get enough to make it all up. But," said he, smiling now, "I've got all my marbles that I had last year, and my top is most as good as new, and I tell you she's a hummer! Come, Johnny, let's have a game of marbles."

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 30

REVIEW—GOD'S REDEEMING LOVE.

LESSON TEXT—Read Psalms 1:23; 1:28.
GOLDEN TEXT—With Jehovah there is loving kindness, and with him is plenteous redemption.—Ps. 130:7.

The lessons of the past year are the only ones in the six years course which are divided between the Old and the New Testament; therefore, at the close of this year we will review only the last two quarters, emphasizing the fourth which has just been completed.

Like Moses on Mount Nebo, let us glance over the whole period of the monarchy and note the progress and development of the Jewish people. The Jewish race is the marvel of all times, a nation without a country, scattered and peeled, chastised and driven from sea to sea, even slain in large numbers; yet possessed of a vitality which has caused them to endure through the centuries. Their contribution to the civilization of the world has been immeasurable. There is no walk or rank in life, in politics, literature, art, science, business, religion, or any other realm where they have not made their impress and rendered their contribution. Any movement which seeks to promote their welfare and to strengthen the bonds of sympathy which preserve race feelings, deserves the aid of all patriotic, liberty loving, God fearing people, for the Jews are still God's chosen heritage.

The united kingdom with its three kings, Saul, David and Solomon, lasted from about 1100 B. C. to 983 (Meecher), a period of 120 years. Then begins the divided kingdom—Judah and Israel side by side, a double experiment in the progress of the kingdom of God. This period extended from about 982 B. C. to approximately 723, or 721 B. C. Judah had a territory of about 3,400 square miles; Israel 9,400. Judah's capital was Jerusalem; in which was the temple; Israel's capital was Samaria, while it had two centers of false worship. Judah was more sheltered than Israel from close contact with heathenism, especially politically and religiously. Judah had one dynasty of rulers; eleven kings and one queen, all of them from the house of David. Israel had nineteen kings, belonging to nine different families or dynasties. Judah had several very good kings, and there were marked revivals of religion of prosperity and of deterioration of varying degrees, though resisted from time to time and helped along moral and religious lines through the work of Elijah and Elisha the prophets. The final period of events of this past quarter have reference to Judah alone from the days of Hezekiah, B. C. 722, to the time of the destruction of the city and the temple being destroyed 586 B. C., and lastly we have the period of the exile from the first captivity in 605 B. C. to the restoration and the new temple being erected 516 B. C. This was a period of great discipline and sifting as like unto wheat or of a purifying fire.

The return from exile and the new spiritual nation, dates from about 536 to the close of Bible history; say 400 years before the coming of Christ. A map should be used, and the scholars ought to be familiar with the contemporaneous secular history. There are several particular lessons we ought to learn from this history.

First: Every failure, every moral wrong, every fall into idolatry, every diminution of power for good is the result of a separation from God,—a departure from the ways of God and righteousness. It also shows us that God's constant solicitude that the Jews should be kept separate from heathenism and idolatry, had in it the best interests of his own people and could only lead to those blessings which he had prepared for his particular people.

Secondly: The overthrow of Israel is directly attributed to its complete abandonment to idolatry. Beginning with false worship and a dependence upon men, there was the introduction of idolatry and a development of evil which led to a rapid decline, the introduction of revolutions and the final extinguishment of the kingdom.

As to Judah, it finally was brought into captivity because that was the only way that God could purge the nation from the sin of idolatry. They must be taught that there is but one God, that the word of God must be obeyed, and that their safety lay in the faith which they placed in his promises. The leaders of this period were Zerubbabel, Ezra and Nehemiah, heroic men, men of great consecration and power; also, Esther, the heroine. The prophets of this period are Daniel, Isaiah, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi. Notice how each and every one aided the cause of righteousness.

There are two great heroes of the return, Ezra and Nehemiah. Take up the actions of each and show how he proved his heroism. A good method of receiving the past quarter will be to summarize the teachings which center about these two great men. The period of the return is the one that we should emphasize, showing how a return to God and an obedience of his law is the paramount need of the present day in which we live, these days of darkness and evil upon which the world has fallen.

CIRCUMSTANCES INDUCE FAIRY TO REVEAL HER LIFE'S ROMANCE—THE TWINS FOR A SHORT PERIOD ENJOY THEMSELVES HUGELY

Synopsis.—The story opens in the house of Rev. Mr. Starr, where Prudence, his eldest daughter and feminine head of the house, consisting of her father, herself, her sisters, Fairy, the twins—Carol and Lark—and Connie, the youngest, are awaiting the arrival of their aunt Grace. Liveliness of the smaller members of the family results disastrously for their appearance. Carol and Lark investigate Christian Science. Prudence postpones her wedding when Carol catches measles. Then Carol tries to convert the town roughnecks. The twins score a triumph at the church entertainment.

CHAPTER VI.

Making Matches.

Aunt Grace sat in a low rocker with a bit of embroidery in her hands. And Fairy sat at the table, a formidable array of books before her. Aunt Grace was gazing idly at her sewing basket, a soft smile on her lips. And Fairy was staring thoughtfully into the twilight, a soft glow in her eyes. Aunt Grace was thinking of the jolly parsonage family, and how pleasant it was to live with them. And Fairy was thinking—ah, Fairy was twenty, and twenty-year-olds always stare into the twilight, with dreamy far-seeing eyes.

In upon this peaceful scene burst the twins, flushed, tempestuous, in spite of their seventeen years. Their hurry to speak had rendered them incapable of speech, so they stood in the doorway panting breathlessly for a moment, while Fairy and her aunt, withdrawn thus rudely from dreamland, looked at them interrogatively.

"Yes, I think so, too," began Fairy, and the twins endeavored to crush her with their lofty scorn. But it is not easy to express lofty scorn when one is red in the face, perspirey and short of breath. So the twins decided of necessity to overlook the offense just this once.

Finally, recovering their vocal powers simultaneously, they cried in unison:

"Duckie!"

"Duck! In the yard! Do you mean a live one? Where did it come from?" ejaculated their aunt.

"They mean Professor Duck of their freshman year," explained Fairy complacently. "It's nothing. The twins always make a fuss over him. They feel grateful to him for showing them through freshman science—that's all."

"That's all," gasped Carol. "Why, Fairy Starr, do you know he's employed by the—Society of—a—a scientific research organization—or something—in New York city, and gets four thousand dollars a year and has prospects—all kinds of prospects!"

"Yes, I know it. You haven't seen him, auntie. He's tall, and has wrinkles around his eyes, and a dictatorial nose, and steel gray eyes. He calls the twins song-birds, and they're so flattered they adore him. He sends them candy for Christmas. You know that Duckie they rave so much about. It's the very man. Is he here?"

"He's in town," said Lark.

"Going to stay a week," added Carol.

"And he said he wanted to have lots of good times with us, and so—we—why, of course it was very sudden, and we didn't have time to ask—"

"But parsonage doors are always open—"

"And I don't know how he ever wormed it out of us, but—one of us—"

"I can't remember which one!"

"Invited him to come for dinner tonight, and he's coming."

"Goodness," said Aunt Grace. "We are going to have potato soup and toast."

"It'll keep," said Carol. "Of course we're sorry to inconvenience you at this late hour, but Larkie and I will tell Connie what to do, so you won't have much bother. Let's see, now, we must think up a pretty fair meal. Four thousand a year—and prospects!"

Aunt Grace turned questioning eyes toward the older sister.

"All right," said Fairy, smiling. "It's evidently settled. Think up your menu, twins, and put Connie to work."

"Is he nice?" Aunt Grace queried.

"Yes, I think he is. He used to go with our college bunch some. I know him pretty well. He brought me home from things a time or two."

Carol leaned forward and looked at her handsome sister with sudden intentness. "He asked about you," she said, keen eyes on Fairy's. "He asked particularly about you."

"Did he? Thanks. Yes, he's not bad. He's pretty good in a crowd."

By the force of her magnetic gaze, Carol drew Lark out of the room, and the door closed behind them. A few minutes later they returned. There was about them an air of subdued excitement, suggestive of intrigue, that Fairy found disturbing.

"You needn't plan any nonsense, twins," she cautioned. "He's no beau of mine."

"Of course not," they assured her pleasantly. "We're too old for mischief. Seventeen, and sensible for our years! Say, Fairy, you'll be nice to Duckie, won't you? Can't you try to make it pleasant for him this week? He'll only be here a few days. Will you do that much for us?"

"Why, I would, twins, of course, to oblige you, but you know Gene's in town this week, and I've got to—"

"Oh, you leave Babbie—Gene, I mean—to us," said Carol airily. Fairy being a junior in college, and Eugene Babler a student of pharmacy in Chicago, she felt obliged to restore him to his Christian name, shortened to Gene. But the twins refused to accede to this propriety, except when they particularly wished to placate Fairy.

"You leave Gene to us," repeated Carol. "We'll amuse him. Is he coming tonight?"

"Yes, at seven-thirty."

"Let's call him up and invite him for dinner, too," suggested Lark. "And you'll do us a favor and be nice to Duckie, won't you? We'll keep Babb—er, Gene—out of the road. You phone to Gene, Carol, and—"

"I'll do my own phoning, thanks," said Fairy, rising quickly. "Yes, we'll have them both. And just as a favor to you, twins, I will help amuse your professor. You'll be good, and help, won't you?"

The twins glowed at Fairy with a warmth that seemed almost triumphant. She stopped and looked at them doubtfully. When she returned after telephoning, they were gone, and she said to her aunt:

"I'm not superstitious, but when the twins act like that, there's usually a cloud in the parsonage skylight. Prudence says so."

But the twins comported themselves most decorously. All during the week they worked like kitchen slaveys, doing chores, running errands. And they treated Fairy with a gentle consideration which almost drew tears to her eyes, though she still remembered Prudence's cloud in the parsonage skylight!

They certainly interfered with her own plans. They engineered her off on to their beloved professor at every conceivable turn. And Gene, who nearly haunted the house, had a savage gleam in his eyes quite out of accord with his usual chatty good humor. Fairy knew she was being adroitly managed, but she had promised to help the twins with "Duckie." At first she tried artistically and unobtrusively to free herself from the complication in which her sisters had involved her. But the twins were both persistent and clever, and Fairy found herself no match for them when it came right down to business. She had no idea of their purpose—she only knew that she and Gene were always on opposite sides of the room, the young man grinning savagely at the twins' merry prattle, and she and the professor trying to keep quiet enough to hear every word from the other corner. And if they walked, Gene was dragged off by the firm slender fingers of the friendly twins, and Fairy and the professor walked drearily along in the rear, talking inanely about the weather—and wondering what the twins were talking about.

And the week passed. Gene finally fell off in his attendance, and the twins took a much-needed rest. On Friday afternoon they flattered themselves that all was well. Gene was not coming, Fairy was in the hammock waiting for the professor. So the twins hugged each other gleefully and went to the haymow to discuss the strain and struggle of the week. And then—

"Why, the big mutt!" cried Carol, in her annoyance ignoring the Methodist grammatical boundaries, "here comes that bubbling Babler this minute. And he said he was going to New London for the day. Now we'll have to chase down there and shoo him off before Duckie comes." The twins, growling and grumbling, gathered themselves up and started. But they started too reluctantly, too leisurely. They were not in time.

Fairy sat up in the hammock with a cry of surprise, but not vexation, when Gene's angry countenance appeared before her.

"Look here, Fairy," he began, "what's the joke? Are your fingers itching to get hold of that four thousand a year the twins are eternally bragging about? Are you trying to thrown yourself into the old school teacher's pocketbook, or what?"

"Don't be silly, Gene," she said, "come and sit down and—"

"Sit down, your grandmother!" he snapped, still angrily. "Old Double D. D. will be bobbing up in a minute, and the twins'll drag me off to hear about a sick rooster, or something. He is coming, isn't he?"

"I—guess he is," she said confusedly.

"Let's cut and run, will you?" he suggested hopefully. "We can be out of sight before— Come on, Fairy, be good to me. I haven't had a glimpse or a touch of you the whole week. What do you reckon I came down here for? Come on. Let's beat it." He looked around with a worried air. "Hurry, or the twins'll get us."

Fairy hesitated, and was lost. Gene grabbed her hand, and the next instant, laughing, they were crawling under the fence at the south corner of the parsonage lawn just as the twins appeared at the barn door. They stopped. They gasped. They stared at each other in dismay.

"It was a put-up job," declared Carol.

"Now what'll we do? But Babbie's got more sense than I thought he had, I must confess. Do you suppose he was kidnaping her?"

Carol snorted derisively. "Kidnaping nothing! She was ahead when I saw 'em. What'll we tell the professor?"

Two humbled gentle twins greeted the professor some fifteen minutes later.

"We're so sorry," Carol explained faintly. "Babbie came and he and Fairy—I guess they had an errand somewhere. We think they'll be back very soon. Fairy will be so sorry."

The professor smiled and looked quite bright.

"Are they gone?"

"Yes, but we're sure they'll be back—that is, we're almost sure." Carol, remembering the mode of their departure, felt far less assurance on that point than she could have wished.

"Well, that's too bad," he said cheerfully. "But my loss is Babler's gain. I suppose we ought in Christian decency to give him the afternoon. Let's go out to the creek for a stroll ourselves, shall we? That'll leave him a clear field when they return. You think they'll be back soon, do you?"

"Come On, Let's Beat It!"

He looked down the road hopefully, but whether hopeful they would return, or wouldn't, the twins could not have told. At any rate, he seemed quite impatient until they were ready to start, and then, very gayly, the three wended their way out the pretty country road toward the creek and Blackbird lane. They had a good time; the twins always did insist that no one on earth was quite so entertaining as dear old Duckie, but in her heart Carol registered a solemn vow to have it out with Fairy when she got back. She had no opportunity that night. Fairy and Gene telephoned that they would not be home for dinner, and the professor had gone, and the twins were sleeping soundly, when Fairy crept softly up the stairs.

But Carol did not forget her vow. Early the next morning she stalked grimly into Fairy's room, where Fairy was conscientiously bringing order out of the chaos in her bureau drawers, a thing Fairy always did after a perfectly happy day. Carol knew that, and it was with genuine reproach in her voice that she spoke at last, after standing for some two minutes watching Fairy as she deftly twirled long ribbons about her fingers and then laid them in methodical piles in separate corners of the drawers.

"Fairy," she said sadly, "you don't seem very appreciative, some way. Here Larkie and I have tried so hard to give you a genuine opportunity—we've worked and schemed and kept ourselves in the background, and that's the way you serve us! It's disappointing. It's downright disheartening."

Fairy folded a blue veil and laid it on top of a white one. Then she turned. "Yes. What?" She inquired coolly.

"There are so few real chances for a woman in Mount Mark, and we felt that this was once in a lifetime. And you know how hard we worked. And then, when we relaxed our—our vigilance—just for a moment, you spoiled it all by—"

"Yes—talk English, Carrie. What was it you tried to do for me?"

"Well, if you want plain English you can have it," said Carol. "You know what professor is, a swell position like his, and such prospects, and New York city, and four thousand a year with a raise for next year, and we tried to give you a good fair chance to land him squarely, and—"

"To land him—"

"To get him, then! He hasn't any girl. You could have been engaged to him this moment—Prof. David Arnold Duke—if you had wanted to."

"Oh, is that it?"

"Yes, that's it."

Fairy smiled. "Thank you, dear, it was sweet of you, but you're too late. I am engaged."

Carol's lips parted, closed, parted again. "You—you?"

"Exactly so."

Hope flashed into Carol's eyes. Fairy saw it, and answered swiftly.

"Certainly not. I'm not crazy about your little professor. I am engaged to Eugene Babler." She said it with pride, not unmixed with defiance, knowing as she did that the twins considered Gene too undignified for a parsonage son-in-law. The twins were strong for parsonage dignity!

"You—are?"

"I am."

A long instant Carol stared at her. Then she turned toward the door.

"Where are you going?"

"I'm going to tell papa."

Fairy laughed. "Papa knows it."

Carol came slowly back and stood by the dresser again. After a short silence she moved away once more.

"Where now?"

"To tell Aunt Grace, then."

"Aunt Grace knows it, too."

"Does Prudence know it?"

"Yes."

Carol swallowed this bitter pill in silence.

"How long?" she inquired at last.

"About a year. Look here, Carol, I'll show you something. Really I'm glad you know about it. We're pretty young, and papa thought we ought to keep it dark a while, to make sure. That's why we didn't tell you. Look at this." From her cedar chest—a Christmas gift from Gene—she drew out a small velvet jeweler's box, and displayed before the admiring eyes of Carol a plain gold ring with a modest diamond.

Carol kissed it. Then she kissed Fairy twice.

"I know you'll be awfully happy, Fairy," she said soberly. "And I'm glad of it. But—I can't honestly believe there's any man good enough for our girls. Babbie's nice, and dear, and all that, and he's so crazy about you, and—do you love him?" Her eyes were wide, rather wondering, as she put this question softly.

Fairy put her arm about her sister's shoulders, and her fine steady eyes met Carol's clearly.

"Yes," she said frankly, "I love him—with all my heart."

"Is that what makes you so—so shiny, and smiley, and starry all the time?"

"I guess it is. It is the most wonderful thing in the world, Carol. You can't imagine it—beforehand. It is magical; it is heavenly."

"Yes; I suppose it is. Prudence says so, too. I can't imagine it, I kind of wish I could. Can't I go and tell Connie and Lark? I want to tell somebody!"

"Yes, tell them. We decided not to let you know just yet, but since—yes, tell them, and bring them up to see it."

Carol kissed her again, and went out, gently closing the door behind her. In the hallway she stopped and stared at the wall for an unseeing moment. Then she clenched and shook a stern white fist at the door.

"I don't care," she muttered, "they're not good enough for Prudence and Fairy! They're not! I just believe I despise men, all of 'em, unless it's daddy and Duck!" She smiled a little and then looked grim once more. "Eugene Babler, and a little queen like Fairy! I think that must be heaven's notion of a joke." She sighed again. "Oh, well, it's something to have something to tell! I'm glad I found it out ahead of Lark!"

Lark for a time takes up a "literary career," the dream of her life. She finds newspaper work too arduous and abandons it.

Irishmen at the Front.

The first American officer to be killed in France was Lieutenant Fitzsimmons of Kansas City, who lost his life when German airmen bombed hospitals in the rear of the British line where he was stationed as a medical officer in charge of wounded. The first American noncommissioned officer to lose his life in the overseas expedition was Sergt. Patrick Cassidy of Syracuse, N. Y. The first American private soldier to give up his life for his country in France was Private James Tracy of Philadelphia. The first American soldier to win the French war cross with palms, awarded for conspicuous gallantry, was Private John McClain of Peekskill, N. Y. All these young men, as their names indicate, were Americans of Irish descent which is a fair enough record, says the San Antonio Light, for the descendants of the Emerald Isle. All of them are said to have been native-born Americans, too.

WRITTEN RECORD OF ATROCITIES

Diaries of German Soldiers Tell of Murder and Pillage in Belgian Cities.

CALLED "DISGRACE TO ARMY"

No Discrimination Made Between Innocent and Guilty—Infants Shot in Dead Mothers' Arms—Testimony of Brand Whitlock.

Very many German soldiers who have been taken prisoner had kept diaries, and these have been confiscated by the captors. Many have been published, frequently with facsimile reproductions to guarantee their authenticity. The following extracts, with the testimony of Brand Whitlock, are made public by the committee on public information at Washington:

"Aug. 24. . . . Our men came back and said that at the point where the valley joined the Meuse we could not get any further, as the villagers were shooting at us from every house. We shot the whole lot—16 of them. They were drawn up in three ranks; the same shot did for three at a time. . . . The men had already shown their brutal instincts; . . .

"The sight of the bodies of all the inhabitants who had been shot was indescribable. Every house in the whole village was destroyed. We dragged the villagers one after another out of the most unlikely corners. The men were shot as well as the women and children who were in the convent, since shots had been fired from the convent windows; and we burnt it afterwards.

"The inhabitants might have escaped the penalty by handing over the guilty and paying 15,000 francs.

"The inhabitants fired on our men again. The division took drastic steps to stop this; the villages being burnt and the inhabitants being shot. The pretty little village of Gue d'Ossus, however, was apparently set on fire without cause. A cyclist fell off his machine and his rifle went off. He immediately said he had been shot at. All the inhabitants were burnt in the houses. I hope there will be no more such horrors.

"Disgrace to Our Army."

"At Leppe apparently 200 men were shot. There must have been some innocent men among them. In future we shall have to hold an inquiry as to their guilt instead of shooting them.

"In the evening we marched to Maubert-Fontaine. Just as we were having our meal the alarm was sounded—everyone is very jumpy.

"September 3. Still at Rethel, on guard over prisoners. . . . The houses are charming inside. The middle class in France has magnificent furniture. We found stylish pieces everywhere and beautiful silk, but in what a state . . . Good God! . . . Every bit of furniture broken, mirrors smashed. The Vandals themselves could not have done more damage. This place is a disgrace to our army. The inhabitants who fled could not have expected, of course, that all their goods would have been left intact after so many troops had passed. But the column commanders are responsible for the greater part of the damage, as they could have prevented the looting and destruction. The damage amounts to millions of marks; even the safes have been attacked.

"In a solicitor's house, in which, as luck would have it, all was in excellent taste, including a collection of old lace and Eastern works of art, everything was smashed to bits.

"I could not resist taking a little memento myself here and there. . . . One house was particularly elegant, everything in the best taste. The hall was of light oak; I found a splendid raincoat under the staircase and a camera for Felix." (From the diary of an officer in the One Hundred Seventy-eighth regiment, Twelfth Saxon corps.)

But his horror apparently was not shared by the German commander in chief, as is evident from the following:

"Order.

"To the People of Liege.

"The population of Andenne, after making a display of peaceful intentions toward our troops, attacked them in the most treacherous manner. With my authorization, the general commanding these troops has reduced the town to ashes and has had 110 persons shot.

"I bring this fact to the knowledge of the people of Liege in order that they may know what fate to expect should they adopt a similar attitude.

"GENERAL VON BUELOW."

In his report of September 12, 1917, to the secretary of state, Minister Whitlock has much to tell of the policy of frightfulness. The following passages refer to the subject of massacres:

"Summary executions took place (at Dinant) without the least semblance of judgment. The names and number of the victims are not known, but they must be numerous. I have been unable to obtain precise details in this respect and the number of persons who have fled is unknown. Among the persons who were shot are: Mr. Defoin, mayor of Dinant; Sasserath, first alderman; Nimmer, aged seventy; Consul for the Argentine Republic Victor Poncelet, who was executed in the presence of his wife and seven children; Wasseige and his two sons; Messrs. Gustave and Leon Nicaise, two very old men; Jules Monin and others all shot in the cellar of their brewery; Mr. Camille Pistte and son, aged seventeen; Phillippart Piedfort, his wife and daughter; Miss Marsigny. During the execution of about forty inhabitants of Dinant the Germans placed before the condemned their wives and children. It is thus that Madam Albin who had just given birth to a child, three days previously, was brought on a mattress by German soldiers to witness the execution of her husband; her cries and supplications were so pressing that her husband's life was spared."

Forced to Witness Executions.

"On the 26th of August German soldiers entered various streets (of Louvain) and ordered the inhabitants of the houses to proceed to the Place de la Station, where the bodies of nearly a dozen assassinated persons were lying. Women and children were separated from the men and forced to remain on the Place de la Station during the whole day. They had to witness the execution of many of their fellow citizens, who were for the most part shot at the side of the square, near the house of Mr. Hemaide. The women and children, after having remained on the square for more than 15 hours, were allowed to depart. The Gardes Civiques of Louvain were also taken prisoners and sent to Germany, to the camp of Munster, where they were held for several weeks.

"On Thursday, August 27, order was given to the inhabitants to leave Louvain because the city was to be bombarded. Old men, women, children, the sick, priests, nuns, were driven on the roads like cattle. More than 10,000 of the inhabitants were driven as far as Tirlemont, nearly 12 miles from Louvain.

Infants Shot in Mothers' Arms.

"One of the most sorely tried communities was that of the little village of Tamines, down in what is known as the Borinage, the coal fields near Charleroi. Tamines is a mining village in the Sambre; it is a collection of small cottages sheltering about 5,000 inhabitants, mostly all poor laborers.

"The little graveyard in which the church stands bears its mute testimony to the horror of the event. There are hundreds of new-made graves, each with its small wooden cross and its bit of flowers; the crosses are so closely huddled that there is scarcely room to walk between them. The crosses are alike and all bear the same date, the sinister date of August 22, 1914."

"But whether their hands were cut off or not, whether they were impaled on bayonets or not, children were shot down, by military order, in cold blood. In the awful crime of the Rock of Bayard, there overlooking the Meuse below Dinant, infants in their mothers' arms were shot down without mercy. The deed, never surpassed in cruelty by any band of savages, is described by the bishop of Namur himself:

"'One scene surpasses in horror all others; it is the fusillade of the Rocher Bayard near Dinant. It appears to have been ordered by Colonel Meister. This fusillade made many victims among the nearby parishes, especially those of des Rivages and Neffe. It caused the death of nearly 90 persons, without distinction of age or sex. Among the victims were babies in arms, boys and girls, fathers and mothers of families, even old men.

Dead Children in Pile of Bodies.

"'It was there that 12 children under the age of six perished from the fire of the executioners, six of them as they lay in their mothers' arms:

"'The child Fievet, three weeks old.

"'Maurice Betems, eleven months old.

"'Nelly Pollet, eleven months old.

"'Gilda Genon, eighteen months old.

"'Gilda Marchot, two years old.

"'Clara Struvay, two years and six months.

"'The pile of bodies comprised also many children from six to fourteen years. Eight large families have entirely disappeared. Four have but one survivor. Those men that escaped death—and many of whom were riddled with bullets—were obliged to bury in a summary and hasty fashion their fathers, mothers, brothers or sisters; then after having been relieved of their money and being placed in chains they were sent to Cassel (Prussia).'"

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

It is not an uncommon thing to meet a fellow who does not know who Tony Pastor was and it is more than likely that there are a few bewhiskered peasants in the sparsely settled districts of our country who cannot remember of ever havin' heard of Harriet Beecher Stowe, but it's inconceivable that there should be Americans, clean shaven, substantial lookin' Americans, walking about professing not to know why their country is at war with Germany.

The other day a tall, well dressed man, with a thick massive forehead, and wearing a linen collar and a neat cravat, was heard to remark, "why should we take up the troubles of England and France and send our boys across the sea to fight the Germans?" whereupon his companion, who looked like he at least took a weekly newspaper, replied, "There you have it. Why are we in this war? I have asked myself this question a dozen times."

Our declaration of war on Germany was the culmination of a long series of insolent violations of international law, the brutal murders of innocent women and children, the sinking without warning of neutral shipping aggregating many millions of dollars, and the virtual making of war on the United States on American soil. The imperial German government forced the president of the United States to declare war on her by her own double dealing and arrogant attitude throughout all the brutal provocations which lead up to it. No country in all history ever went to combat an enemy as barbaric and well entrenched as Germany. No people ever took up arms against a foe with such bristling mustaches and heavy jowls as have the Germans.

But the United States is big enough to whip Germany and it is squarely up to every American, worthy of the name, of whatever blood, color or politics, to plant himself squarely behind his government and give it every aid and encouragement at his command until a triumphant American army either flies over Essen and quiets the Krupps or marches down Main street in Berlin and shells a few shrines and destroys a few orchards.

Death of Benj Hamilton

Another Civil War veteran answered the last roll call, Saturday morning, at his home on Widney Ave. For more than a year past, Mr. Hamilton had been in failing health but was in his usual health on Friday, being about town frequently, even up to just before going to bed. Upon retiring he took his bed down stairs while Mrs Hamilton went up stairs. No disturbance was made during the night and upon getting up Saturday morning Mrs. Hamilton found him laying on the floor with his clothes partly on. She went to the phone and summoned S. W. Tustison for help and when he arrived Mr. Hamilton was dead Besides the widow, the following children are left Mrs. Delphia Provines, of Oklahoma; Frank Hamilton, of Wyoming; Mrs Mae Tustison, of Defiance, and Mrs. O. K. Shull and Will Hamilton, of this place. Funeral will be held Wednesday at 2 o'clock at the Lutheran Church.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy; four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

Our New Years Wish Peace and Prosperity

A belling was given Frank Kryder, the High School Principal, when his wife visited the school, Friday.

Ernest Steward, wife and babe, Alfred Wasson and mother, and George Jenkins spent Thursday in Ft. Wayne.

Mesdames Melvin Howey, Robert Duval, Ethel Bowser and Miss Arminta Steward were Friday afternoon guests of Mrs. John Benninghoff.

Don Shook had a narrow escape from having a team of horses drown, while getting wood along the river bank, last Wednesday. The ice became rotten throwing the horses into the water.

The C C. Club was pleasantly entertained Thursday in an all day meeting at the home of Mrs. Lizzie Wearley and daughter, Mrs. Fred Steward. Sixteen ladies enjoyed a delightful dinner, after which election of officers followed, Mrs. Fred Steward, President; Miss Arminta Steward, Vice-president; Mrs. Louie Beam, Secretary-Treasurer; Miss Hazel Steward and Miss Ruth Henderson, Assistants. The election of officers was followed by Roll Call at which time the ladies responded with a reading on Christmas. The Christmas Exchange was next in order under the direction of the Vice-president, Mrs. Robert Beams, followed by a social hour.

New Secretary of State

W. A. Roach, of Delphi, was appointed secretary of state, Friday.

He succeeds Ed Jackson, who resigned to enter the army and is now a captain at Camp Custer, Michigan.

The announcement was made by Governor Goodrich today.

Roach was republican chairman of the fifth congressional district.

"A Visit From St. Nicholas"

WHAT is the best known poem in the world? Not Gray's "Elegy," nor "The Song of the Shirt," nor "The Raven," but "The Night Before Christmas." The author is not so well known as his poem.

One recent Christmas the name of Clement Clarke Moore was honored as never before. Above his grave in the chapel of Holy Trinity cemetery, New York, the choir boys sang carols on the night before Christmas, and a service of light was held. This beautiful ceremonial starts with a procession of torchbearers whose torches are kindled from the leader's flame, and as the line winds through the graveyard the fire is passed back from one to another until the lights grow in number and dispel the surrounding darkness.

The father of Clement Clarke Moore was once the bishop of New York.

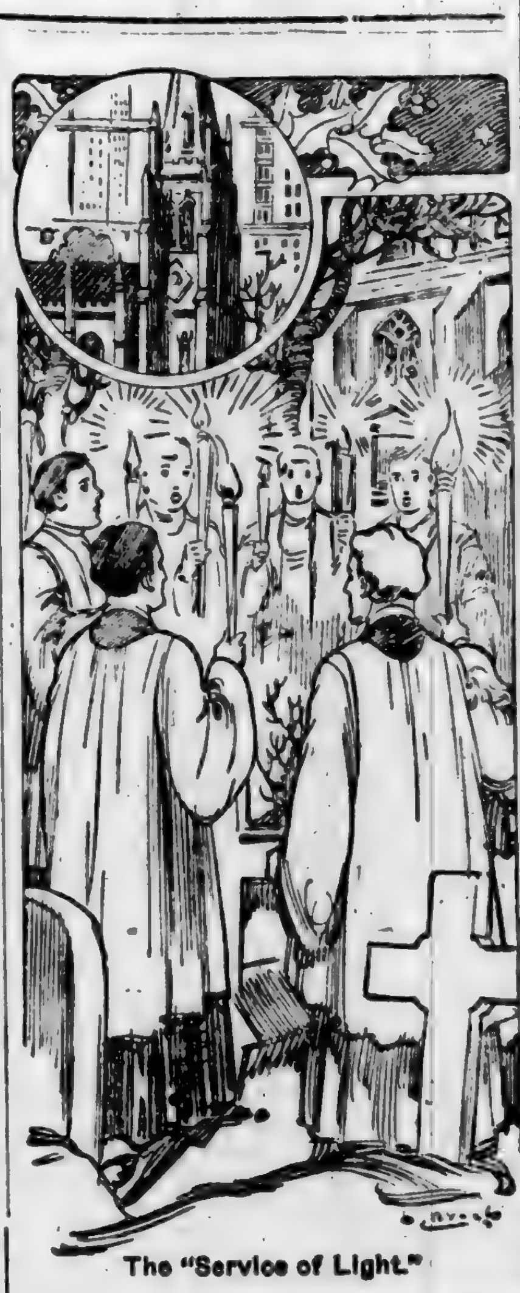
"The Night Before Christmas" was published originally without the author's knowledge in the Troy Sentinel two days before Christmas, 1823. Moore had written it the preceding Christmas just for the delight of his own children, but its circulation slipped beyond the family circle, and an unknown friend sent it for publication. The Sentinel readers paid no attention to it, and it passed without comment until seven years later, when the same paper reprinted it. The second reception was very different from the first. "A Visit From St. Nicholas," as it was then entitled, was copied broadcast, and its author awoke to find his work, if not himself, famous.

Although Clement Clarke Moore was educated for the ministry, he never took orders. For the greater part of his life he was identified with the New York General Theological seminary, being professor of Biblical learning and Greek and later of oriental languages.

Clement Moore's family life had many sorrows. His wife died at the early age of thirty-five, and the two little daughters, for whom he wrote "The Night Before Christmas," both died in their childhood. His son and namesake lived to the age of sixty-eight and is buried in the family plot.

When "The Night Before Christmas" was first published in the Troy Sentinel the editor wrote:

"We do not know to whom we are indebted for the following description of that unwearied patron of children, that homely but delightful personification of parental kindness, Santa Claus, his custom and his equipage, as he goes about visiting the firesides of this happy land, laden with Christmas bounties, but from whomsoever it may have come we give thanks for it. There is to our apprehension a spirit of cordial goodness in it, a playfulness as of fancy and a benevolent alacrity to enter into the feelings and promote the simple pleasures of children which are altogether charming. We hope our little patrons, both lads and lassies, will accept it as a proof of our unfeigned good will toward them, a token of our warmest wish that they may have many a merry Christmas; that they may long retain their beautiful relish for these unbought, home bred joys, which derive their flavor from filial piety and fraternal love and which, they may be assured, are the least alloyed that time can furnish them."—Philadelphia Press.



The "Service of Light."

Christmas Song.

Oh, Christmas is a happy time,
When human hearts are light
And human hate have vanished
And all the world looks bright!

And Christmas is a solemn time,
For back long, long ago,
Christ was born to give the world
The joy that we now know.

But not alone at Christmas time
Is happiness and cheer,
For he who really loves the Lord
Hath Christmas all the year.

Names As Assessor

George Jenkins of Spencerville, was made assessor of Spencer township Thursday. The appointment is announced by County Auditor Stanley P. Nelson. Mr. Jenkins succeeds George Wade, whose death took place recently. Mr. Jenkins was the deputy assessor under Mr. Wade and is well qualified for his new office. He will serve under this appointment until December 31, 1918.

Mrs. W. S. Berry returned home Saturday from a two weeks visit with her children at Indianapoilis Terre Haute, Swayzee and Huntington.

Interesting Subjects

For Every Hour.

The program arrangements have progressed far enough that the attendants at the Tri-Township Farmers' Institute, to be held here on Feb. 19 and 20, can be assured that every hour will be full of interest to the ruralist and his family.

The first day of the institute will be given over to the speakers sent out by Purdue. These people come to the farmer this year with a more pressing message than heretofore. It is just as necessary that the production of foodstuffs be maintained, and even increased as it is that the boys go to the front to fight for their country. It is up to the farmer to do everything within his power to aid the government in the war crisis and these men sent out by the state can be of great aid to us. The evening session promises to be highly entertaining, as well as instructive.

The second day will be known as "Local Day," when the farmers may discuss their difficulties and the result of their experiments during the past year. This day can be made one of inestimable value. If you have any question you want discussed, bring it along. Be a booster for the Institute—talk it to your neighbors and let us have the best one yet.

W. C. T. U. Meeting

The W. C. T. U. will meet on Friday afternoon December 28, at the home of Mrs. Belle Ridgway, at 2 o'clock and the following program will be carried out:

Remonstrators Lose

The drainage commissioners have the right to extend the drainage as far as they see fit, is the decision handed down late Wednesday by Special Judge A. C. Wood of Angola, in the case of the remonstrance against the Daniel Hursey petition in Concord township.

The remonstrators, by their attorneys, Hoffman & Shearer, held that the drainage commissioners had no right to extend the drain beyond the stipulations of the petition. Judge Wood decided that the report of the commissioners was in compliance with the law. C. S. Smith and E. W. Atkinson were attorneys for the petitioners.

Two remonstrances have been filed against assessments for the drain as fixed by the viewers. It is expected these cases will be tried before Judge Wood in the latter part of the present term of court.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

LEADER OF MINORITY IN HOUSE

At this session of congress the country is to become better acquainted with Mr. Gillett of Massachusetts, Republican house leader in the absence of Mr. Mann. He is by no means a stranger. He has been a member of every house since, and including, the Fifty-third. He is a veteran therefore in point of service, and his present position testifies to how well he has served. An adviser all along, and a valued one, of other leaders, he has had a good schooling, and his own chance at leadership now has come. He could not have asked for a better time or a larger opportunity for the display of his powers. The house is going to be very much in evidence for months. In some things it must take the initiative, and in all things its part will be prominent.

Mr. Gillett is a Republican without limitations. He stands for the best traditions of the party, and in his long service as a legislator has helped shape many important measures on the party's lines. His is the Springfield district, where the people take their politics seriously.

Mr. Gillett faces a period of hard work—hard enough to tax the capacity and the patience of even an old congressional hand. War measures and other measures carrying new propositions and enormous amounts of money are on the card and will soon be in hand; and once the grind begins there will be no let up until the work is done.

IS BUILDING NATION'S AIR FLEET

An automobile engineer with a vision came out of the West and crystalized the thought of the United States along a new line—that of the dependence of a nation at war upon industry. Now this same engineer is giving the best illustration of the war of the application of his theory, for he is building the nation's air fleet, which, he holds, will win the war for the allies next summer.

The man in question is Howard E. Coffin, chairman of the aircraft production board. His job is to get airplanes ready at the earliest possible moment. He has $640,000,000 given him by congress for the purpose. He is working fast, but there are many difficulties. He is one of those "it-can't-be-done-but-here-it-is" men. His job is to build three times as many airplanes in six months as all the rest of the world can build in a year. He intends to do it. Howard E. Coffin used to be a letter carrier. For four years after he graduated from the University of Michigan he was in the federal civil service. It was not until 1900 that he got his start in the automobile game. Soon he became the idea man for a large automobile company, then chief engineer. In ten years he had evolved three automobile engines in succession that were revolutionary in the industry. The one-time letter carrier had become the recognized genius of that industry that had blossomed in a decade as had no other.

GRATEFUL FOR AID GIVEN FRANCE

Capt. Andre Tardieu, French high commissioner to the United States, in reviewing his work in America, after his return to France, made this statement:

"It remains for us to create, in conformity with the desire of the United States and in the common interest, real unity in the direction of military and economic affairs. That will be the work of the coming weeks."

Captain Tardieu said that, in order to gain time in the delivery of certain armament, the United States had placed orders in France amounting to more than $200,000,000.

The commissioner expressed himself as pleased with the special and easy terms on which all transactions with the United States were effected, referring particularly to the fact that the United States undertook the transportation of materials ordered for France with the understanding that the financial settlement involved would be put over until after the war. One particular manner in which the United States had greatly aided France, Captain Tardieu said, was in shipping 2,000 agricultural implements for the agricultural department in five months.

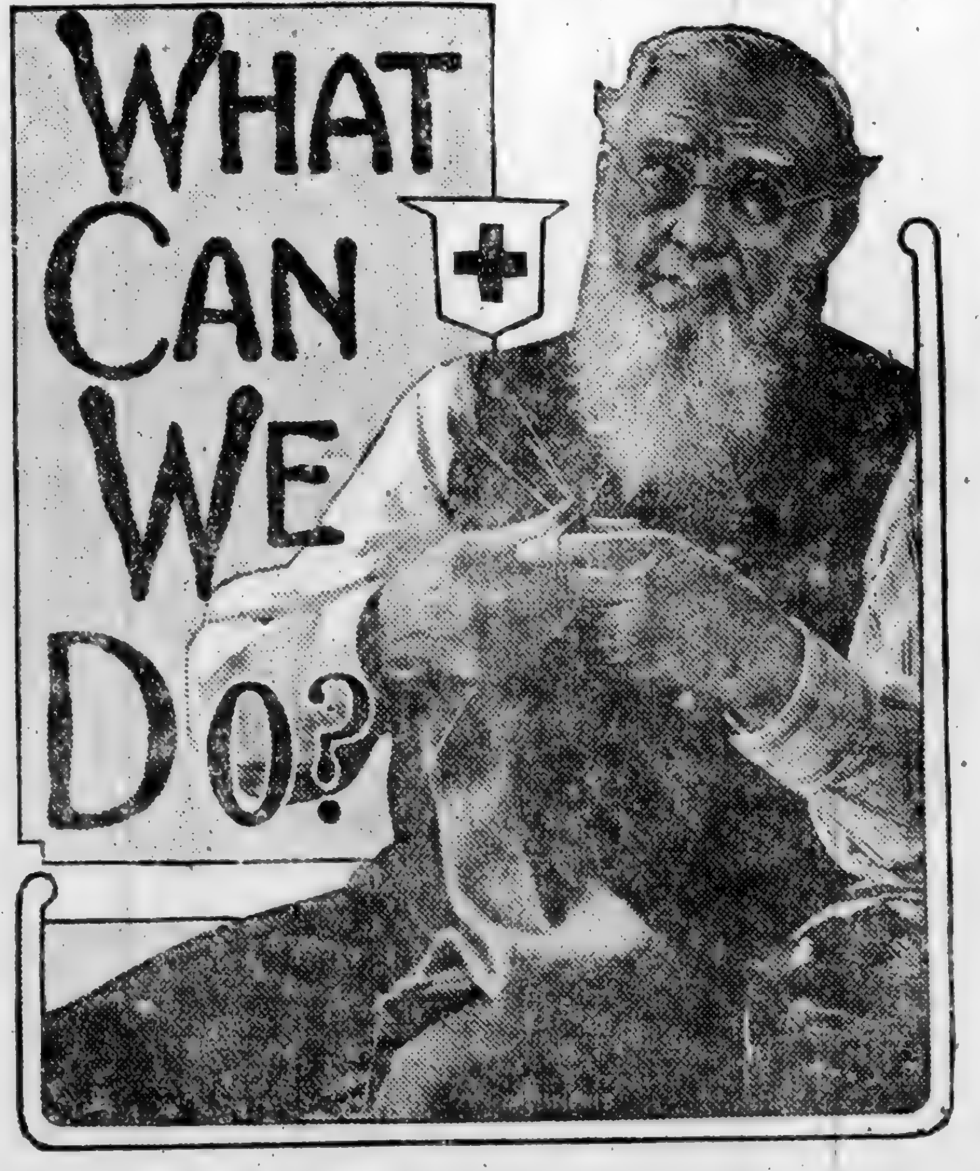
"France knew she could count on the United States," Captain Tardieu added, "but all our hopes have been surpassed."

TO BUILD AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

In an organization which is being reofficered with men whose slogan is "Speed" and whose exclusive duty is to turn out a new American merchant marine of 6,000,000 tons or so with all the dispatch possible, Rear Admiral Frederic R. Harris just naturally fits.

When Admiral Harris was appointed on November 24 to take the office of general manager of the Emergency Fleet corporation, some of Washington remarked—the uninformed part of Washington—that it was too bad that a man of such attainments should have this hoodoo job wished on him by his superiors. But his associates are of a different opinion. He has tackled hoodoo jobs before, not a few of them, in fact, and by his energy, his practical sense and his determination he has charmed away whatever evil influence may have hedged them about.

The fact that Chairman E. N. Hurley of the shipping board has been putting the machinery of the Emergency Fleet corporation into high gear for the first time since its organization and has been tearing away the red tape that bound its operations will create a scene of activity at the corporation offices quite in keeping with the temperament of Admiral Harris. He is accustomed to act with swiftness.



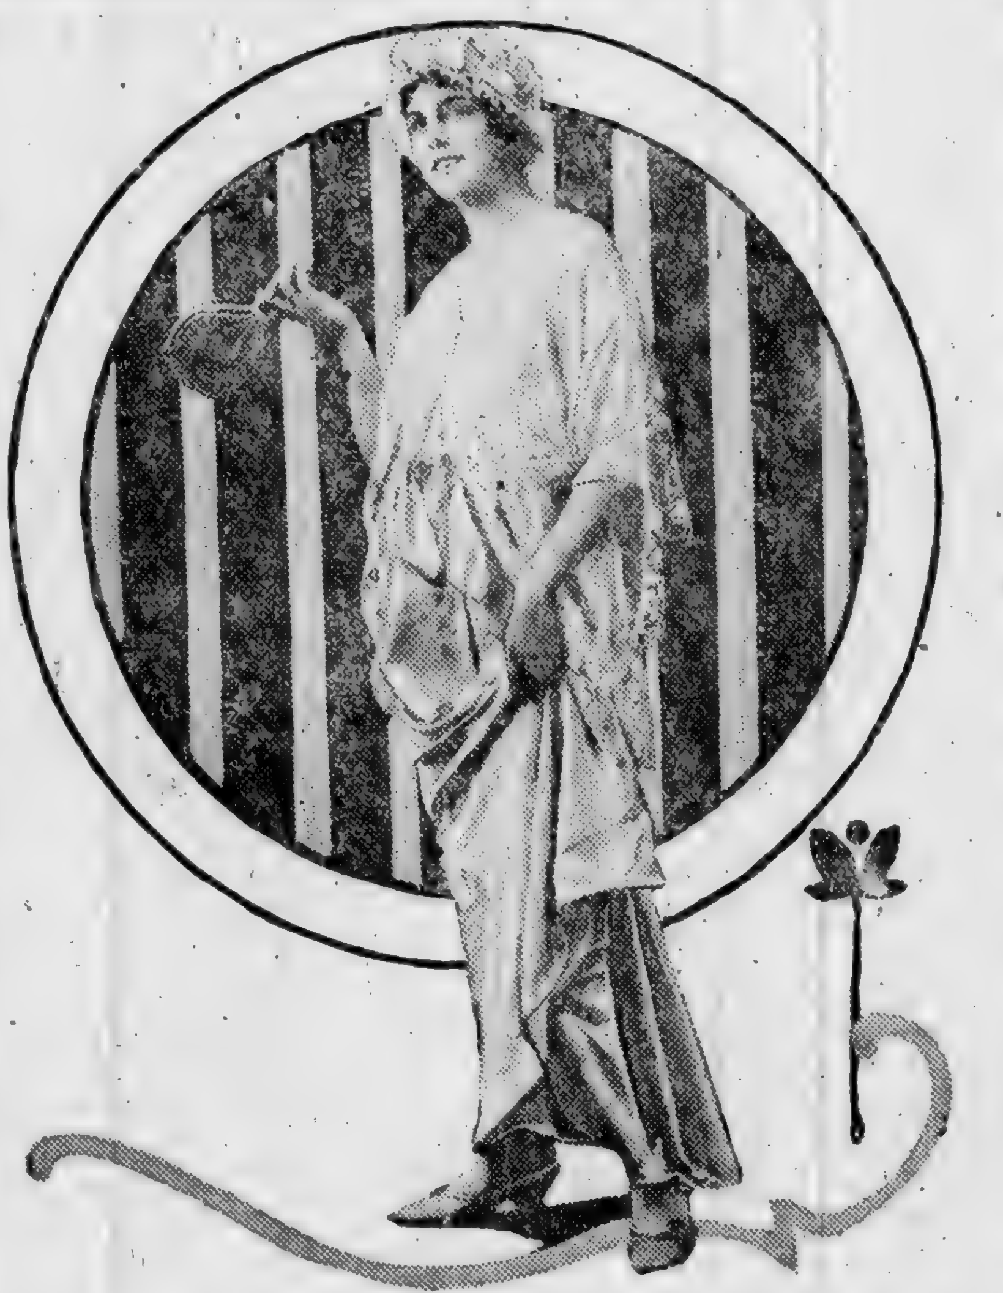
WHAT CAN WE DO?

It is only reasonable to suppose that every woman has done something to contribute to the comfort and good cheer of our soldiers at Christmas time, and is prepared to return to the routine duties which she has taken up for them. Persistence in the work of making and furnishing supplies for the Red Cross spells success in the women's efforts. It is inspiring to see the businesslike way in which the work of units all over the country is being handled. In nearly all communities reliable volunteer workers, women of church societies, clubs and other organizations, report for work at their Red Cross headquarters for certain definite periods each week. Even at some inconvenience to themselves, these women agree upon certain days, or certain hours, when they will report at the workrooms provided for Red Cross work, and do whatever has been assigned to them. Some women are able to give two or three days in the week, others only one, and business women sometimes give generously of their little leisure in the evenings. It is by this maintenance of effort, week in and out, that women are making a new record for themselves, and a friendly rivalry between clubs or church societies stimulates the work and keeps sewing machines and needles flying at the Red Cross rooms.

It is reported that the Germans captured eighty hospitals in the recent drive on Italy, and that within ten days the Red Cross was able to supply hospital equipment of every description to make good this big loss, and did make it good. The work of the women makes such a splendid performance possible, and the demand for this work is going to continue for some time. Women of wealth who can be more useful in some other lines than sewing, sometimes hire seamstresses to do their part; but it is the volunteer workers who are the strong right arm of the Red Cross in its work of caring for the sick and wounded and needy.

Those who want to make individual gifts to the soldiers ask so often: "What shall I send to the boys?" One bright young officer, in answer to that question, very promptly recommended three things that are always welcome, "Tobacco, soap and tooth-brushes—or tooth-brushes, tobacco and soap." These things are always in demand and always fill a need somewhere. They have a way of disappearing, like three meals a day.

Enticing "In-Time" Gown



A simple and lovely negligee is shown above. It will entice every woman into a longing for it and especially her who has little time, in these strenuous days, for rest and refreshment at home. It is more commendable than ever to remember to be attractively dressed within the four walls of home and to be able to help others to relax and forget the cares of the times for a little while.

This negligee is made of a soft, light satin in any of the pale colors used for negligees. It is almost as simple as a kimono, being a straight gown, open down the front with a loose three-quarter length sleeve set in a large arm's eye. It is hemmed down the front and finished at the bottom with a big cable cord run in a narrow hem, after the manner of Japanese robes. There is a loose girdle at the waist made of a folded strip of the satin. It terminates at each side of the front, where the ends are folded under. A short length of ribbon is knotted at the ends of the girdle on each side and falls in a pointed end about eight inches below the waist.

Between the ends of ribbon a small wreath of little silk blossoms and buds, gives a final dainty touch of gay colors to the girdle and makes a contribution to the beauty of the garment almost equal to that of the lace drapery. This is merely a length of wide silk lace, showing a rose design on a net top. It forms a short cape across the back and is laid in three plaits on the shoulders with the scalloped edge laid along the neck opening. At the ends it is caught to the back drapery. The straight edge of the lace falls almost to the bottom of the sleeves.

The negligee is worn over a lace petticoat and fastens from bust to waistline with snap fasteners. A ribbon-trimmed lace cap and ribbon-trimmed satin house slippers, with silk stockings, all in keeping with the negligee, help to make it the most exquisite of house gowns or "in-time" gowns as they are called.

Julia Bottomley

Waists.

The newest note in waist fashions is the use of batiste in ecru, flesh and white, says the Dry Goods Economist. Self-material with dainty picot, hem stitching or faggotting, forms the only trimming in many cases, although touches of hand embroidery are used on some of the more elaborate styles. There is a conspicuous absence of filet lace as a trimming feature in these waists.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

EVERY MAN AT HIS BEST!

Men and women as citizens are the product of four environments: The physical, the moral, the industrial and the political.

A physical incompetent by superior qualities of the unconquerable soul may lift himself out of the chains of disease and pain and make his fellows his debtors, but no man will deny me when I say that that which makes for physical incompetency is an enemy of the state.

A moral incompetent cannot be a good citizen.

An industrial incompetent cannot be a good citizen.

A political incompetent cannot be a good citizen.

I submit to you that the liquor institution is the supreme tangible foe of the state, because it is the supreme positive promoter of physical, moral, industrial and political incompetency.

Millions of citizens, men and women, immediately vital to the national and world program of this republic, cannot be at their best until the liquor institution is destroyed. Other and unborn millions are physically, morally, industrially and politically predamned by the eugenic taint of alcohol. And America needs every man at his best!—Daniel A. Poling.

BAD FOR THE WASHERWOMAN.

So acute has become the local shortage in washerwomen that it amounts to a "famine," says Robert Patton in the American Issue. It was not always so. In the halcyon days when Denver had saloons and the pay envelopes were being cashed in the thirst parlors, thousands of the wives of drinking men were compelled to take in washing to eke out a slender living for the little family. This condition suited the booze interests to a T. One of the wet newspapers in an exuberant outburst of philanthropy urged the saloonkeepers to send their "family wash to the wives of their patrons" and let the saloonists rake in the pay checks.

But all this is but a dream, since this city went dry. Daddy is now spending his money for household supplies and wife has ceased to take in washing—hence the "famine." Verily prohibition has "hurt" the washerwoman business as well as that of the undertaker and grave digger.

GERMANY UNDER PROHIBITION.

The German army was practically mobilized under prohibition, Miss Margaret Wintringer tells in the Union Signal. Germany actually clambered over the wheels of the water wagon, she says, by reviving the law of the state of seige enacted in 1851. "For an unheard of six weeks even beer was under taboo in all German villages. And to these six weeks Germany owes her initial success in the war. But ere firmly seated she fell off the water wagon. In October the law of the State of Siege was lifted and there followed the wretched village orgies, and the atrocities in Belgium which have forever blackened Germany's escutcheon."

LUMBERJACKS OPPOSE SALOONS.

A good argument for prohibition is furnished by the action of Washington lumberjacks. About fifty of these men had been fighting fires in Idaho and Washington (both dry states) and refused to go into Montana to perform the same service because they feared that if they exposed themselves to the temptations of a wet state, they would lose all their earnings in the saloons. So they turned down an appeal for help at good wages and remained in dry territory.

Montana's statutory prohibition law, enacted November, 1916, goes into affect December 31, 1918. After that date the state won't be shunned by lumberjacks or by anybody except boozers.

ALCOHOL NEUTRALIZES FOOD.

Food is not only wasted in the manufacture of alcoholic drink, but the drink itself renders nugatory the nutritive value of much food that is eaten. Put a lump of sugar into alcohol, It hardens instead of dissolving as it does when placed in water. A half pound of beefsteak, chased by a highball does not furnish more than 60 per cent as much nourishment to the body as when it is eaten alone.

PROHIBITION BEST.

Out of an experience which has touched all classes and conditions of men, I am willing to state my belief that in this present crisis the United States would be better able to meet the high duties before it if prohibition were general and absolute.—Gov. Charles C. Whitman of New York.

REFUSE TO BE LIQUOR BOOSTERS.

Inquiry in January, 1917, directed to every publication in the United States, no matter what its character or frequency of issue, revealed that 8,367, or nearly one-third of all the publications in the country, declined to serve as a medium of drink solicitation, says the Cyclopedia of Temperance and Prohibition, published by the Board of Temperance of the M. E. church. At this writing many others might be added to the honor roll.

TO THE GIRL BACK HOME

FRENCH OFFICIAL PHOTO

Even under extreme danger the soldier's thoughts drift toward home. A French soldier at outpost duty snatches a few moments to write words of encouragement to the girl he loves.

For Toothache.

Oil of cloves may be used successfully for a little while, but you must not continue with it too long or it may lead to congested toothache, says an exchange. Put just one drop on a piece of wadding and push the wadding firmly but gently into the hole in the aching tooth. It may stay there for two or three days, and should then be renewed.

Spirit rubbed on the gums will give relief for a few minutes. It is also a good plan to rub baking soda round the tooth and then rinse out the mouth with warm water.

If the trouble is caused by an abscess, nothing is better than a poultice of linseed meal mixed with vinegar instead of water. Measure out three tablespoonfuls of meal. Boil enough vinegar to mix the meal into a moist paste. Stir it up very quickly, wrap it up in a piece of old, soft flannel, and apply it to the face as hot as is bearable. It should not be made before the patient is ready for it; but if a delay occurs, and it has to be kept back for a few minutes, you should lay it on a warm plate and pop it into the oven.

PLENTY OF GOOD FRESH AIR

Ventilation Prepares One to Maintain a Condition That Will Throw Off Illnesses.

The last generation feared cold, fresh air, in just about the proportion that this present age courts it. Plenty of good air gets one in a good condition, so that one is able to resist and throw off colds or other illnesses caused by germs, but one should be careful not to overexpose, observes a physical culture expert.

Of course it is not wise to sit in draughts, though they are not so harmful as bad air. It is said that the harm caused by one hour's breathing bad air cannot be undone by breathing good air for the other twenty-three.

Every woman wants to feel that her house is well ventilated. She does not like to think that her family is being poisoned by the air it breathes. There should be one or two windows always open, though there should be no draught. If only one window is opened pull it down from the top as well as up from the bottom. An open fireplace is an excellent ventilator.

Road to Success.

Do not disdain the trivial task that you know is yours to perform. Study it well. Remember, all great achievements are a composite of many details, tiny matters that make possible admirable results. We all want to succeed, to get beyond the half-way station; for we long to reach the City of Success, but if we neglect details, the "little things" so essential to our progress, we shall only find ourselves where all drones and indolent individuals eventually find themselves, sidetracked in the Land of Failure.—Exchange.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

LAMB AND DOG.

"Now you know," said Peggy, "it's entirely too much to expect of me."

"I have no idea what you are talking about," said the pony, neighing.

"It's that lamb," said Peggy. "I love the keeper and I see that nothing harms him and then that silly little lamb follows him around and the keeper pets him. It's almost more than I can bear. Oh, but I'm jealous!"

"You most certainly are," said the pony. "But I know how much the keeper loves you, even if you're only a dog and not a pony."

"I don't want to be a pony," said Peggy, "neither do I want to be a lamb. I am glad I am a dog, for you know my family belongs to the bulldog family and we're famous for being great fighters."

"Dear me," said the pony, "then I had better not talk to you and argue with you if that is the case."

"Never fear, pony dear," said Peggy, politely, and the pony bowed because Peggy was so friendly and, too, because Peggy had made up a poem in his honor, a very short poem, to be sure, but still it rhymed!

"But what makes me so glad that I belong to the bulldog family is because many creatures are afraid of us. Now my keeper looks after the bears. The brown bears are all right, but those 'polars,'" and Peggy shook her head and let her tail droop: "those polars," she continued, "are just about the crossest creatures.

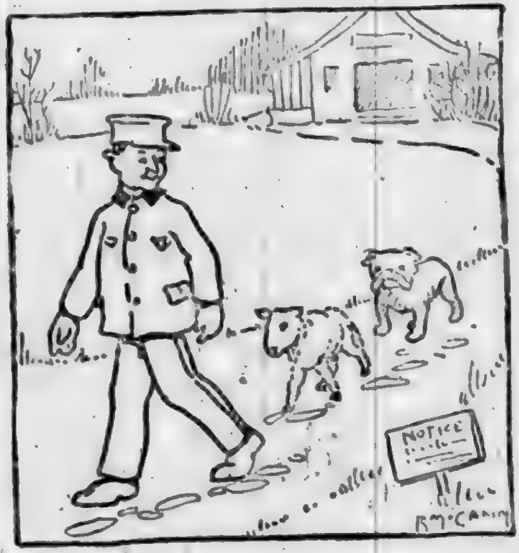
"Mrs. Polar is far more cranky than Mr. Polar and when the keeper goes to feed them I have to bark hard at Mrs. Polar so she'll get far off into a corner. She doesn't know my language, but she knows my bark sounds as if it meant something pretty bad if she didn't behave herself, and so she keeps out of the way."

"I've often heard the keeper telling people that you always looked after him," said the pony.

"Ah, yes," said Peggy wagging her tail, "the keeper loves me."

Just at that moment Peggy saw the keeper coming along with food for all the animals under his charge.

"Hello, Peggy, good dog!" said the keeper. And he patted Peggy, while Peggy's eyes looked so happy and her tail wagged and her teeth, that looked so big and terrible when she barked at Mrs. Polar, now seemed to smile and almost grin.



They Each Trotted Behind.

"Good-by, Pony," said Peggy. "I must be going with the keeper."

"Good-by!" neighed the pony, who wandered off to eat some hay.

The keeper fed the different animals and Peggy went along by his side. From time to time the keeper stopped to pat Peggy and call her a good dog.

But when they reached one of the animal's yards, out came a small white lamb.

"Hello, Sammy!" said the keeper.

Sammy bleated his "Hello!" and followed the keeper, too.

"My two little pets," said the keeper, "so faithful and loyal." And both the animals were very happy. They each trotted behind, the brown bulldog and the white lamb. Sometimes the keeper would speak to Sammy, the lamb, and sometimes to Peggy, the dog.

After all the animals had been fed they went back to a little house, where the keeper kept food for the animals.

He was rather tired, so he sat down to rest, and now Peggy jumped upon him, his feet in the keeper's lap and his head nudging his hand so the keeper would take the hint and pet her.

But Sammy was there, too! And Sammy wanted to nestle up and be petted. "Well, Sammy," said the keeper, "what do you think of Peggy looking at you and wanting all the petting herself?"

Sammy didn't answer, but just bleated and nestled closer.

"Well, Peggy, what do you think of Sammy, looking so fine and handsome today?" Peggy didn't answer, but tried to push the lamb away every time he drew near to be petted. Peggy was certainly very jealous, but when the keeper petted both and told them both how fond he was of them Sammy and Peggy were happy and contented.

Equal to Emergency.

The best way to learn to be equal to the big emergency is to be equal to the small ones. It is all nonsense to suppose that the girl who bursts into tears over some trivial vexation is going to stand up bravely to the big trials of life. The people who distinguish themselves in an emergency are those who have practiced self-control in the commonplace, everyday routine.—Girl's Companion.

AGRICULTURE THE MAINSTAY OF THE NATION

The United States and Canada Have a Great Responsibility.

This is the day when the farmer has his innings. The time was when he was dubbed the "farmer," the "mossback," and in a tone that could never have been called derisive, but still there was in it the inflection that he was occupying an inferior position. The stiff upper lip that the farmer carried, warded off any reproach that his occupation was a degrading one. His hour arrived, though, and for some years past he has been looked up to as occupying a high position.

Agriculture, by a natural trend of economic conditions, stands out today in strong relief, as the leader in the world's pursuits. Never in the nation's history have the eyes of the world been so universally focused on the farm. The farmer is the man of importance; the manufacturer of its most necessary product, and he now enjoys the dual satisfaction of reaping a maximum of profit, as a result of his operations, while he also becomes a strong factor in molding the world's destinies.

Manufacturers, business men professional men and bankers realize the importance of agriculture, and gladly acknowledge it as the twin sister to commerce. In commercial, financial and political crises, the tiller of the soil takes the most important place. Maximum prices, the highest in many decades, show the world's recognition of the necessary requirement for more farm stuffs. The time was coming when this would have been brought about automatically, but war time conditions urged it forward, while the farmer was able to secure land at reasonable prices. Throughout several of the Western states this condition exists, as also in Western Canada.

Never has such a condition been known in commercial life. It is truly an opportunity of a lifetime. Large and small manufacturing concerns and practically every other line of business have been limited in their profits to the point of almost heroic sacrifice, while it is possible today to reap dividends in farming unequaled in any other line.

Thirty, and as high as fifty bushels of wheat per acre at $2.20 per bushel and all other farm produce on a similar basis, grown and produced on land available at from $15 to $40 per acre, represents a return of profit despite higher cost of labor and machinery, that, in many cases runs even higher than 100% of an annual return on the amount invested. Such is the present day condition in Western Canada. How long it will last, no one can foretell. Prices for farm produce will likely remain high for many years. Certainly, the low prices of past years will not come again in this generation. The lands referred to, are low in price at present, but they will certainly increase to their naturally productive value as soon as the demand for them necessitates this increase, and this day is not far distant. This demand is growing daily; the farmer now on the ground is adding to his holdings while prices are low; the agriculturist on high priced lands is realizing that he is not getting all the profit that his neighbor in Western Canada is securing; the tenant farmer is seeking a home of his own, which he can buy on what he was paying out for rent, and many are forsaking the crowded cities to grasp these unprecedented opportunities.

The tenant farmer, and the owner of high priced land, is now awakening to the realization that he is not getting the return for his labor and investment that it is possible to secure in Western Canada. Thousands are making trips of inspection to personally investigate conditions and to acquaint themselves with the broadening benefits derived by visiting Western Canada. Such trips awaken in a progressive man that natural desire to do bigger things, to accomplish as much as his neighbor, and frequently result in convincing and satisfying him that God's most fertile outdoors, with a big supply of nature's best climatic and health-giving conditions lies in Western Canada.

The days of pioneering are over; the seeker after a new home travels through all parts of the country on the same good railway trains as he has been accustomed to at home, but on which he has been accorded a special railway rate of about one cent a mile. He finds good roads for automobiling and other traffic; rural telephone lines owned by the provincial governments; rural schools and churches situated conveniently to all; well appointed and homelike buildings, and everywhere an indication of general prosperity; cities and towns with all modern improvements, and what is the most convincing factor in his decision, a satisfied and prosperous people, with a whole hearted welcome to that country of a larger life and greater opportunities.

To Western Canada belongs the distinguished honor of being the holder of all world's championships in wheat and oats for both quality and quantity. For many years in succession Western Canada has proven her claim for supremacy in the most keenly contested National exhibitions and to her is credited the largest wheat and oat yield America has known. The natural conditions peculiar to Western Canada and so adaptable to grain growing, has been an insurmountable barrier for her competitors to overcome. In the last few years the yields of wheat and oats per acre have surprised the agricultural world. As much as sixty bushels of wheat per acre has been grown on some farms, while others have furnished affidavits showing over fifty bushels of wheat per acre, and oats as high as one hundred and twenty bushels per acre. One reputable farmer makes affidavit to a crop return of over fifty-four thousand bushels of wheat from a thousand acres. While this is rather the exception than the rule, these yields serve to illustrate the fertility of the soil and the possibilities of the country, when good farming methods are adopted. Western Canada can surely lay undisputed claim to being "The World's natural bread basket."—Advertisement.

THE TRUTH ABOUT ECZEMA AND PILES

Thousands and thousands of people, says Peterson, are learning every week that one 30 cent box of Peterson's Ointment will abolish Eczema and banish piles, and the grateful letters I receive every day are worth more to me than money.

I had Eczema for many years on my head and could not get anything to do it any good. I saw your ad and got one box and I owe you many thanks for the good it has done me. There isn't a blotch on my head now, and I couldn't help but thank Peterson, for the cure is great. Mrs. Mary Hill, 420 Third Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

I have had itching piles for 15 years and Peterson's is the only ointment that relieves me, besides the piles seem to have gone. A. B. Ruger, 1127 Washington Avenue, Racine, Wis.

Use Peterson's Ointment for old sores, salt rheum and all skin diseases. It banishes pimples and blackheads in less than 10 days and leaves the skin clean, clear and pleasant to look upon. Druggists guarantee it. Adv.

Just an Extra Potato.

Jones was urging Smith to run over to dinner some time. "But I am afraid that your wife will go to a lot of trouble," Smith demurred.

"A lot of trouble—nonsense!" replied the hospitable man. "It just means to boil an extra potato. And what is seventy-five cents between friends?"—Judge.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.
ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE.

BANK
BANK BOOK

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

Not just to have one, nor merely for the purpose of saying she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and individual attention to such accounts.

Red Cross Department

The Secretary of the DeKalb County Red Cross has issued her report covering the first six months of our organization. The county has done splendid work and it affords the members, workers and friends of our local chapter no little satisfaction to note that the St. Joe Branch has a showing of which we need not be ashamed—It makes us glad to know we are living in a community that believes that patriotism, like charity, begins at home. Our report is as follows: Pajamas 13, bed shirts 24, nightingales 24, bed socks 39, bottle covers 1 2, comfort pillows 54, handkerchiefs 12, towels 18, sweaters 5, scarfs 1, helmets 1, and knitted socks 15.

FINANCIAL REPORT.

St. Joe Branch—162 members

From 159 annual dues, $63.60; from 3 subscribing dues, $1.20; refund of war fund, $90 80; donations $64.89; sale of knitting needles, $4.76; Fair, benefit Red Cross, $132 85; rabbit hunt sale, $25 05. Total, $383.15.

DISBURSEMENTS.

Military relief supplies, $155.93; Dec. 15, balance, $227.22; Total, $383.15.

If you look over the county report, please note that Waterloo, with three times our population, has exceeded our financial receipts by only $77.71, and that Butler, with five times our population, has exceeded us by only $45.64 and the balance of the report runs accordingly. Also nearly all of the towns have more country territory to draw from than we have.

Our paper goes to press earlier than usual this week, and so we are unable to give any information as to the progress of the Membership Committee.

Each week the attendance in the sewing room is increasing and we want to see still more ladies. If you do not care to sew or knit we will furnish you with other work and you will enjoy a social visit with friends Come and try it next Wednesday afternoon. Several ladies from the country have been coming and we would be glad to have many more attend.

The following "Meditation" was written by an office man in the Swinney Block at Ft. Wayne:

My Wednesdays are wheatless
I am getting more eatless each day-
My home it is heatless
My bed it is sheetless
They're sent to the Y. M. C. A.
The bar-rooms are treatless,
My coffee is sweetless
Each day I get poorer but wiser-
My stockings are feetless
My trousers are seatless
My God, but I do hate the Kaiser.

Income Tax Collector

In a communication received by this paper, Collector of Internal Revenue Peter J. Kruyer announces that a federal income tax officer will be sent into this county on January 2, 1918 and will be here until January 19, 1918. He will have his office in the postoffice building in Auburn and will be there every day ready and willing to help persons subject to the income tax make out their returns without any cost to them for his services.

How many income-tax payers will there be in DeKalb county? If you can guess how many married persons living with wife or husband will have net incomes of $2,000 or over and how many unmarried persons will have net incomes of $1,000 or over this year, then you know. The Collector of Internal Revenue estimates that there will be 835 taxpayers in this county.

Returns of income for the year 1917 must be made on forms provided for the purpose before March 1, 1918. Because a good many people don't understand the law and won't know how to make out their returns, the government is sending in this officer to do it for them. But the duty is on the taxpayer to make himself known to the government. If he doesn't make return as required before March 1 he may have to pay a penalty ranging from $20 to $1,000, pay a fine or go to jail So if you don't want to take chances on going to jail, you better call on the income tax man. If you are not sure about being subject to the tax, better ask him and make sure. Whether you see the income tax man or not, you must make return if subject to tax.

Of course, persons resident in other counties may, if they want to, come and see the income tax man who will be at Auburn.

The Collector suggests that everybody start figuring up now his income and expenses so as to be ready with the figures when the expert arrives. Expenses, however, don't mean family expenses, money used to pay off the principal of a debt, new machinery, buildings, or anything like that. They mean what you spend in making your money—interest, taxes paid, hired help, amount paid for goods sold, seed, stock bought for feeding, rent (except for your dwelling,) etc. Income includes about every dollar you get.

Another Letter.

The following letter was received by the local K. of P., lodge from Clark Scholes, which will be of interest to our readers.

December 4, 1917.

St. Joe Lodge, No. 400.

Dear Brothers:—

After a long day of drill, I will try and speak a word to all.

When I received a card of remembrance from the lodge I entended to answer the same night, but was put on guard, and it seems there has been very little time since for doing anything.

The Army life seems to be very agreeable with me, I have gone from 186 lbs. to 190 in the short time I have been in service, and the chances are good for lots more to pile on.

Everything looks good for a trip across soon and everybody is looking ahead to the time when we start.

It is much different here in the East, war does not seem quite so bad as it does at home, so we are not thinking so much about going as people at home.

Calvin is very well but he is loosing a little of his waist, where as for myself it works differently.

We have eight hours each day in drill and the Company I belong to were all green men about one month ago, but Secy. Baker said we were all ready to go, and gave his compliments as to the rapid progress we have made.

It seems we have always been soldiers now, and I don't think it would take anyone long to learn to be a Sammy if he had to do it all day long and every day.

Only 10 minutes until taps, so must close.

Best Wishes to all.

CONCORD

Pete Burleff was entertained Sunday afternoon at Curt Hurseys'.

The ladies of Concord are going to do some sewing for the Red Cross Chapter of St. Joe.

Mrs. Walter Baker is spending a couple of days with her Grandma Perry, returning home Monday.

Mrs. Isa Shearer and two children visited Mrs. Dell Draggoo and Mrs. Libbie Wasson, New Years.

Ford Jackson and lady friend, of Auburn, were Sunday afternoon and evening guests with Garrett friends.

Little Miss Mary Ellen Haines, who has been visiting her grandmother, Mary E. Baker, of Auburn, came home Saturday with Dell Draggoo and Chas. Jackson, who was at Auburn on business.

Good Sense in Resolution.

The Executive of Steuben County W. C. T. U at a recent meeting adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we urge our members to put forth every effort towards the conservation of food, that we may assist in winning the world for Democracy, but we protest against the wilful waste of money in the use of tobacco and the misuse of land on which it is raised.

The adoption of this resolution was urged because of the following facts—

One and one-half billion dollars is spent each year on tobacco. Even one smokeless day would mean $4,109,598 saved instead of burned.

Instead of restricting the use of cigarettes, there was an increase of 40 per cent. in 1917 over 1916. This does not include the "roll-your-own." More than a million and a quarter acres of America's best soil is used for Tobacco. This drains the soil faster than any food crop.

"The people of the United States are now spending annually one and one-half million dollars for Tobacco. This is twice as much as we spend for bread, three times as much as [illegible] spend for education, and five times as much as we spend for our christianity. Our tobacco money amounts to about $50 per second, night and day."

Again we pledge ourselves to make every effort to conserve food, but where is the fairness in asking women to save the last crust while men in a manner harmful to themselves wantonly waste an amount twice our total bread bill.

St. JOE HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

This week winds up the first semester of the term, and with examinations too.

The total number of Red Cross Christmas seals sold by the St. Joe schools was 4,030, making an amount of $40 30 to help in the fight against Tuberculosis. Of this number the high school alone sold 2,189. The team, consisting of half the school, whose captain was Russell Hathaway, sold 1,112, a majority of 44 over that of the team, consisting of the other half of school, whose captain was Vernie Monroe.

The Auburn Y. M. C. A. Dormatory five were handed a neat trimming at the hands of our H. S. boys Frsday night. The game was featured by sather loose playing on the part of the locals dursng the first half, but they came back with the right sort of pluck the last period. The high school boys played as fine a game as has ever been played on the floor. After tieing the score at nineteen the first half, they made it 43 to 29 defeat. The new suits seem to help.

"As we grow older we find ourselves luring more and more in retrospective visions of our past life. At this time of year when people are drawn closer together in brotherly feelings and g[illegible]d will one toward another, o[illegible]nds are prone to wande[illegible] he blessed days of Chi[illegible] I believe that the farther [illegible] years and dista[illegible]e the mo[illegible] and real becomes the me[illegible]es of those days. To those [illegible] us who were transplanted, al[illegible]ost by magic, from the freedom of country life to the confines of a great city, the love and longing for the old life and its environments are stronger. In memory we picture the old farm home with all its blessings of family ties, surrounded by families of relatives and good neighbors. The Christmas festivities of home, church and school. The long winter evenings spent in social, cultural, and educational gatherings, and greatest of all, the freedom of out door life. The moral standard of the community life was high, governed exclusively by public opinion. Every farm was a kingdom, and every farmer a king. What joy it was to be invited to spend an hour in social gathering at one of these homes. Ah, me! Well do I know that these old scenes only exist for me in memory, but I love to dream them over.

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead, who never to himself hath said, 'This is my own native land'" In my younger days it was my privilege as a music teacher to become quite closely identified with many community centers in and arou[illegible] DeKalb county. The St. Joe Ne[illegible] through its correspondence has kept me well informed on the lives of many of these communities.

In St. Louis we have an Indiana-St. Louis association. To become a member of this organization, one must have been born in Indiana, Each member must arise before this assembled body and give his name, occupation, and his place of birth. Naturally a large perc'ntage of these men are from the central or southern portion with ancestors who emigrated principally from Virginia, Kentucky, and the northern teir of southern states. There are, however, a great many from northern Indiana whose ancestros emigrated principally from the New England states. The ones from DeKalb co. are: Melville L. Wilkinson, of Butler, and Dr. Cleveland H. Shutt, of Spencerville. While Mr. Wilkinson was born in Harlan which, if I remember rightly, is in Allen county, he spent the better part of his days in DeKalb. His father was a Methodist minister and now lives in Rome City. John Hawkins of Coldtown was his uncle. Mr. Wilkinson left Butler about twenty years ago where he was engaged in the dry goods business. Since then he has become very prominent in the business world. He is president and general manager of the Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney dry goods company and institution, which is to St. Louis what Marshall Field's is to Chicago. Besides this he is a director of the Frisco R. R. Co., with mamy other interests. Mr. Wilkinson is also a leader in church, religious and benevolent movement. It wasmy pleasure to know this man as a boy and young man, at which times we spent many pleasant hours together in social gathering, and so we occassionally fall together and indulge in reminiscences of the good old days and of people we both knew.

Dr. Shutt is still quite a young man but has gained considerable prominence in St. Louis. He is a member of the Shutt family who lived near spencerville and were very prominent in many ways in my days in Indiana. He is at the present time hospital commissioner of the city, and has under his management all the institutions which come under this head.

There are many other good people here from north eastern Indiana, but I mentioned these two as concrete cases of success.

County War Conference

Plans are already being laid by the County Council of Defence for the great County War Conference to be held at Auburn, on January 22nd. The plans have been made public as follows:

The sessions will be departmental, so as to give way for each branch of the war work and that each person may get just that which they are most interested in.

At 9:30 the department of Womens' Service and Food Conservation will be held jointly in the assembly room.

The Red Cross Conference will be held in the main court room; Fuel Conservation in the Commissioners room and Boys Working Reserve in the Y. M. C. A.

The mass meeting will be held at 2 o'clock with a band concert at 1:30. Thus far four speakers of repute have been engaged for the day Mrs. Elenore Barker, Indianapolis; Dr. Sherman Davis; Indiana University; Dr. Frank E. Jaynes, Wabash and Rev. A. J. Folsom, Fort Wayne.

The evening program will be the big treat when the State Council of Defense will send their speaking team. A meeting that everyone should arrange to attend as they are men of national repute. The session will begin at 7 o'clock with a band concert and at 7:30 the court theatre will be opened for the first meeting and the assembly room will be used for an overflow meeting. Watch for further announcements.

GERMAN HONOR DRAGGED IN DUST

Solemn Promises Made to Belgians Proved to Be Worse Than Worthless.

ALL APPEALS WERE FLOUTED

Pathetic and Dignified Supplications of Municipal Governments Answered by Rebuke and Heavy Fine Imposed by General Hopfer.

Over the earnest protest of Cardinal Mercier, heroic head of the church in Belgium, the terrible plans of the kaiser's high officers concerning the deportation of the people were carried out. The solemnly pledged word of the German governor general of Belgium counted as nothing in the malignant hate shown by the kaiser's creatures.

Cardinal Mercier attempted to persuade the German authorities to abandon their terrible plans for the seizure of Belgians to assist in the prosecution of the war, reminding them of their solemn promises in the past:

"Malines, 19th October, 1916.

"Mr. Governor General:

"The day after the surrender of Antwerp the frightened population asked itself what would become of the Belgians of age to bear arms or who would reach that age before the end of the occupation. The entreaties of the fathers and mothers of families determined me to question the governor of Antwerp, Baron von Huene, who had the kindness to reassure me and to authorize me in his name to reassure the agonized parents. The rumor had spread at Antwerp, nevertheless, that at Liege, Namur, and Charleroi young men had been seized and taken by force to Germany. I therefore begged Governor von Huene to be good enough to confirm to me in writing the guarantee which he had given to me orally, to the effect that nothing similar would happen at Antwerp. He said to me immediately that the rumors concerning deportations were without basis, and unhesitatingly he sent me in writing, among other statements, the following: 'Young men have no reason to fear that they will be taken to Germany, either to be there enrolled in the army or employed for forced labor.'

Solemn German Promises Broken.

"Upon the arrival of your predecessor, the late Baron von der Goltz, at Brussels I had the honor of presenting myself at his house and requested him to be good enough to ratify for the entire country, without time limit, the guarantees which General von Huene had given me for the province of Antwerp. The governor general retained this request in his possession in order to examine it at his leisure. The following day he was good enough to come in person to Malines to bring me his approval, and confirmed to me, in the presence of two aides-de-camp and of my private secretary, the promise that the liberty of Belgian citizens would be respected.

"Notwithstanding all this, your government now tears from their homes workmen reduced in spite of their efforts to a state of unemployment, separates them by force from their wives and children and deports them to enemy territory. Numerous workmen have already undergone this unhappy lot; more numerous are those who are threatened with the same acts of violence.

Mercier's Moving Appeal.

"In the name of the liberty of domicile and the liberty of work of Belgian citizens; in the name of the inviolability of families; in the name of moral interests which the measures of deportation would gravely compromise; in the name of the word given by the governor of the Province of Antwerp and by the governor general, the immediate representative of the highest authority of the German empire, I respectfully beg your excellency to be good enough to withdraw the measures of forced labor and of deportation announced to the Belgian workmen, and to be good enough to reinstate in their homes those who have already been deported.

"Your excellency will appreciate how painful for me would be the weight of the responsibility that I would have to bear as regards these families, if the confidence which they have given you through my agency and at my request were lamentably deceived.

"I persist in believing that this will not be the case.

"Accept, Mr. Governor General, the assurance of my very high consideration.

"D. J. CARDINAL MERCIER,
"Arch. of Malines."

Municipal governments in Belgium appealed to the German authorities to observe their promises. The two documents which follow illustrate Belgian appeals and German answers.

"In the matters of the requisition made by the German authorities on October 20, 1916 (requisition of a list of workmen to be drawn up by the municipality) . . .

"The municipal council resolves to maintain its attitude of refusal.

"It further feels it its duty to place on record the following:

"The city of Tournai is prepared to submit unreservedly to all the exigencies authorized by the laws and customs of war. Its sincerity cannot be questioned. For more than two years it has submitted to the German occupation, during which time it has lodged and lived at close quarters with the German troops, yet it has displayed perfect composure and has refrained from any act of hostility, proving thereby that it is animated by no idle spirit of bravado.

"In his declaration dated September 2, 1914, the German governor general of Belgium declared: 'I ask none to renounce his patriotic sentiments.'

"The city of Tournai reposes confidence in this decaration, which it is bound to consider as the sentiment of the German emperor, in whose name the governor general was speaking. In accepting the inspiration of honor and patriotism, the city is loyal to a fundamental duty, the loftiness of which must be apparent to any German officer.

Answer Is Lecture and Fine.

"Tournai, 23rd October, 1916.

"In permitting itself, through the medium of municipal resolutions, to oppose the orders of the German military authorities in the occupied territory, the city is guilty of an unexampled arrogance and of a complete misunderstanding of the situation created [illegible] state of war.

"The 'clear and simple situation' is in reality the following:

"The military authorities order the city to obey. Otherwise the city must bear the heavy consequences, as I have pointed out in my previous explanations.

"The general commanding the army has inflicted on the city—on account of its refusal, up to date, to furnish the lis[illegible] demanded—a punitive contributio[illegible] 000,000 marks, which must be paid [illegible] the next six days, beginning [illegible]. The general also adds tha[illegible] time as all the lists dem[illegible] in his hands, for every day [illegible]ars, beginning with December [illegible]6, a sum of 20,000 marks will be [illegible] by the city.

"HOPF[illegible] Major General,
"Etappen-Kommandant."

The Commission Syndicale of Belgian workingmen also attempted to induce the German authorities to abandon their terrible plans.

Recited Wrongs of Workmen.

"Commission Syndicale of Belgium,
"Brussels, 30th Oct., 1916.

[To the Governor General of Belgium.]

"Excellency: The measures which are being planned by your administration to force the unemployed to work for the invading power, the deportation of our unhappy comrades which has begun in the region of the etapes, move most profoundly the entire working class in Belgium.

"The undersigned, members and representatives of the great central socialist and independent syndicales of Belgium, would consider that they had not fulfilled their duty did they not express to you the painful sentiment which agitate the laborers and convey to you the echo of their touching complaints.

"For more than two years the laboring class more than any other has been forced to undergo the most bitter trials, experiencing misery and often hunger, while its children far away fight and die, and the parents of these children can never convey to them the affection with which their hearts are overflowing.

Pathetic Appeal Disregarded.

"Our laboring class has endured everything with the utmost calm and the most impressive dignity, repressing its sufferings, its complaints and heavy trials, sacrificing everything to its ideal of liberty and independence. But the measures which have been announced will make the population drain the dregs (of the cup) of human sorrow; the proletariat, the poor upon whom unemployment has been forced, citizens of a modern state, are to be condemned to forced labor without having disobeyed any regulation or order.

"In the name of the families of workmen among which the most painful anxiety reigns at present, whose mothers, whose fiancees, and whose little children are destined to shed so many more tears, we beg your excellency to prevent the accomplishment of this painful act, contrary to international law, contrary to the dignity of the working classes, contrary to everything which makes for worth and greatness in human natrue.

"We beg your excellency to pardon our emotion and we offer you the homage of our distinguished consideration."

(Appended are signatures of members of the national committee and the Commission Syndicale.)

Von Bissing in his reply, November 3, practically admitted the truth of the complaint by attempting to justify the measures protested against.

WAR CONFERENCES IN ALL COUNTIES

Arrangements Being Perfected for Meetings to Begin the Middle of January.

SPECIAL SPEAKERS ENGAGED

Plans Include Sectional Conferences, to Be Followed by a Mass Meeting—To Emphasize Individual Responsibility in War.

Indianapolis.—Patterned after the recent state-wide war conference, a war conference of local workers will be arranged in every county in Indiana. The conferences will start about the middle of January, and it is planned to cover the state completely by March 1, according to announcement from the state council of defense.

The meetings will include sectional conferences, and a mass meeting, at which the individual's part in the war program will be set forth in detail.

Organizers representing the Indiana state council of defense have arranged to divide the state into three or four sections and assign a group of speakers to each section, in order that the entire commonwealth may be included in the campaign.

Everett Colby of New Jersey and Mrs. Raymond Robins of Illinois will appear in the conference programs representing the federal food administration. They are just returned from a personal inspection of conditions of the fighting front and among the civil population of France and England. They are said to know definitely what the food demands of America's associates in the war are, and they will have definite suggestions to make.

In order to classify the requests that have come in for speakers, a special bureau has been created by the Indiana state council to be devoted to providing what is wanted in each community.

Work to Begin on Food Survey.

To facilitate the taking of the national inventory of foods in Indianapolis and its vicinity, the bureau of markets of the United States department of agriculture, which has the war emergency food survey in charge, has placed an agency of the survey with its local office at 827 Board of Trade building. R. B. Woolsey, in charge of the local office, has received a supply of the schedules and will distribute them in response to personal or mail request.

Copies of the schedule have been mailed from Washington to most dealers in food materials at Indianapolis.

Persons Required to Report.

Mr. Woolsey points out that the act of congress providing for the war emergency food survey requires that every dealer in and manufacturer of foods or food materials and every holder of such commodities in lots substantially greater than family supplies, fill out a schedule and mail it to the chief of the bureau of markets, Washington, D. C., by January 10, 1918, and fixes the penalties for failure to do so. This includes not only all wholesale and retail dealers in foods and feeds, public warehousemen and food and feed manufacturers, regardless of the size of the stocks which they hold, but also those in charge of hotels, restaurants, commissaries or industrial concerns, schools, institutions, etc., providing that their stocks on hand have a value of $250 or more.

The war emergency food survey will be the most comprehensive inventory of foods ever made in the United States. Its purpose is to show the total stocks of food and food materials on hand in the country so that the public and the officials of the government may have the necessary information on which to base plans for conserving and distributing supplies already on hand, and for producing the foods needed next season.

To Show Total Food Holdings.

To a large extent the food survey will be carried on by means of schedules or questionnaires. In addition, inventories will be made of stocks held by several thousand representative families in various parts of the country. The average holdings so determined will be used as a basis for an estimate of total holdings by families through the country. The total quantity of foodstuffs held on farms will be determined by estimate made by the bureau of crop estimates of the United States department of agriculture. The addition of the stocks in the hands of these three classes of holders will give the total supplies in the country December 31, so far as it is possible to reckon them.

Lowest Grade Corn for Alcohol.

In an effort to assist in making some use of the tremendous amount of "soft" corn in the central western states, the federal food administration has promulgated an order to the effect that only corn of the lowest grade is to be permitted for use in the manufacture of alcohol after January 1, 1918. Frank O. Fitton, special representative of the food administration, in connection with the efforts of Indiana farmers to induce the government to assist them in saving their "frosted corn," made the statement.

Aviation Station Busy Place.

One of the busiest places in Indianapolis these days is the headquarters of the aviation examining board, which is conducting examinations of applicants for commissions in the aviation division of the signal officers reserve corps, on the seventh floor of the Hume-Mansur building. Attaches of the board said that about 15 men have been examined daily since the examinations were started in October and that apparently no letup is in sight.

The examinations which the applicants must pass are so rigid, it is said, that only about 25 per cent of the candidates are successful. One of the first qualifications required of an applicant is that he must be a citizen of the United States and must have the equivalent of two years of college education. In determining the educational requirement, however, consideration is given to the applicant's past experience, occupation, technical knowledge, athletic activity and business or military training.

Examination Is Rigid.

Every applicant must also be examined first, at his own expense, by a reputable physician, who fills out a physical report on his application blank. A rigid examination is then given by the aviation examining board to determine officially whether the applicant is fitted for the position of an aviator. The examination given by the examining board is divided in two classes, usually the forenoons being devoted to physical examinations and the afternoons to mental examinations.

Capt. J. S. Reeves, A. S., S. O. R. C., and First Lieutenant Bernard J. Larkin, M. R. C., are in charge of the local aviation examining board, and Capt. E. de Wales, M. R. C., is in charge of the physical examining unit of the local board. The board is in session every day from 8 a. m. until 5 p. m. except Sundays and holidays.

Must Be Mentally Alert.

In view of the character of the work of an aviator, it is pointed out by those on the examining board that the candidates must be physically perfect, have well disciplined minds and must be mentally alert. The candidates must be at least nineteen years old and not over thirty. The minimum height is 64 inches and the minimum weight 120 pounds.

Applicants are also required to be of a high moral character and they must present three letters of recommendation with their application. These letters must be signed by citizens who are business and professional men and who will vouch for the character and ability of the applicant. If an applicant is successful in his examination he is enlisted as a private, first class, in the aviation division, signal enlisted reserve corps, and instructed to return to his home to await orders assigning him to active duty.

Sent to Training School.

When this order is received the successful applicant is sent to a training school, called a ground school, and receives $100 a month during the time of training, which is usually from three to six months. At the conclusion of this course he is assigned to a school for flying instruction and then commissioned as a second lieutenant.

Applicants for examinations in this branch of the service are still being accepted for pilots and balloon men. Although voluntary enlistments closed for all branches of the service on December 11, applicants for the pilot and balloon divisions are still being accepted. This is due to the fact that practically all material for these branches is found among men of the draft age.

Any young man desirous of entering these branches of the service may obtain information regarding them from the aviation examining board.

Chamber to Study Industries.

A thorough survey of the industries of Indianapolis has been decided on at a meeting of the board of directors of the chamber of commerce. The following resolution was approved:

"The board of directors of the chamber of commerce believes there should be a careful study made of industrial conditions in Indianapolis with a view of disclosing definitely and accurately whether there are any deficiencies in our facilities for advantageously conducting manufacturing, wholesale and retail business in Indianapolis; and that the chamber of commerce should devote its energies to the remedying of any deficiencies disclosed, or to the improvement of facilities desirable in the development of business here."

Approve Charities.

It was decided that the public should be informed concerning unauthorized and unworthy solicitations for charity. The charities and corrections committee has approved the Indiana Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis and the Marion County Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis. The committee decided to send a letter of thanks to T. L. Rose of Georgiana, Ala., on account of his assistance to young men connected with the Indianapolis Y. M. C. A.

Industrial Regiment Applications.

United States army officers representing the air section of the signal corps, who are receiving applications from automobile foremen for commissions in industrial regiments in the army, expect to complete their work in Indianapolis soon. The board has been in session at the offices of the Fisher Automobile company in North Capitol avenue, where they are receiving applications from foremen and mechanics who have had experiences in automobile factories or mechanic shops.

PRUDENCE SAYS SO

By ETHEL HUESTON

Author of "PRUDENCE OF THE PARSONAGE"

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

THE PROFESSOR COMES TO SEE THEM AND MAKES AN ANNOUNCEMENT THAT DEPRESSES CAROL—THEN SHE SURPRISES HIM

Synopsis.—The story concerns the household of Rev. Mr. Starr, a Methodist minister at Mount Mark, Ia., and the affairs of his five loveable daughters—Prudence, the eldest; Fairy, the next; Carol and Lark, twins; and Connie, the "baby." Prudence marries and goes away. Her place as "mother" in the home is taken by Aunt Grace. Fairy is engaged to wed. The twins and the "baby," just coming into womanhood, have the usual boy-and-girl love affairs, and the usual amazing adventures of adolescence.

"Did they tell you about it?"

"Yes, they told me. They told me."

"Come on into my office," he said. "You must write it up while it is fresh in your mind. You'll do it better while the feeling is on you."

Lark gazed at him stupidly, not comprehending.

"Write it up?" she repeated confusedly.

"Yes, for the paper. How they looked, what they said, how it happened—everything. We want to scoop on it."

"But I don't think they—would want it told," Lark gasped.

"Oh probably not, but people want to know about it. Don't you remember what I told you? The press is a powerful taskmaster. He asks hard duties of us, but we must obey. We've got to give the people what they want. There's a reporter down from Burlington already, but he couldn't get anything out of them. We've got a clear scoop on it."

Lark glanced fearfully over her shoulder. A huge menacing shadow lowered black behind her. The press! She shuddered again.

"I can't write it up," she faltered. "Mrs. Daly—she— Oh, I held her in my arms, Mr. Raider, and kissed her, and we cried all morning, and I can't write it up. I—I am the minister's daughter, you know. I can't."

"Nonsense, now, Lark," he said, "be sensible. You needn't give all the sob part. I'll touch it up for you. Just write out what you saw, and what they said, and I'll do the rest. Run along now. Be sensible."

Lark glanced over her shoulder again. The press seemed tremendously big, leering at her, threatening her. Lark gasped, sobbingly.

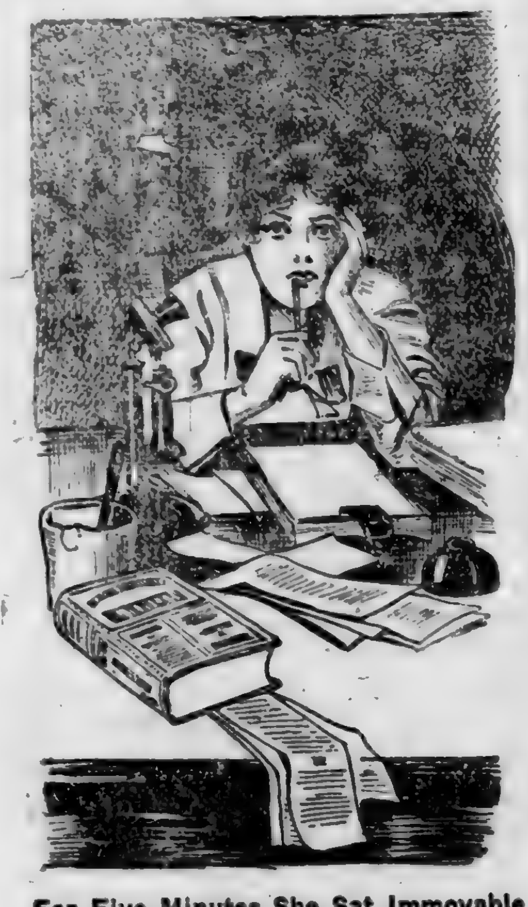
Then she sat down at Mr. Raider's desk, and drew a pad of paper toward her. For five minutes she sat immovable, body tense, face stern, breathless, rigid. Mr. Raider after one curious, satisfied glance, slipped out and closed the door softly after him. He felt he could trust to the newspaper instinct to get that story out of her.

Finally Lark, despairingly, clutched a pencil and wrote:

Terrible Tragedy of the Early Morning.

Daly Family Crushed With Sorrow.

Her mind passed rapidly back over the story she had heard, the father's occasional wild bursts of temper, the pitiful efforts of the family to keep his weakness hidden, the insignificant altercation at the breakfast table, the cry of the startled baby, and then the sudden ungovernable fury that lashed him, the two children—! Lark shuddered! She glanced over her shoulder again. The fearful dark shadow was very close, very terrible, ready to envelop her in its smothering depths. She sprang to her feet and rushed out of the office. Mr. Raider was in the doorway. She flung herself upon him, crushing the paper in his hand.



For Five Minutes She Sat Immovable, Body Tense, Face Stern.

"I can't," she cried, looking in terror over her shoulder as she spoke, "I can't. I don't want to be a newspaper woman. I don't want any literary career. I am a minister's daughter, Mr. Raider, I can't talk about people's troubles. I want to go home."

Mr. Raider looked searchingly into the white face, and noted the frightened eyes. "There, now," he said soothingly, "never mind the Daly story. I'll cover it myself. I guess it was too hard an assignment to begin with, and you a friend of the family and all. Let it go. You stay at home this afternoon. Come back tomorrow and I'll start you again. Maybe I was too hard on you today."

"I don't want to," she cried, looking back at the shadow, which seemed somehow to have receded a little. "I don't want to be a newspaper woman. I think I'll be the other kind of writer—not newspapers, you know, just plain writing. I'm sure I shall like it better. I wasn't cut out for this line, I know. I want to go now."

"Run along," he said. "I'll see you later on. You go to bed. You're nearly sick."

Dignity? Lark did not remember that she had ever dreamed of dignity. She just started for home, for her father, Aunt Grace and the girls! The shabby old parsonage seemed suddenly very bright, very sunny, very safe. The dreadful dark shadow was not pressing so close to her shoulders, did not feel so smotheringly near.

A startled group sprang up from the porch to greet her. She flung one arm around Carol's shoulder, and drew her twin with her close to her aunt's side. "I don't want to be a newspaper woman," she cried, in a high excited voice. "I don't like it. I am awfully afraid of—The Press—" She looked over her shoulder. The shadow was fading away in the distance. "I couldn't do it. I—" And then, crouching, with Carol, close against her aunt's side, clutching one of the soft hands in her own, she told the story.

"I couldn't, Fairy," she declared, looking beseechingly into the strong kind face of her sister. "I— couldn't. Mrs. Daly—sobbed so, and her hands were so brown and hard, Fairy, she kept rubbing my shoulder, and saying, 'Oh, Lark, oh, Lark, my little children.' I couldn't. I don't like newspapers, Fairy. Really, I don't."

Fairy looked greatly troubled. "I wish father were at home," she said very quietly. "Mr. Raider meant all right, of course, but it was wrong to send a young girl like you. Father is there now. It's very terrible. You did just exactly right, Larkie. Father will say so. I guess maybe it's not the job for a minister's girl. Of course, the story will come out, but we're not the ones to tell it."

"But—the career," suggested Carol.

"Why," said Lark, "I'll wait a little and then have a real career, you know, stories, and books, and poems, the kind that don't harrow people's feelings. I really don't think it is right. Don't you remember Prudence says the parsonage is a place to hide sorrows, not to hang them on the clothesline for every one to see." She looked for a last time over her shoulder. Dimly she saw a small dark cloud—all that was left of the shadow which had seemed so eager to devour her. Her arms clasped Carol with renewed intensity.

"Oh," she breathed, "oh, isn't the parsonage lovely, Carol? I wish father would come. You all look so sweet, and kind, and—oh, I love to be at home."

CHAPTER VIII.

A Clear Call.

The tinkle of the telephone disturbed the family as they were at dinner, and Connie, who sat nearest, rose to answer the summons, while Carol, at her corner of the table struck a tragic attitude.

"If Joe Graves has broken anything, he's broken our friendship for good and all. These fellows that break themselves—"

"Break themselves?" asked her father gravely.

"Yes—any of his members, you know, his leg, or his arm, or— If he has, I must say frankly that I hope it is his neck. These boys that break themselves at the last minute, thereby breaking dates, are—"

"Well," Connie said calmly, "if you're through, I'll begin."

"Oh, goodness, Connie, deafen one ear and listen with the other. You've got to learn to hear in a hubbub. Go on then, I'm through. But I haven't forgotten that I missed the Thanksgiving banquet last year because Phil broke his ankle that very afternoon on the ice. What business had he on the ice when he had a date—"

"Ready?" asked Connie, as the phone rang again, insistently.

"Go on, then. Don't wait until I get started. Answer it."

Connie removed the receiver and called the customary "Hello." Then, "Yes, just a minute. It's for you, Carol."

Carol rose darkly. "It's Joe," she said in a dungeon-dark voice. "He's broken, I foresee it. If there's anything I despise and abominate it's a breaker of dates. Men have no business being broken, except their hearts, when girls are mixed up in it.—Hello? —Oh; oh-h-h! Yes—it's professor! How are you?—Yes, indeed—oh, yes, I'm going to be home. Yes, indeed. Come about eight. Of course I'll be here—nothing important—it didn't amount to anything at all—just a little old everyday affair.—Yes, I can arrange it nicely.—We're so anxious to see you—All right—Good-by."

She turned back to the table, her face flushed, eyes shining. "It's professor! He's in town just overnight, and he's coming out. I'll have to phone Joe—"

"Anything I despise and abominate it's a breaker of dates," chanted Connie.

"Oh's that's different," explained Carol. "This is professor! Besides, this will sort of even up for the Thanksgiving banquet last year."

"But that was Phil and this is Joe!"

"Oh, that's all right. It's just the principle, you know, nothing personal about it."

She stood thoughtfully beside the table, her brows puckered unbecomingly.

"I think," she said at last slowly, with wary eyes on her father's quiet face, "I think I'll let the tuck out of my old rose dress. It's too short."

"Too short! Why, Carol—" interrupted her aunt.

"Too short for the occasion, I mean. I'll put it back tomorrow." Once more her eyes turned cautiously fatherward. "You see, professor still has the 'little twinnie' idea in his brain, [illegible] I'm going to get it out. It [illegible]sistent with our five feet seven, [illegible] grown up. Professor has got [illegible] it. You skoot upstairs, Co[illegible] won't you, there's a dear, and [illegible] down, both of them, Lark's [illegible]k—where did you put that [illegible] knife? Aunt Grace, will yo[illegible] iron on for me? It's perfectl[illegible] that professor should see we[illegible]ing up. We'll have to emphasize [illegible] thing extra, or he might overlook it. It makes him feel Methuselish because he's so awfully smart. But I'll soon change his mind for him."

In less than two minutes the whole family was engaged in growing Carol up for the occasion. They didn't see any sense in it, but Carol seemed so unalterably convinced that it was necessary that they hated to question her motives.

If her idea had been utterly to dumfound the unsuspecting professor, she succeeded admirably. Carefully she planned her appearance, giving him just the proper interval of patient waiting in the presence of her aunt and sisters. Then, a slow parting of the curtains and Carol stood out, brightly, gladly, her slender hands held out in welcome, Carol, with long skirts swishing around her white-slippered feet, her slender throat rising cream-white above the soft fold of old rose lace, her graceful head with its royal crown of bronze-gold hair, tilted most charmingly.

The professor sprang to his feet and stared at her. "Why, Carol," he exclaimed soberly, almost sadly, as he crossed the room and took her hand. "Why, Carol! Whatever have you been doing to yourself overnight?"

Of course, it was far more "overnight" than the professor knew, but Carol saw to it that there was nothing to arouse his suspicion on that score. He lifted her hand high, and looked frankly down the long lines of her skirt, with the white toes of her slippers showing beneath. He shook his head. And though he smiled again, his voice was sober.

"I'm beginning to feel my age," he said.

This was not what Carol wanted, and she resumed her old childish manner with a gleeful laugh.

"What on earth are you doing in Mount Mark again, P'fessor!" When Carol wished to be particularly coy, she said "p'fessor." It didn't sound exactly cultured, but spoken in Carol's voice was really irresistible.

"Why, I came to see you before your hair turned gray, and wrinkles marred you—"

"Wrinkles won't mar mine," cried Carol emphatically. "Not ever! I use up a whole jar of cold cream every three weeks! I won't have 'em. Wrinkles! P'fessor, you don't know what a time I have keeping myself young."

She joined in the peal of laughter, that rang out as this age-wise statement fell from her lips.

"You'll be surprised," he said, "what does bring me to Mount Mark. I have given up my position in New York, and am going to school again in Chicago this winter. I shall be here only tonight. Tomorrow I begin to study again. I am changing my line of work. The fact is, I'm going to enter the ministry myself, and will have a couple of years in a theological seminary first."

Utter stupefaction greeted this explanation. Not one word was spoken.

"I've been going into these things rather deeply the last two years. For a year I've felt it would finally come to this, but I preferred my own job, and I thought I would stick it out, as Carol says. But I've decided to quit balking, and answer the call."

Aunt Grace nodded, with a warmly approving smile.

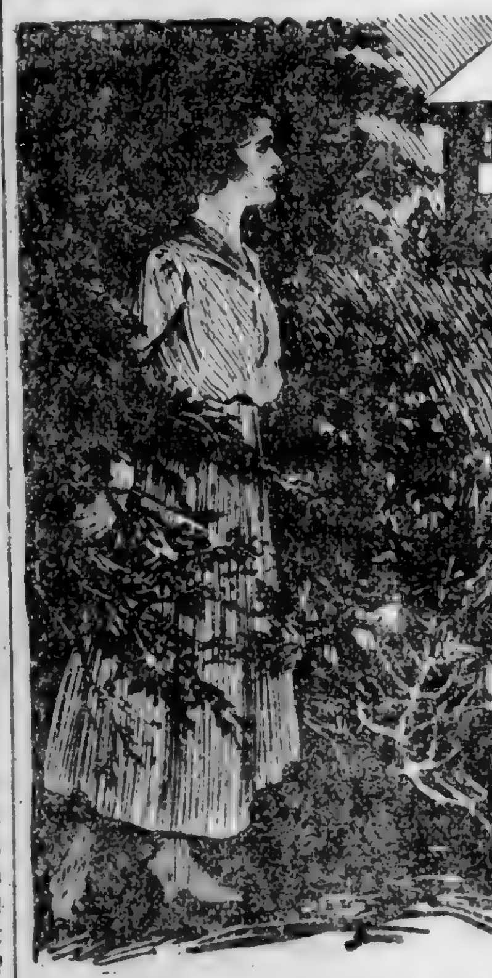
"But, professor," said Carol faintly and falteringly, "didn't you tell me you were to get five thousand dollars a year with the institute from this on?"

"Yes. I was."

Carol gazed at her family despairingly. "It would take an awfully loud call to drown the chink of five thousand gold dollars in my ears, I am afraid."

"It was a loud call," he said. And he looked at her curiously, for of all the family she alone seemed distrait and unenthusiastic.

"But, professor," she argued, "can't people do good without preaching? Think of all the lovely things you could do with five thousand dollars! Think of the influence a prominent educator has! Think of—"



Carol Was Standing Among the Rose-Bushes, Tall and Slim.

"I have thought of it, all of it. But haven't I got to answer the call?"

"Tell us all about it," said Fairy cordially. "We are so interested in it. Of course, we think it is the finest work in the world." She looked reproachfully at Carol, but Carol made no response.

He told them, then, something of his plan, which was very simple. He had arranged for a special course at the seminary in Chicago, and then would enter the ministry like any other young man starting upon his lifework. "I'm a Presbyterian, you know," he said. "I'll have to go around and preach until I find a church willing to put up with me. I won't have a presiding elder to make a niche for me."

He talked frankly, even with enthusiasm, but always he felt the curious disappointment that Carol sat there silent, her eyes upon the hands in her lap. Once or twice she lifted them swiftly to his face, and lowered them instantly again. Only he noticed when they were raised, that they were unusually deep, and that something lay within shining brightly, like the reflection of a star in a clear dark pool of water.

"I must go now," he said, "I must have a little visit with my uncle, I just wanted to see you, and tell you about it. I knew you would like it."

Carol's hand was the first placed in his, and she murmured an inaudible word of farewell, her eyes downcast, and turned quickly away. "Don't let them wait for me," she whispered to Lark, and then she disappeared.

The professor turned away from the hospitable door very much depressed. He shook his head impatiently and thrust his hands deep into his pockets like a troubled boy. Half-way down the board walk he stopped, and smiled. Carol was standing among the rose bushes, tall and slim in the cloudy moonlight, waiting for him. She held out her hand with a friendly smile.

"I came to take you a piece, if you want me," she said. "It's so hard to talk when there's a roomful, isn't it? I thought maybe you wouldn't mind."

"Mind? It was dear of you to think of it," he said gratefully, drawing her hand into the curve of his arm. "I was wishing I could talk with you alone. You won't be cold?"

In this case the course of true love seems destined to run smoothly. Professor Duke convinces Carol that he is doing the right thing in studying for the ministry.

STATE NEWS

Boonville.—This city will have city mail delivery after April 1, 1918. An examination for letter carriers will be held here January 26.

Lafayette.—The Tippecanoe County Fair association elected officers and set the date of the 1918 fair for September 16 to 21. W. S. Crum was elected president; Bennett Taylor, first vice president; Henry Miller, second vice president; Oscar Yundt, treasurer; Henry C. Nelson, superintendent, and Col. Charles W. Travis, secretary.

Westfield.—Thirty-three children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, were present at the fiftieth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Kirkman here.

Alexandria.—Charles Swindell, owner of a sawmill here, was injured seriously when he was seized with a sudden attack of acute indigestion and fell on the sidewalk, striking his head on a stone. He was removed to his home in an unconscious condition.

Frankfort.—Louis Kerensky, a Russian, who makes no claim to relationship to the deposed Russian leader of the same name, is in a local hospital as the result of an accident suffered while unloading steel rails on the Indianapolis & Frankfort line. One of the heavy rails slipped from the car and caught Kerensky, pinning him to the ground.

Marion.—Harry Hollister, aged forty-two, of Detroit, Mich., was killed by a Pennsylvania train in West Marion. Trainmen apparently did not know Hollister had been run down, for the body was discovered by section men. Hollister was a son-in-law of J. C. Hisey of Marion and had been visiting in this city. His father and a daughter in Detroit survive.

Crawfordsville.—Crawfordsville's only street car and a motor fire truck were in collision and as a result the city has been without city car service since, and has been compelled again to use a horse-drawn wagon at one of the fire stations.

Petersburg.—Dr. L. R. Miller of Winslow was burned severely when a coal-oil stove in his office exploded. Doctor Miller grabbed the stove and threw it out the door, but was badly burned about the hands and arms.

Petersburg.—John Dedman, aged seven, the son of Sherman Dedman of Winslow, was injured when a sled on which he was coasting down a hill struck a tree. His face and head were cut and it is feared he suffered concussion of the brain.

Greencastle.—When Greencastle commandery, No. 11, Knights Templars, held its annual election, James McD. Hays was chosen unanimously for the fifty-second time to fill the office of recorder of the lodge.

Huntington.—M. J. Finn and A. Crites have paid the city water works department $50 and $15 respectively for alleged irregularities in connection with their water meters. It was alleged a piece of iron was found in the cogs of the meter at the Finn home last spring by an inspector, and recently it was found that Crites had taken his meter entirely off, it was alleged.

Bedford.—Marshal Woolery, prosecutor, filed an affidavit against Dave Landreth, charging first degree murder in connection with the killing of Walter Starrett, a Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern railway detective, in the railroad yards at Mitchell. Landreth is at the home of a brother-in-law, suffering from a wound in his right hip. A grand jury will investigate the killing.

Evansville.—"Send me to the front lines in France instead," pleaded Harry Murray, when he was sentenced to a term of from two to fourteen years for forgery by Duncan C. Givens, judge of the Vanderburg circuit court. Judge Givens did not take kindly to the suggestion, however. He sentenced Murray's wife to serve the same length of time in the Indiana woman's prison at Indianapolis.

Greensburg.—Ambrose Leppert, single, who has been employed for several months in the Millhousen neighborhood, is missing, and his friends fear foul play. He disappeared more than a week ago. Leppert is a German, but he has been very pronounced in his loyalty to the United States.

Muncie.—At the conclusion of an investigation by the coroner and prosecuting attorney into the killing of William J. Hartley, Horace G. Murphy, prosecuting attorney, ordered the discharge from custody of Harry Rittenhouse, who was with Jim Black, who is accused of the killing, and Lloyd Reynard, at the time Reynard is alleged to have assaulted Hartley with a face and Black is alleged to have shot him.

Nashville.—Virgil Spicer, a merchant here, was stricken with paralysis while waiting on a customer and is in a critical condition.

Danville.—The suit of the Bedford Stone and Construction company against the Washington Hotel Realty company and J. Edward Krause, brought here on a change of venue from Marion county, will be called for trial on January 9.

Greensburg.—Leander Meredith of Sardinia has received one of the $5 prizes in the Christian Endeavor war garden contest for the best production on 400 square feet of ground. He raised $21 worth of potatoes and celery. There were contestants in 14 states. The products were marketed in New York city.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces. Colors and Airplanes.

A curious phenomenon noted by aviators is that the color of a landing field may have an effect on an airplane that is about to alight on it. For example, an area which is dark from being plowed or burned over will make the air above it several degrees warmer than that over land of lighter color, such as a stubble field, thus causing a disturbed condition of the atmosphere, which may make landing difficult if not dangerous.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

Someone else Began It - We Must Finish It.

I have motored all over Germany and parts of Austria, with many other Americans; I have enjoyed the literature, music, art and architecture, the geniality and sociability of the German people.

Germany presents so many charms, one is led to wonder why millions of Germans voluntarily left the Fatherland.

I sat in a box back of the Kaiser, the Crown Prince and their glittering staff, and watched the Kaiser review fifty thousand troops of Germany's great fighting machine. That year I was motoring in Germany, and everywhere I went through the empire, I was subservient to the regulations of this great fighting machine. Everything, everybody, eveaywhere, was subservient to this fighting machine.

And the world is at war because of the existence of this fighting machine and because it was organized to conquer the world.

We are at war because, being unprepared, we were looked upon with disdain. If this were not so, the Kaiser would not have sunk the Lusitania. If this were not so, ruthless submarine warfare would not have been begun. We are at war because the Kaiser, believing that he could conquer the entente allies—that they were nearly exhausted—that we were incapable of defending ourselves—trampled upon our rights the same as those of other neutral nations.

He so outraged our dignity and the generally accepted laws of humanity that we were compelled to fight, and we are justifiably at war and we will be justifiably subject to a conqueror's terms if the Kaiser wins this war.

The object of the this war is to eradicate the future menace of the Kaiser and what Kaiserism stands for. With that obliterated, there will be peace and brotherly love between the German people and ourselves.

What we enjoy in this country was paid for by blood, lives and treasure in the War of the Revolution and the Civil War. We are now in this fight to conserve what has been so dearly bought. If we fail to win, the Declaration of Independence will be a scray of paper, the Fourth of July will be forgotten, and this nation in common with others will be dominated by Kaiserism and all that that means.

The advent of this nation into this war was a fortuitous circumstance, and it means the success of the war for us and our allies. It will be costly in sacrifices and young manhood, but whatever that price may be, it will be well spent.

There is no question but that the powers now allied against the Kaiser can be successful. Others of the entente allies have done their share. We must do ours. That means not alone the nation as a whole, but each individual. Each American must ask himself each day, "Am I doing my share."

There are some people in this country who are unintentionally favoring the chances of our boys being killed in this war. They are the Slackers, Pacifists and Peace-at-Any-Price people. When they look at a cartoon of the Kaiser, let them imagine themselves ranged alongside of him in that cartoon.

If their timid counsels prevail, the American people will pay the war expenses of two armies—our own army and the army that conquers us.

One of the m[illegible] successful public sales held for a long time was that of Evens Collins, near Norris Chapel, last Friday. One of the largest crowds was present and articles for sale went at more than a top notch price, with Rhodenbaugh and McNamara as auctioneers, and A. D. Brunson, as clerk. The sale amounted to $2,000.

The DeKalb News made its initial bow to the public on last Thursday in the form of a 5 column quarto, at $1.00 per year. The News will be issued weekly at present and is edited by John C. Lochner with the mechanical end of the paper being handled at the Auburn Post Card Company plant. The paper is a stock company with men from all over the county interested. The News is a welcomed visitor to our exchange table.

This locality was visited by a heavy sleet storm, Sunday, which later turned into snow, making it unpleasant for the person who was compelled to be out of doors. While the storm was bad here, this section was favored, as in Chicago the storm was the most severe for years, while south and northwest of here the blizzard was of greater intensity, and the property loss will amount to thousands of dollars. Many of the telephone and electric wires were put out of commission. The storm still continues as we go to press on Wednesday and prospects are now for the best sleighing in years. The snow comes as a blessing to the wheat.

The high price of sugar and the necessary conservation of the supply are sufficient reasons for us to make as much maple sugar and sirup this year as possible. In 1900 Indiana produced 179,576 gallons of maple sirup, while Ohio produced five times as much. In 1910 Indiana produced 273,728 gallons and 33,419 pounds of sugar, the equivalent of 850,000 pounds of sugar. There are reasons to believe that Indiana could easily double her output, which means a produstion of a million and a half pounds of sugar, if the owners of small numbers of trees would tap them.

Excellent Home--Made Cough Medicine

If You Don't Find Glando Pine the Best Cough Medicine You Ever Had in the Home, Your Money will be Cheerfully Refunded.

If you could buy four sacks of good flour for the price of one would you hesitate? We are making you the same offer on our cough remedy: four times as much for 50 cts. as if you bought the ready made kind, and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Could you ask more?

You might combine all the other pines that are used for coughs and colds then you could not hope to have a cough remedy equal to our Glando Pine.

Glando Pine is recommended for coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchial affections, croup, throat irritations or any condition where a good cough remedy is needed. It relieves the spasmodic coughing in whooping cough.

The first dose of Glando Pine relieves. It opens up the air cells and makes you breathe deep and easy. Children like to take it.

Mr. Shearer, owner of the machine shop of Haveland, Ohio, gives the following testimony: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case was hopeless. He got no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Ask your druggists for three ounces of Glando Pine (50 cts. worth). This will make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Directions with each bottle.

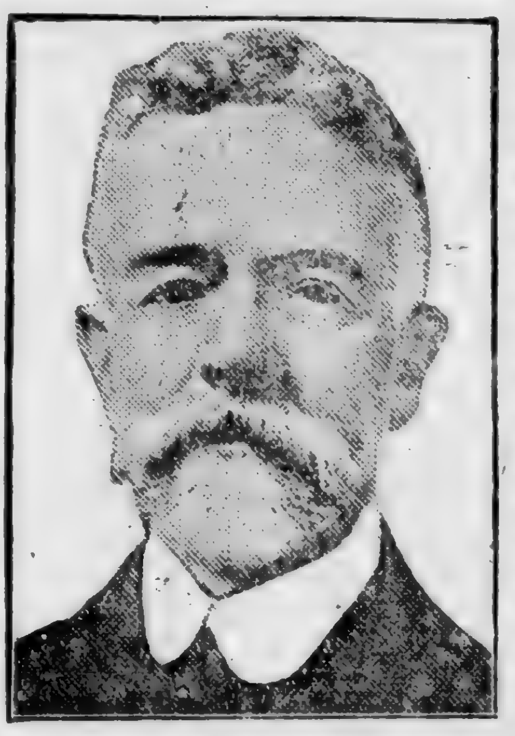
WHO IS WHO NOW

PROMINENT IN MANY STATES

Senator James Hamilton Lewis is a "Rainbow division" all by himself. No, this isn't intended to be personal, although, of course, Senator Lewis is rather famous for his whiskers and his haberdashery. Senator Lewis is a "Rainbow" in that his career has been spread over a large part of the United States. He has been a distinguished son in more different states than any other public man today.

"J. Ham" Lewis is forty-eight years old. He was born in Virginia, raised and schooled in Georgia, went to the University of Washington, hopping way across the continent, became a member of the legislature there; later became congressman-at-large for the state of Washington; moved to Chicago, and, after holding several public offices, became United States senator from Illinois. If that isn't a real "Rainbow" career, we are very much mistaken. J. Hamilton Lewis hadn't been practicing law in Washington very long before he was elected to the upper house of the legislature. After becoming congressman-at-large he was boomed by the Northwestern Pacific coast states for vice president at the Democratic convention of 1900. Senator Lewis also has had a military career. He was an officer in the Spanish-American war, being a member first of the staff of General Brooke in Cuba and then of Gen. Frederick D. Grant in Porto Rico. He also was accredited a member of the commission which settled the Alaskan boundary disputes between the United States and England.

AVOWED ENEMY TO KAISER



It has been said that the kaiser has some friends—whether they intend to be or not—in congress, but one thing is certain, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts is not one of them. Senator Lodge has been one of the bitterest enemies the kaiser has had to reckon with. He has been strongly anti-German since the beginning of the world war in 1914.

The power of a United States senator is great enough in itself, but Senator Lodge's power in the senate is added to by reason of his assignment to three of the most important committees, those on foreign relations, finance and naval affairs.

Henry Cabot Lodge was born in Boston May 12, 1850. He graduated from Harvard college in 1871 and from Harvard Law school in 1875, with the degree of LL. B. In 1876 he was given the degree of Ph.D. by Harvard university. He served two terms in the lower house of the Massachusetts legislature, for being literary by disposition, he was popular in the Bean City. After several terms in congress, Massachusetts elected him to the senate. That was in 1893, and he has been there ever since. If it will encourage the kaiser any, it is permitted to announce that Senator Lodge's term of office will end on March 3, 1923, which, doubtless, insures his being on the job until the end of the war.

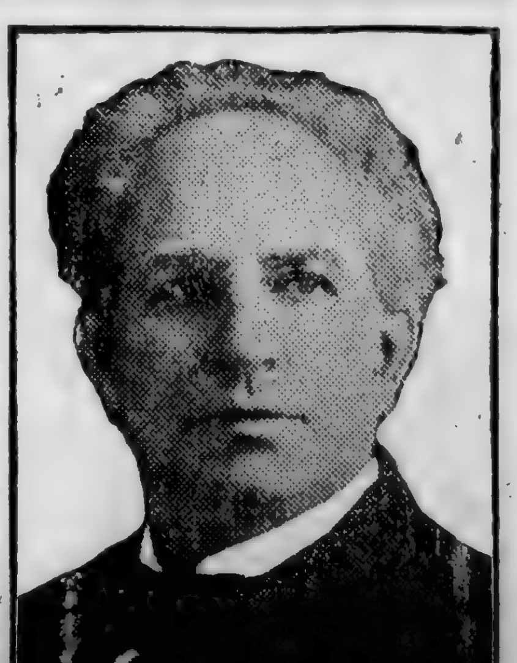
AMBASSADOR IN HARD POSITION

International Film Service

The neutrality of Carranza in Mexico is generally viewed as tantamount to a pro-German attitude, and the position which Senor Ygnacio Bonillas, the Mexican ambassador, occupies in Washington is therefore increasingly difficult. There is talk of President Wilson losing faith in Carranza and Carranza losing his power with the Mexican people and of Felix Diaz having embraced a pro-American, proentente policy as a preliminary to starting another revolution.

The Mexican ambassador knows that the future is certain to be shaped by the policy which Carranza pursues toward the German legation in Mexico City. Reports in Washington are that the German minister now virtually controls Mexico's foreign policy. Will the ambassador tell Carranza frankly what his confreres in Washington are saying and thereby make his own personality a dominant figure in the situation? Or will he follow the old school of carrying out instructions and nothing more? So far it is impossible to say.

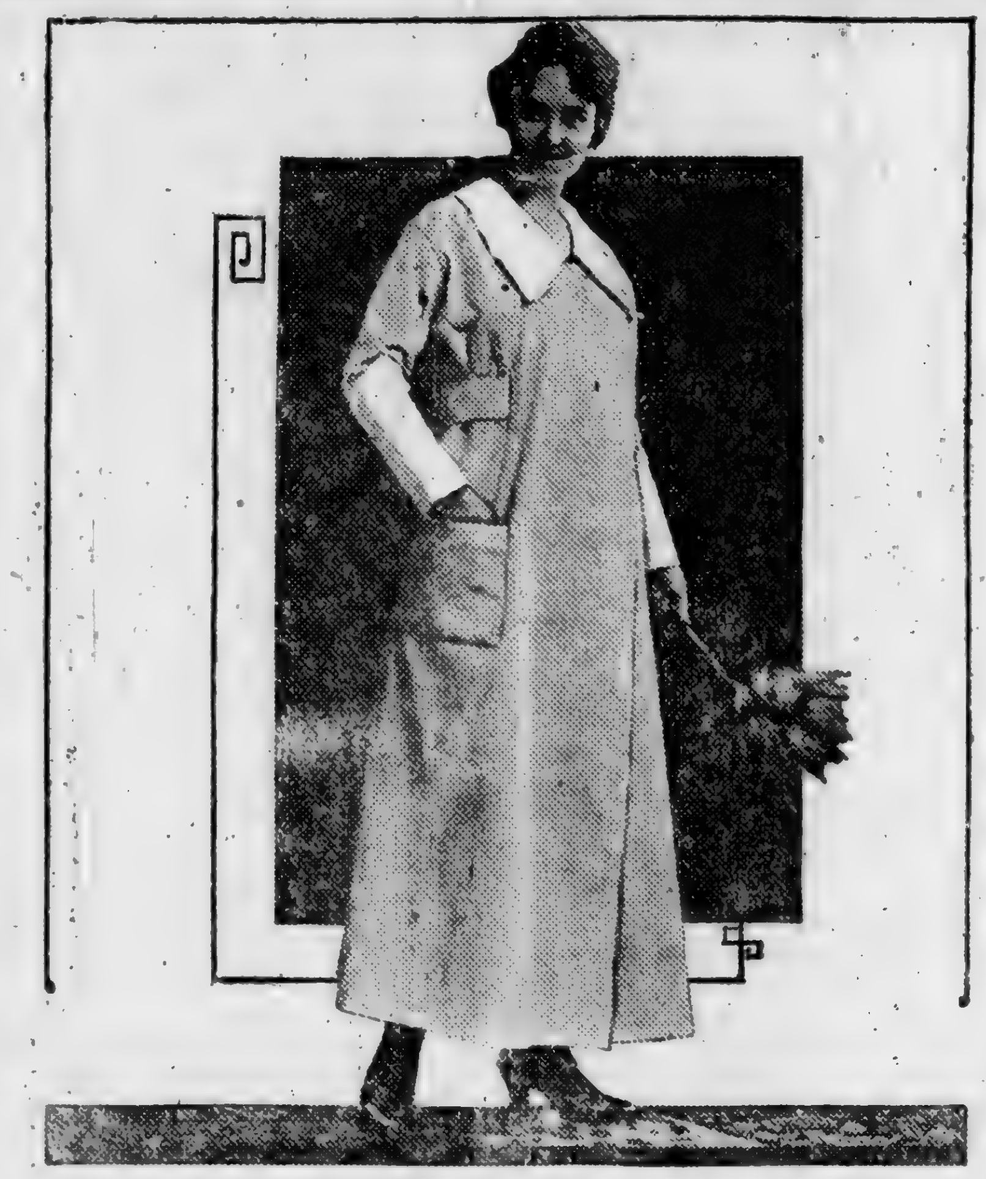
WANTS GREAT AMERICAN ARMY



One of the strongest advocates of military preparedness of the present Sixty-fifth congress, and of many congresses preceding that, is a fighting Californian—yes, a Californian, although born at Kuppenheim, grand duchy of Baden, Germany. This Californian is Representative Julius Kahn, ranking Republican member of the military affairs committee of the house, and represeniative of the Fourth Congressional district of California, which means the city of San Francisco.

Through eight different congresses, not including the present one, Representative Kahn fought for preparedness. And now that the United States is at war with the country where he was born and where his parents were born, Representative Kahn is still found fighting for a greater army and for greater effort to win the war. Congressman Kahn has drawn plans for an army of Americans not less than 4,000,000 strong. He realizes that we are up against a serious business and he proposes that Uncle Sam shall make such gigantic preparations now as will insure this serious business being brought to as speedy and as victorious a conclusion as possible.

Service Aprons Come Into Their Own



As a badge of service, in these times when only service of some kind counts, the apron has come into its own. All women don the aprons that signify real work is to be done by their wearers, with a degree of satisfaction and pride which the handsomest evening gown cannot hope to rival. Aprons are classified by the materials used in them and by design and color into the various sorts of service aprons besides those that are made for wear at home in the occupations that demand service there.

Chambray, gingham and percale furnish the goods for service aprons with other durable weaves in the list of availables. Pique, cretonne and printed cottons lend their touches of white or bright colors in collars, cuffs and pockets and wide, old-fashioned rickrack braid has been resurrected to take the place of honor as a finish on aprons for wear at home.

Starting out with these, there are "bungalow" aprons, so cheery looking that one is tempted to acquire one and buy a bungalow to match it, One of these is shown in the picture. It is of striped percale with deep cuffs and collar of white pique. It does not open straight down the front but folds over from right to left, with the right side trimmed into a point. It fastens with a button at the left side, is provided with a capacious pocket and held in place by a flat belt of the percale, which fastens in front with buttons and buttonholes. The belt slips through slashes in the apron and modestly hides its good work in supporting the garment. This trick of the belts is featured in other styles.

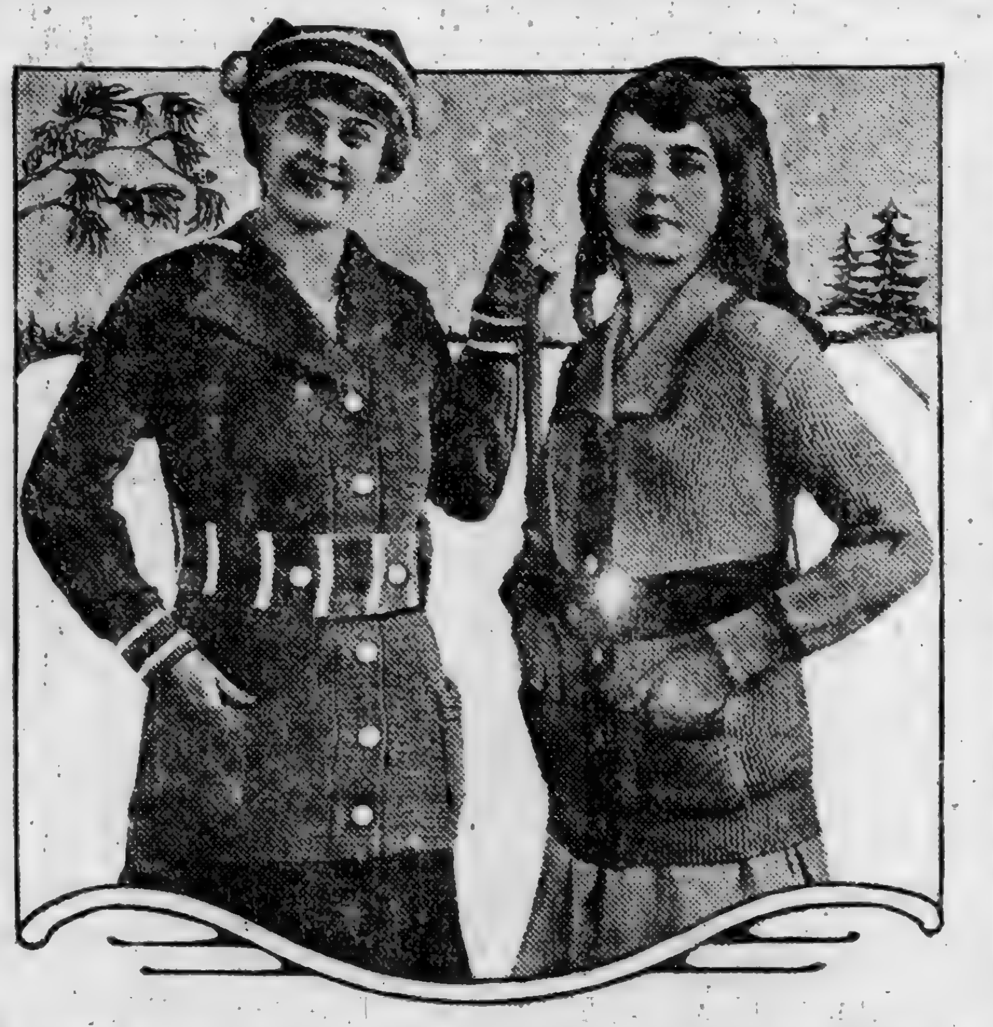
The prettiest of bungalow aprons is of blue chambray with collar and cuffs of gay cretonne edged with white rickrack braid. Across the front a big pocket of cretonne looks like a knitting bag attached to the apron. It suggests that the wearer will always have her knitting or her sewing at hand.

Aprons for "clerical service" in war work are made of dark gray chambray and are really plain one-piece dresses, that fasten with small pearl or bone buttons. Their sleeves are finished with a band at the wrist.

For "conservation service," that is for one's own housework, aprons of blue chambray are shown with large chambray pockets and deep cuffs and collar of white pique. The apron is cut straight at the front and buttons over from right to left. The belt slips through slashes as in the apron illustrated.

There is a "refreshment service" dress of blue and white striped chambray with white collars and cuffs. It is worn with a white serving apron wherever its owner is called upon to serve food to soldiers or in the interest of war work.

Sweaters That Delight the Youthful



A sweater of some sort, in the wardrobe, has come to be taken as a matter of course, like shoes and stockings. Everybody, from baby to grandmother, is entitled to at least one of these first aids to comfort—and style. For they have advanced so far in the scheme of things to wear that their manufacturers can always be sure of a demand for them, and their task now is to present them in snappy styles. Sweaters are the delight of the youthful, and these wearers are the most critical and exacting of all their devotees.

The hand-knit sweater-coat, in yellow, blue, rose, green, taupe and other colors, with collar and cuffs of white or gray, has a vogue that makes it bring a higher price than equally handsome machine-knit models.

Colors popular for sweaters and sweater-coats are not in pale tints, but in light, beautiful shades. Blue, somewhat deeper in tone than the color that made itself so familiar as "Alice," and a light, soft yellow identified as "golden-rod," illustrate the strength of these colors as chosen for sweaters. All-white sweater coats and those in national blue enjoy a persistent popularity that passes along from season to season, with that of darker colors like navy, khaki, and dark cardinal red.

For the young girl arrived at the flapper age an attractive sweater appears at the right of the group of two shown in the picture. This is a ribbed machine-knit sweater-coat in gray, bordered with dark red, which may be had in several color combinations. It fastens with buttons at the front, and they appear to have a knitted covering. The border at the bottom of this sweater holds it in rather snugly about the figure.

A blue and white combination in a sweater-coat for the youthful, but grown-up girl, is made in Yale blue with white stripes. The collar is convertible and the sweater fastens with white bone buttons. The picture portrays every detail of these smart, practical sweaters with perfect faithfulness. For mid-winter sports a cap to match is the joy of the youthful sportswoman. The cap in the picture of Yale blue, is knitted with points at each side that are folded down and fastened under two white pompons of wool.

THE PATH OF PATRIOTISM

It is the Path of Prohibition—(Excerpts From Address of Miss Anna Gordon, President National W. C. T. U., Before the Forty-fourth Annual Convention of That Organization Held in Washington, D. C., December 2-7, 1917).

We praise God for the prohibition victories rising Phoenixlike from war's awful gloom and overwhelming anxiety. Listen to the patriotic prohibition roll of 1917:

Prohibition for the District of Columbia; prohibition for Indiana; prohibition for Utah; prohibition for New Hampshire; prohibition for New Mexico; prohibition for Alaska; prohibition for Porto Rico.

* * *

A decade ago four white prohibition states gleamed on our map of the United States; today there are 27, and the District of Columbia, Alaska and Porto Rico. At the 1918 general election we expect Minnesota, Missouri, Florida, Wyoming, Kentucky, California, Texas and Nevada to bring us within one of the 36 whose legislatures should be safely counted upon to ratify the prohibition amendment to the national Constitution.

* * *

The stock arguments of the liquor trade have no value today. Great cities have adopted prohibition with no disturbance to banks, groceries, real estate or hotels, except on the right side of the ledger. Unprecedented prosperity has silenced the liquor men's prophecy of "miles of empty stores and decreased bank deposits." Increased population and additional throngs of summer tourists have forever quieted the liquor men's groan that "summer travelers and prospective home seekers avoid prohibition centers." Even the circus performers prefer dry to liquor localities—on the plain proposition of larger profits. The nation today needs the able-bodied men who make and sell liquor. Useful and constructive jobs are awaiting those who by the coming of prohibition would be "thrown out of employment." Hundreds of avenues of urgent work beckon the seller of distilled liquors and the men engaged in the brewing and vinous trades.

To the liquor dealers the defeat of suffrage always means a victory for their interests. The trade expends thousands of dollars each year in promoting publicity against votes for women. "Woman suffrage in New York state," predicted one widely distributed circular of the liquor trade, "would kill the malted industry of the United States." Woman suffrage in the Empire state has arrived! The malted industry must go!

The pathway of prohibition for many years has run parallel with the pathway of woman suffrage. Today brave women who have blazed the way for suffrage or prohibition are jubilant as together they press forward on the broad highway of Christian citizenship and exalted patriotism.

Total abstinence and prohibition can both be recommended to the American people as articles not "made in Germany." It is true that in the years agone the kaiser, desiring to maintain autocracy and conquer the world, advised his naval cadets to abstain from alcohol. But the chapter of horrors familiar to readers of war news proves that German officers and men demoralized by drink have committed unspeakable crimes against womanhood and childhood—the blackest page in the world's history of inhumanity. The kaiser ought to have long and serious thoughts concerning his prophecy that "the nation which takes the smallest quantity of alcohol will win the battles of the future." Autocracy and alcohol will both be overthrown. Democracy and sobriety will win.

The liquor men are establishing a new battle line of defense in the "beer and wine to be substituted for brandy and whisky." Let us keep the issue clear. "Camouflage" is well understood by the W. C. T. U. For years the liquor men obscured the issue and deceived the very elect. Today, however, the American people have no illusions about alcohol. The light of scientific truth is shining. Alcohol is a poison, beer is an alcoholic drink. Its manufacture destroys valuable grain. Patriotism—the safeguarding of this and other nations—demands prohibition of the manufacture and sale of beer.

* * *

The man who indulges in whisky has a "rye" face, and all his actions turn awry.

* * *

During the war prohibition agitation in congress working men of the country were grossly misrepresented by the antiprohibition petition signed by 2,000,000 men presented to President Wilson. In many prohibition states federations of labor declare they never wish to return to the saloon system. An analysis of the signatures to the petition would doubtless show the names of brewers, distillers, saloon men and their down-and-out victims largely in evidence. Such men do not properly represent the labor interests of the United States.

HEALTH WAS WRECKED

Nothing Brought Relief Until Doan's Were Used. Wonderful Improvement Was Effected.

"I had such awful cutting pains in the small of my back and hips. I often had to cry out," says Mrs. Ernest Wiethoelter, 550 Madison St., St. Charles, Mo. "The pain was knife-like and I couldn't turn in bed, in fact I was almost helpless. My feet and ankles swelled, badly, my hands were puffed up and there were swellings under my eyes.

"I often got so dizzy I had to sit down to keep from falling and my health was completely broken down. The kidney secretions pained terribly in passage and in spite of all the medicine I took, I kept getting worse until I was a wreck.

"By chance I read about Doan's Kidney Pills and bought some. After I had used half a box there was a change and I continued to improve; the pains, aches and swellings left and my health returned."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 13

JESUS BEGINS HIS WORK.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:12-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—Repent ye, and believe in the Gospel.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 4:1-11; 8:18-22; Luke 4:1-13; 9:57-62; Heb. 4:14-16; Acts 9:1-9; John 4:34-38.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus chooses four helpers.

MEMORY VERSE—Come ye after me.—Mark 1:17.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC — Overcome temptation.

MEMORY VERSE—I Cor. 16:13.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—How Jesus faced his task.

I. Introduction (vv. 12, 13). Mark devotes little or no attention to the early incidents of the life of Jesus, and only suggests the events immediately following his baptism. Indeed, for the record of the Temptation and the Sermon on the Mount, we have to look to the other Gospel writers. In teaching the lesson we must not, however, overlook making some reference to these two outstanding events in the life of our Lord.

II. John the Baptizer (vv. 14, 15). This section not only disposes of John as having been put into prison, but immediately plunges Jesus into his public ministry. Jesus' entry into Galilee was a part of his connection with John, inasmuch as he withdrew himself to that place (See John 4:1-3), and made Capernaum his headquarters (Matt. 4:13). The message here recorded as proclaimed by Jesus was the identical summons which John the Baptizer had uttered. Jesus speaks of this new kingdom as being already come, referring, of course, to his own person and ministry, but in its actual establishment it was not really "at hand" until he shed his blood upon the cross and the Holy Spirit descended on the day of Pentecost, when there was opened the fountain for sin and uncleanliness for the world at large.

III. His Helpers Called. (vv. 16-29). In this record, we have the call of four of his helpers: Simon, Andrew his brother, James and John his brother, the latter being the sons of Zebedee. Luke tells us (5:3) that Jesus was teaching. Those called were certainly at work and God always issues his call to those whose time and effort are being occupied, even though perhaps for selfish purposes. There is no place for an idler in the spiritual kingdom. This call was to "come ye after me" (v. 17), the purpose being that they might become "fishers of men." Notice he began upon the common, familiar ground of fishing, something mutually and thoroughly understood, and led them from that to a spiritual truth. In this we see a good pedagogical hint and a wise suggestion to the preacher and teacher, viz., that we must begin to teach our lessons through the medium of past experience and of present interests. Simon (Luke 5:5) appears to have been a doubter when Jesus called him. Nevertheless, he was willing to try Christ at least once; and so at his word, he let down the net. The evidence of obedience is found in verse 19, and Matthew (4:8) also Luke (5:11) tells us that when they left their nets, "they left all."

IV. His Helpers Trained (vv. 21, 22). The result of this call was (see v. 21) that as they went into the city they entered into the synagogue, where Jesus taught them. The inference, of course, is plain. Whenever God calls a man into his kingdom, he begins at once to teach him the duties and responsibilities of the kingdom. Notice that in becoming fishers of men, then began close at home. Brother sought brother. This was not the first time that Jesus had called these brothers. (See John 1:40, 41). In the call, as accorded by St. John, we are led to believe that John (the unmentioned disciple) first sought an interview with Christ. The question of harmonizing the various calls which Jesus gave to his disciples is an interesting one and one which has given rise to a good deal of discussion. The one recorded in the first chapter of John occurred in Judea; this one occurred in Galilee. As to whether this is the one recorded in the fifth chapter of Luke, there seems to be a general opinion that it is not the same, though we can with profit compare the two callings in teaching this lesson. The probabilities are that there were three calls: First, the one recorded in John 1:35:42; second, that one recorded in Matthew 4:18:22; and the third and last was that which occurred just before their appointment to become apostles, the one recorded in Luke five.

Conclusion. When Jesus faced his great task, he did not face it alone. He had first of all the approval of God the Father. He also had the annointing of God the Holy Spirit, and he called in the co-operation and help of human agents. Jesus met his temptation and his tasks not in his own strength, but in the strength of the Spirit of God. At the same time being God, he called to his side those who in turn were to become fishers of men, leaders of others. His call to these disciples was three-fold; (a) to discipleship, (b), to fellowship (Phil. 3:10); and (c), to service.

Splendid Work by Woman.

Valuable work was done by Dr. Elsie Inglis, who died recently. She was the organizer and head of the Scottish Women's Hospital units, staffed entirely with women, and offered early in the war to the British government for service with the forces. Refused at home, they were accepted by the French war office, and in the first year they did valuable work in France. When typhus broke out in Serbia Doctor Inglis took a unit to that country, went through the hardships of the retreat and was taken prisoner by the Austrians. Released in 1916, she set out for Roumania, where again she shared in a retreat. From the Dobrudja she eventually took her unit to southern Russia, but the rigors of this campaign had told on her and she fell a victim to overwork and disease. She brought her unit safely away with her, but died when port was reached. Doctor Inglis was born in India and educated in Edinburgh and Paris.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE

It has been fight or die for many of us in the past and the lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called "An-u-ric." You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as stone in the bladder.

To overcome these distressing conditions take plenty of exercise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal take Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets (double strength). You will, in a short time, find that you are one of the firm indorsers of Anuric, as are thousands of neighbors.

Step into the drug store and ask for a 60c bottle of Anuric, or send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for trial pkg. Anuric, many times more potent than lithia, eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

Knitting Not Permitted.

Knitting, while permissible in the gallery of the house of representatives in Washington, is forbidden in the senate. A lady wearying of the discussion in the house the other day, went over to the senate. While listening to the debate, she took out her knitting. Nothing had been said about it in the house, but when she began to knit in the senate she was immediately stopped. Senatorial dignity must be preserved.

ECZEMA CAUSED YEARS OF INTENSE AGONY

"I have suffered intense agony from Eczema on my leg and other parts of my body for years, and received only temporary relief from other preparations. It is only a month since I started to use PETERSON'S OINTMENT, and there is no sign of Eczema or itching. You can refer to me."—Geo. C. Talbot, 27 Penfield St., Buffalo, N. Y.

I've got a hundred testimonials, says Peterson, just as sincere and honest as this one. Years ago, when I first started to put out PETERSON'S OINTMENT, I made up my mind to give a big box for a small price, and I'm still doing it, as every druggist in the country knows.

I guarantee PETERSON'S OINTMENT because I know that its mighty healing power is marvelous. I say to every one who buys a box that it is rigidly guaranteed for Eczema, Pimples, Salt Rheum, Old Sores, Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles, Ulcers, Skin Diseases, Chafing, Burns, Scalds and Sunburn, and if not satisfactory any druggist will return your money. 30 cents.
